Miss Lane had drawn herself up in the corner of the sofa, and sat with her hands clasped around her knees, all swathed around and draped by the knitted shawl, her golden head like a radiant flower appearing from a bank of snow. Her fragility, her sweetness, her smallness appealed strongly to the big young fellow, whose heart was warm toward the world, whose ideals were high and who had the chivalrous longing inherent in all good men to succor, to protect and above all to adore. No feeling in Dan Blair had been as strong as this to take her in his arms, to lift her up and carry her away from London and the people who applauded her, from the people that criticized her and from Poniatowsky.

He was engaged to the Duchess of Breakwater. And as far as his being able to do anything for Letty Lane he could only offer her this politeness from the woman he was going to marry.

"I never sing out of the theater." Her profile was to him and she looked steadily across the room. "It's a perfect fight to get the manager to consent."

Blair interrupted and said: "Oh, I'll see him, I'll make it all right."

"Please don't," she said briskly. "It's purely a business affair. How much will she pay?"

Dan was rather shocked. "Anything you like."

And her bad humor faded at his tone, and she smiled at him. "Well, I'll tell Roach that. I guess it'll make my singing a sure thing."

She changed her position and drew a long sigh as though she were very tired, leaned her blond head with its soft disorder back on the pillow, put both her folded hands under her cheek and turned her face toward Dan. The most delicate coral-like color began to mount her cheeks, and her gray eyes regained their light.

"Will two thousand dollars be too much to ask?" she said gently.

If she had said two million to the young fellow who had not yet begun to spend his fortune, which as far as he was concerned was nothing but a name, it would not have been too much to him; not too much to have given to this small white creature with her lovely flushed face, and her glorious hair.

"Whatever is your price, Miss Lane, goes."

"I'll sing three songs: one from Mandalay, an English ballad and something or other. I don't know what now, and I expect you don't realize how cheaply you are getting them." She laughed, and began to hum a familiar air.

And as Dan hesitated as if unwilling to give form to words that were so full of spell to him, she said deliciously: "Why, can you see a London drawing room listening to me sing Presbyterian hymn tunes?" Without lifting her head from the pillow she began in a charming undertone, her gray eyes fixed on his:

"From Greenland's icy mountains,
From India's coral strand,
Where Afric's sunny fountains
Roll down their golden sands."

Blair near her turned pale. There was in him the [illegible] feeling that she had stirred [illegible] in the little church, and at the same time others. He had lost his father since then and he thought of him now, but that big sad emotion was not the one that swayed him.

"Please stop," he pleaded, "don't go on. Say, there's something in that hymn that hurts."

Letty Lane, unconscious of how subtly she was playing, laughed and suddenly remembered that Dan had sat before her that day by the side of old Mr. Blair. She asked abruptly:

"Why does the Duchess of Breakwater want me to sing?"

"Because she's crazy about your voice."

"Is she awfully rich?"

"I—I don't know."

Letty Lane flashed a look at him. "Oh," she said coolly, "I guess she won't pay the price then."

Dan said: "Yes she will, yes she will all right."

"Now," Letty Lane went on, "if it were a charity affair I could sing for nothing and I don't doubt the duchess if she is as benevolent as you say she is could get me up some kind of a charity show."

Dan, who had started to rise, now leaned toward her and said: "Don't [illegible] at it a bit if [illegible] and sing we will make it right about the price and the charity; everything shall go your way."

She was seized upon by a violent fit of coughing, and Dan leaned toward her and put his arm around her as a brother might have done, holding her tenderly until the paroxysm was past.

"Gosh!" he exclaimed fervently, "it's heart-breaking to hear you cough like that and to think of your working as you do. Can't you stop and take a good rest? Can't you go somewhere?"

"To Greenland's icy mountains?" she responded, smiling. "I hate the cold."

"No, no; to some golden sands or other," he murmured under his breath. "And let me take you there."

But she pushed him back, laughing now. "No golden sands for me. I'm afraid I've got to sing in Mandalay tonight."

He looked at her in dismay.

She interrupted his protest: "I've promised on my word of honor, and the box-office has sold the seats with that understanding."

By her sofa, leaning over her, in a choked voice he murmured:

"You shan't sing! You shan't go out tonight!"

"Don't be a goose, boy," she said. "You've no right to order me like that. Stand back, please." As he did so she whisked herself off the sofa with a sudden ardor and much grace. "Now," she told him severely, "since you've begun to take that tone with me, I'm going to tell you that you mustn't come here day after day as you have been doing. I guess you know it, don't you?"

He stood his ground, but his bright face clouded. They had been so near each other and were now so removed.

"I don't care a damn what people say," he replied.

She interrupted him. She could be wonderfully dignified, small as she was, wrapped as she was in the woolen shawl. "Well," she drawled with a sudden indolence and indifference in her voice, "I expect you'll be surprised to hear that I do care. Sounds awfully funny, doesn't it? But as you have been coming to the theater now night after night till everybody's talking about it—"

"You don't want my friendship," he stammered.

Her tone struck him deeply, hurt him terribly. He threw his head up defiantly.

"All right, I'm turned down then," he said simply.

"Don't be silly, you know as well as I do that it won't do."

He did know it and that he had already done enough to make it reasonable for the duchess if she wanted to, to break their engagement. Slowly preparing to take his leave he said wistfully: "Can't I help you in any way? Let me do something with you for your poor. It's a comfort to have them between us and you can count on me."

She said she knew it. "But don't come any more in the wings, get a habit of not coming."

Clark a Faithful Friend

"One of the most striking phases of Champ Clark's many-sided character is his humanity," remarked Representative I. S. Pepper of Iowa at the Willard. "He never forgets a friend, political or otherwise, and I know it. Some of the speaker's friends told me a story not long ago that illustrates this side of his nature.

"It seems that when a young lawyer, Clark was ambitious to be elected prosecuting attorney of his county. There was an old fellow—his name was Burwell—who ran a small grocery in Clark's town. He was a little testy, perhaps, for he did not like to be disturbed when telling a story, not even to wait on customers. The store, in fact, was conducted for the purpose of giving him an opportunity to hold forth in pleasant discourses with his friends. He was in comfortable circumstances and didn't have to work. Politically he was a man of large influence in his community and was Clark's friend. He helped elect him prosecuting attorney. It was a number of years ago, of course.

"Not long ago, I was told, Clark heard that the old man was sick and a trifle short of funds. He learned of it through an old neighborhood friend. You know Champ Clark is not particularly frugal and never accumulated a large bank account; but he sat down and wrote a check that turned his balance into an overdraft, gave it to Wallace Bassford, and told him to 'send this check to old man Burwell.'"

ATHLETIC YOUNGSTERS HIT A BIG SNAG

Pitcher Al Demaree, Star of Mobile.

The world champion Athletics youngsters suffered their only shut-out of the spring trip when Mobile defeated them 4 to 0 in a quickly played and highly interesting contest, says a writer in the Philadelphia Inquirer.

Al Demaree, star of the Sea Gulls pitching staff, performed in highly sensational manner against the Yanigans. He is by far the best pitcher the Athletics batted against in the south, his speed being good and his curve ball par excellence. His control was wonderful. He hit Kilhullen in the fourth, this being his only battery misplay.

In only two innings, the second and sixth, did more than three men face Demaree in each round. The fourth man in these rounds represented the batsmen who were lucky enough to hit the ball safely. Emerson in the second pulling a clean single to left.

In the sixth Maggert sent a scratch hit to shortstop. In all the other rounds it was one, two, three and out. In the fourth Kilhullen was hit with two out and died stealing.

Not the least part of Demaree's brilliant performance was his strike-out record, thirteen men falling victims to his skill and curves. Derrick was the only man who did not whiff one or more times. Russell, Emerson, Mack and Thomas each fanned twice.

SHERWOOD MAGEE IN A RAGE

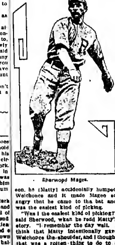
Sherwood Magee, the Phillies' star gardener, has thrown down the gauntlet to Christy Mathewson and begs "Matty" to pick it up. Magee was aroused to fever heat when he read one of Mathewson's serial stories. In it "Big Six" says he got Sherwood's "goat" during a game in New York last season.

Mathewson first paid Magee a compliment by saying he was one of the best natural hitters and hardest men to pitch to in the game today. Then "Big Six" went on to say that when Sherwood was riled he could not come near the ball with his bat. He told how, in a game in New York last season, he (Matty) accidentally bumped Welchonce and it made Magee so angry that he came to the bat and was the easiest kind of picking.



Sherwood Magee.

"Was I the easiest kind of picking?" said Sherwood, when he read Matty's story. "I remember the day well. I think that Matty intentionally gave Welchonce the shoulder, and I thought that was a rotten thing to do to a kid. I walked to the plate, threw my cap on it and said, 'Come on, you yellow dog, and get the ball over, and I'll show you something.' He put it where I wanted it and I hit into the centerfield bleachers for a home run. The members of my team who were there that day will bear me out in that story."

Sherwood admits Mathewson is one of the greatest pitchers the game has ever known, but says it will give him great delight to try to knock the ball out of the lot every time he faces "Big Six" this season, to show him up for what he said.

AROUND THE BASES

Danville, Ill., has traded Pitcher Kirwin to Terre Haute for Pitcher Beasley.

The South Atlantic league has decided that its umpires need not wear coats.

Steve White, the former Princeton pitcher, wants more salary than the Jersey City club is willing to pay.

Chief Bender of the Athletics is after a record. He wants to lead the American league pitchers for the third successive year.

Bob Ewing, a Dooin discard who is with the Cardinal squad, declares he will come back this season and fool the wisenheimers.

Harry Davis doesn't believe in bulldozing tactics. He is treating the Clevelands like human beings and has won the support of them all.

Carrigan and Nunamaker are booked to do all the catching for the Boston Red Sox. The former needs plenty of work to display his best form.

Griffith says he'll pay the waiver price and a few cents besides for Jackson, Miller, Rariden and Tyler of the Boston Braves, even if they are on a tail-end team.

Young Ainsmith has been assigned by Clark Griffith to the task of catching Walter Johnson in all the latter's games. Griff declares that he'll not miss Gabby Street.

LEAGUERS' DONT'S

1. Don't steal second with the bases full. This is exclusively John Anderson's stuff.
2. Don't fail to touch second.
3. Don't wait until you are just about to duck under the players' bench before removing your cap after making a home run. The public pays to see your blushes.
4. Don't have a small telephone number George Bell never could hit over his—.124.
5. Don't be afraid to hit 'em over the fence. The small boy outside will gladly return the ball—up to the seventh inning.
6. Don't hold the ball too long after catching a fly. Lefty Davis did this in Brooklyn and was let out. In Pittsburg he did not hold them long enough and was decorated.
7. Don't insist on half the purchase price. Rube Waddell did this in Pittsburg and received a box of stogies from Barney Dreyfuss.
8. Don't fail to run out infield hits. Even Hal Chase and Jake Daubert have been known to drop 'em.
9. Don't oppose the suffragette movement too strongly. You may be transferred to the Cardinals.
10. Don't use the harsh pedal too often on the umpire. Billy Klem or Silk O'Laughlin may be your manager next year.

ALWAYS IS CHEERFUL

Gabby Street Talks to Everybody But Spectators.

Reason for Queer Nickname Is Due to Continual Chatter While Working Behind Bat—Is Vivacious and "Skittery."

Street's first name isn't Gabby. It is Charles, harmonious Charles, like whipped cream on the top of a sponge cake. The reason for this queer nickname is easily understood. It is due to Street's cheerful chatter behind the bat. He talks to everybody. There is nothing selfish about him.

When he is not busy with the [illegible] he talks to the batter, and if the batter doesn't interest him he talks to his fellow players. It is seldom that he addresses the spectators. That doesn't comport with his idea of strict baseball etiquette.

Street's manner of conversation is vivacious and "skittery," like that of a belle who is making her first visit to Washington.

His cheery good nature is one of the finest things about him. He smiles if the [illegible] is hot in the morning and smiles when it happens to be cold. If the sirup is all gone he spreads his cakes with sugar and smiles just the same. It's fine to have a ballplayer of this disposition with a team.

Street's arm has bothered him at times. Once it bothered him so severely that most of the wise men in baseball insisted that he would not amount to much as a future asset.

He undertook to get his arm in condition, and ever since then he has been catching well. That seems to indicate that he knew what ailed his arm better than the experts, and that the experts did not have a good line on his future.

Gabby Street.

One of the best assets of Street is his knowledge of the batters of the American league. Another one of his best is that he can hold a pitcher with steadiness and usually gets him to throw the ball where he wants it thrown. Not every catcher can do that.

His arm is not so strong that he can get the ball away well from far behind the plate, so he is compelled to take a step and hitch forward to throw to second base. He offsets all this hitch and carry one by his accuracy as a thrower. If he aims to hit the paws of the second baseman, or the man who is covering the base, it is the rare exception when he shoots to one side of the mark.

Bonehead Plays.

Well, even some of the wisest men in baseball make the so-called "bonehead" plays. Here's Hal Chase, one of the brainiest players in the American league circuit. Chase slammed the pill over the fence for a home run in Indianapolis and then failed to touch first base. The result was that the Yankees had to go twelve rounds then to beat the Indians.

Davis Praises McGraw.

An enthusiastic baseball fan from Chicago provoked an argument with Harry Davis by the statement that the Giants had a great club and would have won the world's series but for McGraw. Harry's reply was: "McGraw is one of the best managers, and the Giants would have finished bad had they any other man to lead the club."

COLD BROUGHT IT ON.

Mrs. Carrie Sommer, 3422 N. Hamilton Ave., Chicago, Ill., says: "A severe cold settled on my kidneys and the pains through my back and limbs were so intense I could scarcely keep from screaming. My heart troubled me and I became so dizzy I could barely stoop. At last I took to my bed and was in agony for two weeks, the doctor failing to help me. Learning of Doan's Kidney Pills, I began using them and continued until entirely cured. For eight years I have had no sign of the old trouble."

Timely Advice and Hints for the Hostess

By Mme. MERRI

From Virginia.

Please give a flower contest. I am fifteen. Am I too young to go out with boys?—Virginia.

I do not seem to have a "flower" contest at hand, but I hope this one on "trees" will answer your purpose. I think it is an unusually good one. Fifteen is rather young to go out with boys; of course, I do not mean to school affairs, but in society; generally speaking. If you go so much now, what is there going to be left for you when you are a really, truly young lady? This is the "trees" contest:

1. Which tree a kissing game could play. Tulip
2. And which its father's name could say. Pawpaw.
3. Which shall we wear to keep us warm. Fir.
4. And which do ships prefer in storm. Bay.
5. Which shows what lovelorn maidens do. Pine.
6. And in the hands which carry you. Palm.
7. And which is it that the fruit men fear. Locust.
8. And from their pipes men shake. Ash.
9. Which tree is it bad boys dislike to see. Birch.
10. Which is a girl both young and sweet. Peach.
11. Which like a man, bright, dapper and neat. Spruce.
12. And on which do children like to play. Beech.
13. To which tree turn we for goods to wear and stuff to burn. Cottonwood.
14. Now divide you one tree more, you've part of a dress and part of a door. Hemlock.
15. Which tree is never seen alone. Pear.
16. And which one is a bright, warm tone. Cherry.
17. And which in church doth office hold. Elder.
18. Which is a town in Ireland old. Cork.
19. For this one do not look so far, which tells what charming people are. Poplar.
20. Which one will allay the pain if promptly rubbed on bruise or sore. Witch-hazel.
21. The carpenter doth use which tree to make his wall straight as can be. Plum.
22. To which tree do urchins call to show you and shouldn't have looked at at all. Rubber.
23. Which tree on calendars do you find. Date.
24. Which is a joke told many times. Chestnut.
25. Which do we call an Ohio man. Buckeye.
26. And which for soup we sometimes plan. Crab.
27. Which tells where at on land or sea. Elm.
28. And on our feet we'll wear which tree. Sandal.

In Honor of Sixteenth Birthday.

I am a reader of your department and enjoy it very much.

I am planning a party in honor of my sixteenth birthday and would like to have a few suggestions. Are there any games I could have to illustrate my age? What shall I serve for lunch?—"Sweet Sixteen."

I do not know of any games that would illustrate your age, but you could have pretty little boxes each containing just sixteen bonbons with "Sweet Sixteen" done in gold letters on the top.

Have ice cream and a birthday cake, then if you want more have cocoa with cream and nut bread sandwiches.

A Puzzling Question.

During a conversation with a gentleman friend our opinions were passed freely on styles and taste in dress. When I mentioned the fact I did not like his style of scarf-pin, and he took it out for me to look at, and with the remark he ought not to wear it, I stuck it in my own collar and forgot the incident until one day later he asked for the return of it. I was under the impression I had handed it back at the time, but must have lost it. I offered to replace it, but this he refused and says only the original will he accept.

If the pin is lost and the man will accept nothing but the original I do not see what you can do. Give a jeweler a description of the pin and see how near you can duplicate it. Send that to the man; if he refuses it you have done all in your power to make it right.

Go With Another Boy.

I am sixteen years old and for the past six months have been going with a boy who is nineteen. He treats me well; takes me to the shows and different places of amusement, but always acts as though he were doing it for an accommodation to me. Is there anything I can do to prevent this feeling? Ought I to stop going with him? I don't know whether I really care for him or not. Ought I to wait and see before giving him up? Is it proper for him to walk home from church with other girls while going with me?—Chatter-Box.

By all means let the chap walk home with other girls, at the age of sixteen you should not think of limiting yourself to just one boy friend. Go with some one else and do not try to find out which one you like the best. There is always safety in numbers. Let the boy in question understand that he does not have to take you.

MADAME MERRI

MADAME AND HER TOILET

Borax or ammonia is effective and harmless when used to soften hard water, though rain water is always best for the toilet.

Red vaseline applied daily with a small camel's hair brush will darken and increase the growth of both eyelashes and eyebrows.

Nuts should be eaten in the winter time. They are extremely rich and nutritious, vegetarians using them in place of meat and butter.

When walking keep the chest elevated and breathe deeply through the nose. A long walk may be taken without exhausting effects.

If the finger nails are brittle and break when manicured, put the finger tops in olive oil or a little melted vaseline before cutting them.

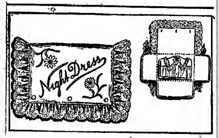
Colored and scented soaps are not considered as sanitary as the white soaps, both coloring and scent being often added to disguise impurities.

Diluted glycerine is better for the skin than the pure form. The pure glycerine will burn and wrinkle the finer skins and should be applied sparingly.

Hands which perspire too freely should have a little powdered borax in the wash water, and after being thoroughly dried dusted with the following powder: Powdered starch, four ounces; iris, four ounces; powdered borax one ounce.

Here is something so harmless that one need have no fear of using it, yet it is said to be a most excellent bleach: Beat the white of an egg to a stiff froth, add the juice of a lemon and place in a pan of water on the stove so that the hot water around the pomade will not cook or scorch the egg; stir into a smooth paste. As soon as you have stirred the mixture to a thick cream take it from the heat and use. After washing the face and neck take a little of the pomade and cover the same as in using cold cream. Rub well into the skin. As soon as the egg begins to dry rub the face with a soft towel, which takes off the paste and leaves the complexion soft, beautiful and white. No powder is necessary.

Linen, Silk or Muslin May be Used for This Night Dress Case



OUR sketch illustrates a very novel and pretty nightdress case, and one also that is extremely simple to make.

It can be carried out in art linen, silk or muslin, and lined with soft silk. It is cut out entirely in one piece, of the shape shown in the diagram on the right hand side of the sketch, and the nightdress is placed on the portion enclosed on the dotted lines and the flaps on either side are folded over it, the large flap trimmed on the edge with lace buttoning on to the back of the lower flap and so fastening up the case.

Should it be desired to hang the case to the bed rail, then a loop of ribbon may be easily attached to the top on either side.

One great advantage of a nightdress case of this nature is, that it may be so easily washed when occasion requires.

Remark Caused Amusement.

George Burrell, the room clerk at the Imperial, was passing over the laughter that followed a direction he gave a party that was on its way to the door the other night.

Three clergymen and the wife of one of them had dined in the restaurant, and one of the guests, anxious to return the hospitality, had come out and asked the clerk to get him some seats. This he arranged with the ticket stand down by the door. The party came out and Burrell directed them to the stand. Then as they turned away, the clerk, desirous of having them get the tickets he had bargained for, shouted, "Don't forget, doctor, your seats are in L!"—New York Sun.

Old at Three Years of Age.

If men lived on Saturn they would be old at three years of age. Saturn's year is nearly 30 of ours in length. That is because it is 870,000,000 miles from the sun, consequently more time is required for it to complete a circuit of its orbit.

GOOD MANAGEMENT OF LIMA BEAN CROP FOR FAIR RETURNS

Plant Is Easy to Grow and Not Hard to Cultivate—Farmer Should Grow Them as a Specialty and Sell on Large Market or Direct to Consumer—Experience of Growers.

(By C. M. CLINTON.)

To make money with Lima beans one should grow them as a specialty, and sell on the large market or direct to consumers, if possible. If this is not desirable, it is best to make an arrangement with one commission house which makes a specialty of this class of vegetables and ship to him daily as long as the season lasts.

The dwarf Lima beans are sports of the climbing variety. There are three types of each, the most popular of the climbing beans being the true Limas, large, flat and slender, with broad pods. The dwarf Limas are comparatively new and possess all the desirable table qualities of the pole Limas, while their low stature makes cultivation easier.

The ground for Lima beans should be plowed early, but not until the soil is in good condition. Beans should be dropped in rows four feet apart every eighteen inches and covered lightly. Deep planting is fatal. If the weather is wet the least possible soil, say a quarter of an inch, is enough to draw over the bean. It requires about one-half bushel of seed per acre.

The Lima bean does not need fertilizers containing nitrogen, because it gets all it needs from the air, but should have plenty of phosphorus. Fertilizers should be put on after the plants are up and growing nicely.

The plants should be well hoed before the vines commence to run, and as soon as the ground dries off after rain, they should be lightly hoed and the surface kept loose.

It is important to study the demand of the market because some consumers require the plump potato bean while others will have nothing but the large, flat variety.

When grown on a large scale, the beans are sold in bags, and bring from $1.50 to $3.00 per bag, the low price being at the close of the season. When shelled and packed into neat boxes, they bring much better prices, of course, and if cheap labor can be had, this is the proper way to dispose of them.

The Lima bean is a favorite vegetable everywhere and is grown in all sections of the country. The experience or rather, opinions, of growers in various parts of the United States as to the merits of pole or bush beans will be of interest.

"In this latitude Lima beans should not be planted before May 20th. They do better on land that has been worked a year or two than on fresh sward land. Manure well and mark out rows four feet apart and put ben manure in the furrow, covering it three or four inches."—C. H. V., Conn.

"I prefer pole beans for home use, as they are more prolific and profitable, but grown on a large scale the poles are too hard to get and are too expensive."—G. W. K., Ky.

"Where poles are easily gotten, pole Limas are the most profitable. They have much larger vines and bear better than the dwarf."—M. A. S. C.

"A pole Lima will outbear a bush bean and will not rot so badly in wet weather. The bush Lima is early, and that means a great deal in the market, and the saving of poles makes them cheaper to grow."—L. B., Texas.

"But few Limas are grown here on account of the short season. Bush varieties are therefore best, as they mature earlier."—A. A. R., Minn.

"We have planted bush Lima beans for the past three seasons. This year shall plant no other kind. Planted alongside pole Limas they have borne right along during the dry season, while the pole Limas did very little good. The beans are smaller, but the quality fine."—I. E. M., Ind.

"The dwarf varieties have not proved as reliable as the pole kinds. In wet seasons the pods are too near the ground and they mildew. In very dry seasons they do not do as well as the pole varieties."—G. G., Pa.

"I have ceased to grow pole Limas, as the bush beans have proved more profitable with me."—J. J. K., Ohio.

"Limas grow to perfection here. Push them in the soil, eye down, in early May. Can plant about four times as many bush beans on same area as of the pole sorts, but with same treatment a pole will make eight times as many, and thus give twice the crop that the bush beans does. The bush gets in market first and commands a better price, but the pods are scarce."—J. J., Ky.

"With me the pole beans have done best, but my neighbor has best success with bush Limas."—M. A. P., Mich.

"Bush beans have been a failure with me, while pole Limas have been just the reverse. I have grown them at the rate of over sixty bushels to the acre. I plant from May 20th to June 10th, in drills three feet apart and six inches in the drill."—A. R. I., Neb.

EGG TESTER IS QUITE USEFUL

With Very Little Time and Labor and Practically No Expense Handy Device Can Be Made.

When the farmer begins to save eggs for hatching purposes, he naturally wonders how many of them are fertile and how many are worthless for hatching. A great many make the hen the tester. That is, they set the eggs, and if they hatch they attribute it to good luck, and if they are all sterile they charge the result to bad luck and wonder why they cannot have as pronounced success as their neighbors.

With a very little time and labor and practically no expense whatever the farmer can make an egg tester with which he can tell the fertile from the infertile eggs. By testing the eggs before placing them under the hen in the incubator, the farmer can increase the percentage of eggs hatched—in many cases this percentage can almost be doubled.

To make the tester take a cracker box and place in it an ordinary hand lamp. In one side cut a small hole just the size of the egg when it is held with the large end up. Make this opening about on a level with the lamp. It is best to test them at night in a dark room.

Perhaps the most pronounced indications of fertility of an egg is the clearly defined air space at the large end of the egg and a cloudy appearance, densest at the upper part of the egg. An absolutely infertile egg or one whose germs will not develop sufficiently is one which is clear or near so throughout. Heavy red dots in the egg indicate dead germs.

FIGHT AGAINST INSECT NUISANCE

Never Failing Remedy Against Aphis, Onion Thrips and Other Sucking Garden Pests.

(By E. W. GRUSS.)

Kerosene emulsion is one of the standard remedies in the combat against insect pests. It is made by boiling one pound of whale oil, or caustic potash soap, or one quart of soft soap in two gallons of soft water. When the soap is dissolved pour the solution into the sprayer, adding two gallons of kerosene. Then pump into itself until the compound has the consistency of buttermilk and its bulk has increased to nearly five gallons. This is the stock solution. For spraying dilute two parts of the stock with 9 or 10 parts of soft water. I cannot recommend a stronger solution. This is a never failing remedy against the aphis, onion thrips, and other sucking insects. Biting insects too, will succumb if the spray touches them. For best results the spraying must be repeated four or five times in intervals of five to seven days. It must not be used on vegetables of which the leaves are eaten.

Clarifying Milk.

By running milk through the separator and then remixing, a good many germs are removed, but this does not imply that the disease germs are removed. The chief effect of the separation is the purification of the milk from solid filth, and this is some gain. The keeping quality of the milk is not, however, greatly improved by the clarifying. If there were disease germs in the milk before being separated they will most certainly be in the milk after being separated.

Live Poultry Car.

A modern live poultry car carries about 4,500 chickens, or 2,000 to 2,400 geese, or 1,200 to 1,500 turkeys. Facilities for feeding and watering keep down the shrinkage, which is not over 5 per cent. as a rule.

LIKE THE WOLF AND LAMB

Inoffensive Creatures Most Unjustly Charged With Sudden Attack of Bloodthirstiness.

A man who was caught in the act of skinning a neighbor's sheep, covered his embarrassment by declaring that no sheep could bite him and live. The logic of this is equaled by that of the Yankee soldier who once had a narrow escape from an enraged gander. The men of a certain Maine regiment, which was in the enemy's country in 1862, considered the order "no foraging" an additional and uncalled-for hardship. One afternoon about dusk, a soldier was seen beating a rapid retreat from the rear of a farmhouse near by, closely pursued by a gander with wings outspread, whose feet seemed scarcely to touch the ground, and from whose beak issued a succession of angry screams. The fugitive was not reassured by the cries of the gander's owner. "Hold on, man, hold on! He won't hurt you!" "Call off your gander! Call him off!" shouted the fleeing soldier. Neither man nor gander stopped until inside the camplines, when the soldier's friends relieved him of his fierce pursuer with the aid of the butt of a musket. "Did that gander think he could chase me like that and live!" the soldier exclaimed, as he surveyed the outstretched bird, but he said nothing of the baited hook, with cod line attached, which might have thrown light on the unfortunate gander's strange actions.

BABY'S TERRIBLE SUFFERING

"When my baby was six months old, his body was completely covered with large sores that seemed to itch and burn, and cause terrible suffering. The eruption began in pimples which would open and run, making large sores. His hair came out and finger nails fell off, and the sores were over the entire body, causing little or no sleep for baby or myself. Great scabs would come off when I removed his shirt.

"We tried a great many remedies, but nothing would help him, till a friend induced me to try the Cuticura Soap and Ointment. I used the Cuticura Soap and Ointment but a short time before I could see that he was improving, and in six weeks' time he was entirely cured. He had suffered about six weeks before we tried the Cuticura Soap and Ointment, although we had tried several other things, and doctors, too. I think the Cuticura Remedies will do all that is claimed for them and a great deal more." (Signed) Mrs. Noble Tubman, Dodson, Mont., Jan. 28, 1911. Although Cuticura Soap and Ointment are sold by druggists and dealers everywhere, a sample of each, with 32-page book, will be mailed free on application to "Cuticura," Dept. L, Boston.

THE SECRET OF LONG LIFE.

Do not sap the springs of life by neglect of the human mechanism, by allowing the accumulation of poisons in the system. An imitation of Nature's method of restoring waste of tissue and impoverishment of the blood and nervous strength is to take an alterative glyceric extract (without alcohol) of Golden Seal and Oregon grape root, Bloodroot, Stone and Mandrake root with Cherrybark. Over 40 years ago Dr. Pierce gave to the public this remedy, which he called Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. He found it would help the blood in taking up the proper elements from food, help the liver into activity, thereby throwing out the poisons from the blood and vitalizing the whole system as well as allaying and soothing a cough. No one ever takes cold unless constipated, or exhausted, and having what we call mal-nutrition, which is attended with impoverished blood and exhaustion of nerve force. The "Discovery" is an all-round tonic which restores tone to the blood, nerves and heart by imitating Nature's methods of restoring waste of tissue, and feeding the nerves, heart and lungs on rich red blood.

"I suffered from pain under my right shoulder blade also a very severe cough," writes MRS. W. DOXX, of New Brookland, S. C., to Dr. R. V. Pierce, Buffalo, N. Y. "Had four different doctors and none did me any good. Some said I had consumption, others said I would have to have an operation. I was bedridden, unable to sit up for six months and was nothing but a live skeleton. You advised me to take Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery and Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets. When I had taken one bottle of the 'Discovery' I could sit up for an hour at a time, and when I had taken three bottles I could do my cooking and tend to the children. I took fourteen bottles in all and was then in good health. My weight is now 167 pounds."

The Titanic

The Titanic, greatest ship at sea,
A small city set afloat was she,
With flying flag, she sailed the main,
Nor thought of danger, grief or pain.
The mothers hushed their babes to rest,
And placed them in a cozy nest.
The shining from Heaven peep
The waves lay calm, the winds asleep
None knew that over all like fate
The death angel hovered in their wake,
That family ties would rend in twain
And loved ones part ne'er to meet again
That hearts would break and hopes would die,
That little fatherless ones would cry
That friendless widow on the foam
Would float adrift without a home.
'Tis strange why things like this must be,
We wonder why and cannot see
'Tis well a veil hang dark between
Our view and every future scene
Let's us leave it to the God above
Who views all things with kindly love
Sometime he'll make it plain to all
Why hearts must break and tears must fall.

Splendid Stadium Going Up.

The Stadium for the Olympic games of 1912 is now in course of erection at Stockholm, Sweden. The building is erected in hand-made purple bricks and granite. Inside this permanent building extra rows of temporary seats will be arranged for use during the games. The Stadium will then hold about 25,000 spectators. It contains a running track, four laps to the mile, and a grass football ground which in the winter time will be transformed into a skating rink. The gates and arches are vaulted in the old Swedish style. On the brick walls there are blocks of granite inlaid in which a series of Swedish heroes will be sculptured, and the gates to the entrance stairs will be decorated by 18 heathen gods and goddesses.

TIME BRINGS CHANGES

GRANDMOTHER MOURNS; GRANDDAUGHTER IS JOYFUL.

Illustration, Not Much Exaggerated, of the Modern Trend--"Don't Know Where We're Going, but the Going Is Good."

"When John asked permission to pay his addresses to me, father investigated his character very carefully before consenting," said grandmother.

"The first time Reginald called I looked up his father in Bradstreet's before risking any further damage to the drawing room furniture," laughed Geraldine.

"And when John asked me to marry him, I told him I would think it over. A girl didn't throw herself at a man in my day."

"She doesn't now, either. When Reginald asked me, I said I would answer him as soon as my father saw his father and ascertained if he would make the right kind of a settlement on us."

"For months father and mother were the only ones who knew that John and I were engaged. I wouldn't have had anybody know for worlds," said grandmother.

"I sent the notice to the newspapers the next morning after Reginald proposed," acknowledged Geraldine. "It requires a lot more nerve for a man to break an engagement after it has been announced."

"As soon as we became engaged," mused the elder lady, "I set to work hemming towels and table linen. I had already pieced quilts and made comforts in anticipation of the day when I should have a home of my own."

"It's up to Reginald to provide the comforts of home, if we have one--which I hope we shall not. I prefer to live in a hotel," asserted the younger woman emphatically.

"John warned me that his board was seldom more than bacon and cornbread, but I was willing to share it with him."

"I am willing to share Reginald's board as long as he can afford to board where they keep a good chef."

"Sundays," said grandmother, "John saddled old Bess, put the pillion on behind for me, and we rode 20 miles to church."

"I have promised Reginald that he may stay at home and read the Sunday supplements if he will provide a limousine for my church-going."

"I wove the cloth and did all the sewing for myself and my six children," said grandmother.

"Women married, then, to get work," declared Geraldine. "Now they marry so they can quit work."

"Yes," asserted the old lady, "the modern woman toils not, neither does she spin."

"I am acquainted with several who have to toil pretty hard and spin many fairy tales in order to work their husbands for a new gown. If Reginald turns out like that, I'll renovate his ideas or Reno-vate him."

"At the pace we are traveling now, I don't know where we shall land," mourned grandmother.

"Neither do I," admitted Geraldine; "but the going is good. Why borrow a tire until you have a blowout?"--Judge.

IN GETTING AN ELECTRIC SUCTION CLEANER

DON'T BE DECEIVED and buy one with a cheap motor, a small vertical shaft which will soon wear and drop, especially when in connection with a small fan which must necessarily be run at high speed in order to get sufficient power. Such machines make a neat appearance and may do good work while new, but are SHORT LIVED.

The MAGIC is the most simple in construction, having no pumps, valves, connecting rods, gears, belts, etc., to give out.

After three years' experience with various makes, we sell the BEST the market affords.

WOMAN SUFFRAGE

MASS MEETING TO BE HELD AT M. E. CHURCH FRIDAY NIGHT

One of the questions to be decided when the constitutional amendments are voted upon in the early fall is Woman Suffrage. To make voters intelligent, is the aim of those interested in the matter, believing that a fair presentation and discussion will mean "votes for women." To this end a mass meeting will be held at the Methodist church Friday evening, May 10th, at eight o'clock, and everyone is urged to come and hear what is to be said on this vital subject.

The speakers will be Hon. Wm. B. Kilpatrick of Warren, Ohio, and Mrs Ella S. Stewart of Chicago. Mr. Kilpatrick was born and raised in Warren. He was the first and only Democratic mayor of Warren has had since the war; he has served one term in the legislature; is a student of political conditions and a democrat with a little d.-- He was chairman of the Woman Suffrage Committee in the Constitutional Convention and carried that proposal with great success. That he has been elected to office in Trumbull county which is so overwhelmingly republican shows him to be immensely popular.

Mrs Stewart, recording secretary of the National Association for six years and president of the Illinois Woman Suffrage Association for five years, is in constant demand as a lecturer at the ever increasing number of suffrage meetings being held throughout the middle west. Of a charming personality, a brilliant intellect, quiet and gentle but forceful and earnest, witty, and logical in presenting her subject, kindly and just to her opponents, an easy and graceful speaker. Mrs. Stewart never fails to captivate her audience. She was born in Arthur, Illinois. At fifteen she entered Eureka College and was graduated four years later. After a year of post graduate work she entered the University of Michigan, where she took her degree of A. B. in 1892. Two years previous to this she had married Oliver W. Stewart, a classmate. During her early married life Mrs. Stewart was active in religious and reform work, this naturally lead her to woman suffrage work. She was elected a member of the official board of that body which office she has filled with entire satisfaction for the past six years. She has travelled extensively in this country, in Canada, Mexico and Europe, and has accumulated a world of information by profound study of economic conditions in all the countries which she has visited.

DEMOCRATIC PREFERENCE

Below we publish a facsimile of the official ballot for the expression of a presidential preference in Lake county. Every democrat should call for this ballot at the primaries May 21st, and remember that a vote for Harmon is a vote for the old style Cleveland democracy, which opposes direct election of U. S. Senators and opposition to the Initiative and Referendum, etc., while a vote for Wilson means a vote in favor of the Bryan style of democracy and progressivism. A vote for Wilson is the only way to express your choice for a Bryan candidate for president as Champ Clark is not a candidate for the Ohio delegates.

| My Choice for President | |

GOVERNOR HARMON

Lost in the "Shuffle" in Maryland. Teddy and Clark Win Delegates

Baltimore, Md., May 7. Col. Roosevelt will control the Maryland state convention on May 14 by the narrow margin of one vote, insuring Maryland's quota of 16 delegates to the Chicago convention to the Roosevelt list. This was the result of yesterday's presidential primary, according to practically complete returns today. Roosevelt captured 66 delegates to the state convention against Taft's 63. Sixty-five is a majority. Champ Clark swept the state as the Democratic choice, receiving 80 votes to Wilson's 45. Harmon secured two.

Word of Warning

To the Editor:

Your kindness in using item given below in the next issue of your paper will be appreciated.

As the season for fruit bloom is at hand, a word of caution should be spoken in regard to spraying operations. In spite of the fact that all spray calendars give very explicit directions for this work, it is often brought to our attention that some spraying is done while trees are in bloom. No spray material whatever should be applied at this time. It is not only injurious to the vital parts of the flower, but means death to any bees or other insects which may visit the blossoms of trees sprayed at this time. It is usually well understood how necessary bees are for pollinating purposes, and the proper development of fruit, and to destroy them in this manner works a hardship, not only to the bee-keepers but to the orchardist as well.

Again, do not spray your trees while in bloom. Nothing is accomplished by spraying at this time. Wait until the petals have fallen, then the work can be done with safety to all interests, and good results will follow.

WHEAT CROP

In Ohio is Total Failure

Columbus, May 3.--That the wheat is practically a total failure in Ohio this year was the statement of Secretary A. P. Sandles, of the state board of agriculture, today, after receiving reports from all sections of the state confirming earlier forecasts as to damage caused by the length and severity of the winter.

The consequent enormous loss to farmers, millers and grain dealers will be mitigated somewhat, according to Secretary Sandles, by the fact that much of the land planted to wheat has been plowed again and sowed to oats. It is impossible, therefore, that the oat crop may be doubled.

By reason of the great wheat loss in Ohio and other states, Secretary Sandles predicts that wheat prices will soon reach record notches. Consumers will therefore be affected in increased flour prices.

Farmers are also being handicapped, he says, by the scarcity of seed corn. There is also a shortage of hay and even straw is selling for $15 a ton.

A Fine Resolve

"What will you women do with the vote when you get it?" asked the man, sarcastically.

"Well," replied the bright woman, "we'll try not to be too busy to go to the polls to use it."

UNIONVILLE

Mr and Mrs A. M. Lapham and Mr and Mrs A. Reed spent Sunday with Mrs. Lapham's sister, Mrs Spring of Geneva.

Mr and Mrs Clinton Thornburg of Ann Arbor, Mich., are visiting her parents, Mr. and Mrs C. G. Darrow.

Rev. W. C. Dotling spent a few days in Pittsburg last week.

Mrs. Peck of Chardon, who has been caring for Mrs. Amanda French has returned to her home.

Miss Francis Gibbs of Willoughby spent the week-end with her friend, Miss Joy Miller.

Mrs. Chas. Darrow is able to be out after being confined to the house with rheumatism for several weeks.

About ninety people attended the meeting of the Ladies' Sewing Society at Mrs. Roy Cone's Thursday afternoon and evening.

The baseball game between the Ashtabula Fork & Hoe Co. and Unionville resulted in a score of 10-2 in favor of Ashtabula.

ABOUT PEOPLE AND PLACES

They seem to be kickin' our governor around.

—o—

Uncle Jud's ship is traveling through a field of ice, too.

—o—

Karl Korth has taken a position with the W. M. Werner company.

—o—

The Mentor Knitting Mills Co. are building another plant at Erie, Pa.

—o—

The only time some fellows spade the garden is when they want to go fishing.

—o—

Safer Murphy has the satisfaction of seeing Al Bryan putting some of his money into circulation.

—o—

The returns from Texas must convince Governor Harmon of the uselessness of making speeches.

—o—

After reading a seed catalogue, gardening seems to be one of the most simple occupations in the world.

—o—

Philip Moore, for five years with the Gail G. Grant Co. has accepted a position with an Ashtabula dry goods house.

By this time Uncle Jud must be pretty well convinced that an "inactive" candidate attracts but little attention.

—o—

Dr. Wiley says nothing shrinks as rapidly as a ham. Governor Harmon's boom, however, could give it a close race.

—o—

One of the most difficult things a candidate has to do now is to figure out how the people will feel toward him on May 21.

—o—

The bill board announcements of S. M. Haskell for county treasurer indicates that he has the hearty support of Al Bryan.

—o—

Champ Clark carried Maryland with Wilson second in the race. Gov. Harmon was beaten 5 to 1 by Clark and 3 to 1 by Wilson.

—o—

Spink and Spidler are trying to get off of the police force and Jim Henry is using a lot of Al Bryan's money trying to get on to the force.

—o—

Over sixty leases in Concord, Leroy and Mentor have been taken out within the last few days by the Worb Oil & Gas company of Jefferson.

—o—

The Methodist conference has furnished statistics showing that over 25,000,000 Americans are unchurched. Probably they prefer the moving picture shows.

—o—

Mrs Trenton L. Cole, daughter-in-law of D. E. Cole, formerly of this city, and a performer on the organ of note, died Saturday morning at her home in Cleveland.

—o—

When a republican candidate for county office solicits your vote ask him whether he stands for Roosevelt or for Taft, and then hear him stutter. You can't make a candidate talk on that subject.

—o—

An exchange says there are any number of editors who could pilot a steamship safely across the Atlantic. They could if it were not for their propensity to rock the boat at critical times.

—o—

Mr. James Woodward, Gen. Mgr. of the Denver Chemical Co. for Australia and New Zealand, with headquarters at Sidney, Australia, is the guest of his mother, Mrs. Hiram Woodward.

—o—

Andy Masley Friday filed suit in federal court in Cleveland against the Diamond Alkali Co. of Pittsburg, Pa., asking $10,000 damages for an injury to his right eye, alleged to have been suffered while he was at work at the company's plant at Fairport Harbor, O.

—o—

Every democrat should try and go to the primary on May 21st and vote the presidential preference ballot. This is nominating a democratic candidate for president by direct vote and it is the first time such an opportunity has been offered to the democratic voters of Ohio.

—o—

One of the "greatest oyster authorities in London" says that the oyster season begins on August 28 and ends on May 14. So, assuming that the almanac is the same for the United States, there are still a few days of the season remaining. At all events the "month with an 'r'" rule does not quite cover the case.

—o—

Attorneys Homer Harper and B. C. Shepherd are old time politicians and both have gone through many a political battle, but that hustling young lawyer from Mentor, Mr. T. P. Cadle, is going to make them both hustle for that nomination. Cadle is a clean, honest and capable young man and he is making friends everywhere since he entered the race for Prosecuting Attorney.

Monday morning Mayor Wynne S. Smith appointed John Lane superintendent of Evergreen cemetery. Mr. Lane resigned this position several weeks ago to take up the work of assessor for the city. E. J. Kelly, who has been in charge of the cemetery since the resignation of Mr. Lane, handed in his resignation May 1, but held over as Mr. Lane was busy with his assessor's work.

Whoever is nominated for county commissioner, we hope there will be an end to the favoritism shown to the C. P. & E. Ry. Co. The people ought to elect men to the office of county commissioner who will serve the people, instead of serving public service corporations. The present board of county commissioners boycotted the Painesville municipal lighting plant up until about two months ago, and voters of Painesville ought to even up this score if nothing more.

—o—

Homer Nellis, aged about 65 years, a former resident of this city and at one time prominent here in business circle, died Saturday morning at his home in Auburn, N. Y. Mr. Nellis married Miss Elizabeth Gray, daughter of H. C. Gray, a former cashier of the Painesville National bank. He was related to H. Marshall, M. R., R. E. Doolittle and Mrs. J. K. Pierson, by marriage, and built the house now occupied by W. F. Smith, Dr. H. N. Amidon and others.

—o—

With the right given to cities to own and operate all kinds of municipal business the day is not far away when franchise grabs will be no more. Painesville already owns its water and electric plants and will probably be ready to embark into other business when the new constitution is adopted. One thing that could be easily tackled would be a municipal ice company. Work could be provided for many laborers in winter and ice could be delivered in summer to the most humble home at a small cost. The possibilities opened up under this new state constitution are innumerable and the dream of the socialist is almost to become a realization, even if the Socialists do flock off in a little party of their own and knock the very things that make public ownership of monopolies possible.

We do not just understand how members of the Painesville police force can be so active in politics and at the same time remain under the protection of the civil service. Officers Spink and Spaller are both republican candidates for sheriff and yet while serving as local policemen they are actively canvassing the county for votes and are in politics up to their necks. Now the mayor should either enforce the civil service rules or some people will begin to think that "snivel service" is the proper name for it. Officers Spaller and Spink are both good men and under the civil service have life long jobs, but one of the conditions of civil service rules is that they keep out of politics and be neither republican or democratic office seekers. Will the mayor please call these gentlemen upon the carpet.

TEXAS

An Awful Jolt to Friends of Gov. Harmon.

Washington, May 6.--The Harmon national headquarters is the gloomiest presidential rallying point in Washington. The discouragement is due to the decisive defeat of the Harmon candidacy in Texas. What makes the defeat the more galling to the Harmon managers is the fact that Gov. Wilson of New Jersey carried the state, according to the latest returns, by more than 2 to 1 in the county primaries yesterday. The campaign of the allies was intrusted to Gov. Harmon.

Gov. Wilson will have the solid Texas delegation of forty. He carried every county save Bexar, in which Gov. Harmon spoke in his recent tour of that state. Senator Bailey made a vigorous speaking campaign for Gov. Harmon and Gov. Wilson carried every county in which Bailey appeared.

The Harmon campaign in Texas was conducted by Chairman Williams of the democratic state committee and Judge Rice Maxey. The latest reports are that both Williams and Maxey not only failed to carry their home counties for Gov. Harmon, but that Gov. Wilson carried every voting precinct in both counties.

CURED OF SOLITAIRE PLAY

How One Wife Put Stop to Her Husband's Preoccupation With the Game.

"My husband used to be a solitaire fiend," said a woman the other day. "He used to come home nights and play several games while I was preparing dinner. After eating--and he would hurry that--he would rush to his card table and play until late at night. If this had happened only once a week it would have been different and I would not have said a word about it. As it was, he would play every night we were not going out together.

"I like card playing, but when it comes to making the game of solitaire an occupation, I draw the line.

"I worried and fretted about the proposition as I thought it was doing my husband harm, as well as keeping him from being sociable, until I thought I would have gray hair. I remonstrated, argued, fought and shed tears, but all to no avail. Finally I hit upon a scheme.

"As I was an unusually poor card player my husband had criticized me several times for my ignorance, good humoredly, of course, and I decided to learn to play solitaire also. I bought a pack of playing cards and one evening at dinner I told the solitaire fiend that I wanted him to teach me the game. He was delighted to think I at last had come to his side and he said he would instruct me that very night.

"Accordingly, after we had tidied up the dining room--he helped me that time--we started in on the single handed game. My husband sweated and almost swore at times and he called me a 'bonehead' and several other names that mean the same thing. Finally he gave it up in disgust and he has not played cards since."

THOUGHT TIN WAS SILVER

Chinese Pirates Meet Bitter Disappointment After Risking Their Necks for Loot.

It was a surprise to the Chinese pirates who looted the Pacific Mail liner Asia, wrecked in Oriental waters sometime ago, when what they believed to be slabs of silver turned out to be nothing but tin. They were more than disappointed in view of the fact that they had risked their necks to get the supposed precious metal and had conveyed it a great distance in sampans to dispose of it.

According to W. W. Pipkin, connected with the Chinese maritime customs service, who arrived the other day of the liner Persia, there were at least 100 small Chinese fishing boats that put in at various places laden with tin. In their haste to get away with the cheap but shining metal the pirates had overlooked the more valuable silks and other rich far eastern products which were in the Asia's cargo.

There is nothing now visible of the old Pacific mailer, according to passengers on the Persia, which passed close to where her sister ship went to her doom on the treacherous crags that seem to beckon mockingly out of the mist that incessantly hangs over them. What portions of the steamer were not broken up by salvers were dismembered by the beating seas.--San Francisco Chronicle.

Psychology.

Arthur--Did you ever notice how one person always reminds you of another? Jim--Well, I notice that whenever I see one of my creditors I always think of that cute little heiress I'm going to marry in June.--Meggendorfer Blaetter.

Boating on Boiling Lakes.

Good Definition of Wit.

Wit is the power to [illegible] what everybody else was just going to have said, if they had happened to think of it.

MADISON

Mrs. J. S. Wilcox spent Wednesday in Cleveland.

John Austin was in Willoughby last week, the guest of Mr. and Mrs. U. D. Ketchom.

A. S. Stratton, Ernest Rand and Dr. Sneeres are among the latest to purchase automobiles.

Miss Mayme Hoskin accompanied by a number of her friends enjoyed an auto ride to Painesville Thursday afternoon.

Mr. and Mrs. A. N. Benjamin are enjoying an extended trip through the East, visiting New York, Boston, Philadelphia and other places.

The Fortnightly Club will meet with Mrs. Stevens of the Middle Ridge, Wednesday, May 8th.

Mrs. Bosworth and son Howard, Mr. and Mrs. Mapes and son, Nelson, of Collinwood, visited at the Ritcher home Sunday.

Ed Heartwell and Mrs. Johnson of Painesville called on Madison friends Monday.

Miss Heartwell of Detroit, Mich., who has been visiting friends in town for some time, left Tuesday for Cincinnati. She will visit Chicago, Ill., Nashville, Tenn., and several other places before returning to Detroit.

Chas. Graves of Painesville visited his mother, Mrs. Esther Graves, Monday.

Oscar Weldy and son, Carl, visited friends in Windsor and Mesopotamia Saturday and Sunday.

E. J. Foster has returned to his work again as conductor on the C. P. & A. Mr. Foster will have a regular run about the middle of the month.

Mr. Sanderson and the Misses Sanderson of Cleveland were in town Saturday.

PERRY

Miss Bessie Drew, formerly of Geneva, spent Friday at J. H. Woods home. Miss Drew's residence was changed to Cleveland last week.

Mr. and Mrs. Knight, former residents of Perry and now located in Cleveland, spent Wednesday with friends and relatives here.

Mrs. F. W. Longshaw and Mrs. G. H. Salkeld accompanied by Miss Hazel Main were shopping in Cleveland Thursday.

Miss Olive Skook is to be the confection girl at M. C. Hickman's. "Sweets to the sweet" may be all right inflection but "sweets by the sweet" is a better business proposition.

Mr. and Mrs. Freeman Hossch returned last Tuesday from their winter in Florida. They have brought home many interesting souvenirs such as sponges, sea shells, etc.

Perry High played a return game in Madison Friday evening and again beat Madison by one run, the score being 8 to 7 in their favor. This is a feather in the cap of the P. H. S. team because a victory on a strange diamond is a much more difficult matter than on the one they are used to.

The M. E. comedy "Red Acre Farm" was produced here last Tuesday and with such great success that the company will put it on again Thursday evening for the benefit of the unfortunates unable to attend the first production. And the play merits success. Mr. Shearer makes an ideal Farmer Armstrong and Miss Smith a very clever school teacher heroine, while in Mr. Clifford Stephen's rendition of "Tim bue too" reminiscences the audience is thoroughly convinced that "a little nonsense now and then is relished by the best of men." Jones the farm hand introduces a new form of proposal when he tells Juntor that he "loves her better than pumpkin pie." And the plotters, Miss Ethel Cail and Squire Harcourt (Mr. Densmore) and son (Marshal Tribby) are assisted by the salesman Harry Joiner, all of whom take their parts well. Mr. and Mrs. Maurice Poppock and Miss Grace Schuler (as Mrs. Armstrong) complete the [illegible] and the whole play is good.

The churches have organized prayer meetings for Thursday evening. There will be meeting at the Christian church, [illegible] at C. G. Winters, Mrs. John Bowens, Mrs. Claude Orcutt's on the Town Line and at the Center.

A business meeting of St. Anne's Episcopal church was held Monday evening.

Mr. T. P. Hailey spent Sunday in Perry.

A special program is being prepared by the superintendent of the Baptist Sunday School, Mrs. Ellen Mitchell, for Sunday in commemoration of Mother's Day.

SCHEME THAT FELL THROUGH

Grand Central Pete's Idea Was Good But His Partner Didn't Write Enough Naughts.

Grand Central Pete was a noted bunco-steerer of the old days, but he could neither read nor write. Once he fell upon hard times, and he and a younger but equally luckless confidence man undertook to beat their way on a freight train to Washington. A brakeman kicked them off at Trenton.

It was getting late and neither of them had a cent. Across the tracks from where they had landed was a good looking hotel and right next door was an express office. Grand Central Pete had an idea. He went into the express office, borrowed one of the large manila envelopes such as are used for transporting currency, filled the envelope with pieces of newspaper cut to the size of banknotes and sealed it carefully.

"Now then," he said to his partner, "you take your fountain pen and write on the back of that envelope '$9,000.' Then we'll go over to that hotel and explain that we've lost our baggage, and I'll hand this envelope to the clerk and ask him to lock it in the safe. He'll look at the figures on the back—and he'll take us for moneyed guys and give us rooms and grub until we can raise a stake."

The scheme sounded good to the younger man. He got out his pen and obeyed orders. Grand Central Pete took the envelope back in his hands and examined it carefully.

"Does that say $9,000?" he demanded.

"Yep," said his partner.

"Well, it don't look big enough to me," said Pete. "You'd better add on some more of them naughts."

Then Pete marched grandly over to the hotel, registered for himself and his friend, passed the stuffed envelope across the desk to the clerk and called for the bridal suite.

The clerk took one look at the envelope, another look at the soiled faces and shabby apparel of the newcomers—and rang the bell for the house bouncer. A minute later the discomfited pair were sitting on the sidewalk.

"There now!" he shouted. "I told you you hadn't wrote enough of them naughts!"—Saturday Evening Post.

Romance of Life

An entombed miner in an Arizona camp was rescued from his living grave after having been buried for many hours. He was only a solitary workman, but thousands of persons interested themselves in his rescue. His story became the topic of many newspapers during his long and perilous wait for the light to steal through from the good warm sun. The natural death of many important citizens in the same length of time in any one locality would not have attracted so much attention. Such instances give the imagination an opportunity to play upon the common fate of all humanity. The tragedy of death is inextricably interwoven with the romance of life and an individual or an army in peril makes a wide appeal in which every unit of society will ever participate. It is only now and then that a few master builders become so world-weary through long practice in dealing with generalities that the individual experience loses the charm of emphasis. It is thus that theologians sometimes account for the apparent indifference of Jesus to the personal fate of John the Baptist.

Rather Tame.

"I understand there was a 10 round bout scheduled for last night between 'Cyclone Tommy' Speers and the 'Wild Cat of Hoboken.'"

"So there was."

"How did it end?"

"Why, according to a picturesque sporting editor, the 'Cyclone' didn't furnish enough wind to oscillate a single whisker on the 'Wild Cat of Hoboken.'"

Willing to Be a Martyr

"Gerald, dear, suppose some friend of yours should ask you if I'm not younger than you are, what would you say?"

"Sweetheart, I'd say yes, of course."

"But that would be a lie and you would be punished for it some day."

"Well, it would be lying in a good cause and I'd take the punishment cheerfully."

Accounting for Some Mistakes.

Miss Elderly—Do you really think that women propose?

Oldbach—If they don't there are a great many marriages I cannot account for.—Tit-Bits.

Took Him Literally.

"I have beaten my sword into a plowshare," remarked the young officer who had resigned.

"Dear me," exclaimed his sweetheart, "I wanted that sword to decorate my cozy corner with."

Excused.

"I hated to stop your friend's story, but he was doing some very tall lying."

"Then you did right to cut him short."

Makes Himself Valuable.

Any man who has had the experience which causes him to instinctively direct his efforts toward profit and economy, has added that value to his services which prompts interest in him and an effort for his advancement on the part of those who have the power to promote his welfare.

A Mistake.

"Do you know, I heard your family doctor is a dipsomaniac?"

"No such thing. He's an allopath."

CHECK THE HIGH COST OF LIVING

RESULTS OF CO-OPERATIVE UNIONS IN EUROPE ARE GIVEN TO THE PUBLIC.

REPORTS FROM OUR CONSULS

President Transmits to Congress the Second Installment, Which Covers France, Belgium, the Netherlands and Denmark.

Washington.—The president on May 8 transmitted to congress the second installment of the reports of consular officers on co-operation and the cost of living which are the result of the investigation he some time ago directed should be made. The countries included in this installment are France, Belgium, the Netherlands and Denmark. The reports are accompanied by a letter from Huntington Wilson, acting secretary of state.

It appears from the information collected, the acting secretary says, that the rising cost of living has directed attention to and augmented the membership of the co-operative societies more especially in France and Belgium. The French co-operative associations are in the main arranged up on the same system as those in the United Kingdom. The tendency is towards small societies and the great majority of the associations represent groceries and bakeries. The most successful distributive societies are in the manufacturing cities of northeastern and central France. Among these societies relief funds are administered and insurance against illness and forced non-employment is supplied. Arrangements are made with dentists, doctors and artisans for their services by members on a commission basis.

The operation of the agricultural societies has been especially successful in southern France. The French government has given encouragement to these societies by furnishing expert advice, granting subventions, and permitting long term loans by agricultural credit associations. The general buying is done principally through district unions. High-grade farm machinery, such as is beyond the reach of many individual members, is purchased from the surpluses or is loaned gratuitously or upon the payment of nominal fees.

Government employes are to a large extent organized into co-operative societies. Many of the associations are affiliated with labor unions that restrict their membership to persons engaged in a given occupation.

In regard to industrial co-operative production it appears that plants owned and operated by the operatives are not uncommon in France.

The consular reports state that the French co-operative societies usually sell at prices which are neither higher nor lower than those of private stores and that they have a tendency to keep prices throughout the district where they are located down to a fair level as well as to enhance the purity and quality of the goods. The degree of reduction in the cost of living is almost wholly contingent upon the capability and the altruism of the management of the respective districts.

In Belgium, the consular reports state a large proportion of the co-operative societies sell at prices lower than those of the regular markets, allowing only members to purchase, and have only nominal profits to distribute. Many societies guarantee a 5 per cent dividend on all purchases and distribute all remaining profits to various funds for insurance, pensions, strike relief, indemnities for injuries, and the like.

In the Netherlands the co-operative associations include domestic supplies, agricultural supplies, creameries, farmers' loan banks and savings banks. A cash basis is strictly maintained. In Denmark sales are confined to members of the co-operative societies unless the latter wish to subject themselves to taxation. The joint association of Danish co-operative societies operates numerous factories and warehouses throughout Denmark.

WILL FORCE IDLERS TO LEVEES

State Militia Ordered by Governor to Use Rifles if Necessary to Save Dikes

New Orleans, La.—Governor Sanders has ordered the Louisiana militia to round up all idle negroes and compel them to work on the levees, forcing them to labor at the muzzles of rifles, if necessary.

Large sections of 15 Louisiana parishes west of the Mississippi river are under water, four other parishes have some flood water and are bound to get more this week, approximately 100,000 people in that territory have been driven from their homes and about a dozen lives all told have been sacrificed.

Murders Former Employer

Little Falls, N. Y.—After having threatened to murder the entire family of Charles Backer, a wealthy grocer, Anthony Parshall, a discharged clerk in the store, shot and killed Mary Backer, 17, and then ended his own life.

Backer's accomplished daughter was busy at a desk writing a recommendation for Parshall when the discharged employe entered the store by the rear door of the living apartments and shot her. Parshall was discharged six months ago.

Masons Honor Major Butt.

Washington, D. C.—With tears coursing down his cheeks, President Taft paid his tribute of love and esteem to the late Maj. Archibald W. Butt at the memorial services held in his honor at the National theater under the auspices of the Masons. A large picture of the lamented hero set in immortelles hung suspended over the center of the stage, upon which were seated President Taft, Secretary of War Stimson, Senator Hoke Smith and other members and speakers of the lodge.

TEDDY AND CLARK WIN

VICTORIOUS IN PRIMARY ELECTION HELD IN MARYLAND.

Roosevelt Will Probably Control Republican State Convention by About Four Votes.

Baltimore, Md.—Late indications are that Roosevelt will control the Republican state convention by about four votes and that he got a popular majority in the primaries held throughout the state.

On the Democratic side Champ Clark swept the city and apparently has carried enough counties in the state to give his friends control of the convention.

Wilson was Clark's most formidable opponent. Harmon carried but one county in the state.

Clark and Roosevelt both carried the state. Clark has 69 delegates to the state convention, Wilson 56, Harmon 4. Roosevelt has 66 in the Republican convention, Taft 63.

Clark and Roosevelt swept Baltimore city and both got the popular plurality in the state.

In one district in Baltimore city, while Roosevelt got the preferential vote, four Taft delegates were elected to the state convention. These are under the law obligated to vote as Roosevelt delegates, but they may give the Taft organization control of the state convention.

Maryland has a hodge-podge primary law almost as confusing as that of Massachusetts. It is possible under the Maryland law for one candidate to get the statewide presidential preference expression and for the other to have the delegates.

Under the Maryland law the county, or the legislative district in the case of the city of Baltimore, is the unit that determines the presidential preference for the delegates.

That is, the presidential preference vote in each county or legislative district (Baltimore has no county government, but is divided into legislative districts) determines how delegates elected to the state convention from each district or county shall vote. The delegates to the state convention are apportioned according to the number of representatives in the state's general assembly. It is therefore possible for one of the candidates to have the state wide preference vote and still not control a majority of the delegates to the state convention. One of the singular features of this primary election is that the voter was able to have his ballot marked for him outside the polling booth. Ballots so marked were deposited in special envelopes. This method of voting was restricted, however, to districts outside Baltimore.

ASTOR'S WILL MADE PUBLIC

Victim of Titanic Disaster Leaves Bulk of Estate to His Only Son, William Vincent Astor.

New York City.—Counsel for the family made public the will of John Jacob Astor, as drawn in this city in September.

Vincent Astor, a son who will come to age within the year, is made the principal beneficiary and residuary legatee. No hint as to the value of the great estate is given, but estimates run from $75,000,000 to $150,000,000.

By the creation of trust funds, the testator has followed, so far as possible, the custom of his forbears in keeping the vast Astor real estate holdings intact.

Aside from provisions for Vincent Astor, the will provides for unconditional bequests of only $275,000. Among these there is but one of a charitable nature.

Nearly all other provisions of the will, as made public, deal with the trust funds, of which there are three, $5,000,000 for the young widow, $5,000,000 for the colonel's young daughter Muriel, the child of his former wife, Ava Willing Astor, and $3,000,000 for the expected posthumous child of the present widow. This latter clause provides for "each child who shall survive the testator other than his son, William Vincent, and his daughter, Ava Alice Muriel."

No provision is made for the wife who divorced him, and if the young widow dies or marries again the $5,000,000 trust fund, together with the town house and other property left to her, reverts to Vincent Astor. She receives, however, $100,000 outright, without further stipulation.

Senate Passes Workmen's Bill

Washington, D. C.—Although bitterly opposed by nearly all the Democratic senators as being in violent opposition to the interest of railroad employes, the workmen's compensation bill was passed by the senate by a vote of 64 to 15. The fight in behalf of this bill, which Democratic members allege was drawn by President Brown of the New York Central and a claim agent of that road, was made by Senator Sutherland and Senator Root.

Captain Osbon Passes Away

New York City.—Capt. Bradley Sillick Osbon, for many years secretary of the Arctic club, died here after an illness of a month. Captain Osbon, who had made several trips to the polar regions with different explorers, was 84 years old. He was the man who stood by Doctor Cook when he was discredited by the rest of the world and endeavored at one time to organize an expedition to recover the lost proofs of his alleged discovery of the North Pole. Captain Osbon was a Civil war veteran.

Ten Die in Railroad Wreck.

Hattiesburg, Miss.—At least ten persons were killed and twenty-five injured when the first section of the Texas Confederate reunion special en route to Macon, Ga., was wrecked at Gunn's Mill on the New Orleans & Northeastern railroad. Of the dead four were trainmen and six were passengers.

The cause of the wreck has not been definitely ascertained. The engine, baggage car, one day coach and three tourist sleepers left the track and rolled down an embankment.

NEW DEMOCRATIC LEADERS IN PENNSY

WILSON GETS 12 DELEGATES

Platform Adopted Advocates the Initiative and Referendum, Woman Suffrage and Laws Curtailing Judiciary.

Harrisburg, Pa.—Following within less than a week the defeat of the old Penrose Republican organization, which went down under the Roosevelt victory, the Democratic state convention accomplished the complete overthrow of the Guffey regime that has dominated the Pennsylvania Democracy since 1896. The political situation in Pennsylvania has been changed by these two incidents.

Supplanting Col. James M. Guffey, J. K. P. Hall, Charles P. Donnelly and their associates, a new set of leaders took possession of the Democratic state party. Congressman A. Mitchell Palmer is to take Guffey's place as national committeeman and George W. Guthrie is to be state chairman. These, with Vance C. McCormick, will constitute the new party management.

The Guffey people were defeated on a test for permanent chairman of the convention, ex-Judge James Gay Gordon of Philadelphia losing to Joseph O'Brien of Scranton, 110 to 74. The Guffey people then abandoned the fight and the reorganization put through their slate and platform without a hitch. William H. Berry was again nominated for state treasurer, and Robert E. Greenwell was named for auditor general.

The convention elected 12 delegates-at-large to the national convention and instructed them to vote for Woodrow Wilson to the finish.

The platform advocates the initiative and referendum and the enactment of laws to deprive the judiciary of all executive duties and prohibit its interference with the functions of the legislature in the employment of the police power.

SAYS EAT ENGLISH SPARROW

Expert Biologist of Agriculture Department Tells How to Prepare Bird for the Table

Washington, D. C.—The way to get rid of the English sparrow is to eat him. That is the conclusion of N. E. H. Dearborn, expert biologist of the department of agriculture, given full authentication by the department. In specifying methods of preparation for the kitchen, the official bulletin gives these directions:

"Cut off the legs, the wings at the outer joint and the neck close to the body. Strip off the skin, beginning at the neck. Make a cut through the body well extending from the neck along the backbone till the ribs are severed, then around between the legs to the tail and remove the viscera. Sparrows may be cooked by any one of the methods employed for reed birds and quail."

EXTINGUISHER STARTS PANIC

Fluid Flashes Over Audience in Theater and Immediately There Is a Mad Rush for the Exits.

Sharon, Pa.—It wasn't a fire. Merely a fire extinguisher, but it started something. Down at the Gable picture theater the place was filled. One boy up near the stage couldn't find a seat and picked out a fire extinguisher on which to rest. He became excited over the pictures and arose. The extinguisher fell to the floor. The glass bottle burst. This started things internally in the extinguisher and the fluid flashed out over the audience in a long, sizzling stream.

Someone in the back of the house raised a cry of "fire" and in an instant there was a mad rush for the exits. One woman fainted and several were slightly bruised before order was restored.

Can't Obey Major Butt's Will.

Washington, D. C.—The will of Maj. Archibald W. Butt, filed here, discloses the fact that the one great wish of the president's aide, that he should be buried in Arlington National cemetery, is impossible of realization. Attached to the will are blueprint plans for a monument in Arlington cemetery. The sum of $500 is set aside for the monument.

Mrs. Eddy's Will Is Valid.

Concord, N. H.—The clause of the will of Mrs. Mary Baker G. Eddy, founder of the Christian Science church, bequeathing the residue of her estate, valued at about $2,000,000, to First Church of Christ, Scientist, of Boston, creates a "valid trust" in the opinion of the supreme court of New Hampshire, just announced by that august body.

The court holds that "the residuary clause is not a gift to a church, but a gift for religious purposes sustainable as a charitable trust."

Congressman Cannon 76 Years Old.

Washington, D. C.—Seventy-six years old on May 7, rounding out 38 years in congress, the most hated, best loved, most picturesque man in official life, in Washington, ex-Speaker "Uncle Joe" Cannon, was asked how he felt on his anniversary.

"I feel all right—but I kinder wish they wouldn't come around quite so fast," he said simply. "So it goes. It's the ebb and flow of human life. It has kept up for thousands of years, and it will continue to the end of time. I have no fault to find."

ADOPT PLAN OF WESLEY

METHODIST BISHOPS WOULD LIFT BAN ON AMUSEMENTS.

Say People Should be Left to Judge for Themselves as to What Is Right and Wrong.

Minneapolis, Minn.—"The American people are far too advanced longer to be restricted by church rules as to what their amusements shall be. The rule prohibiting dancing, card playing, gambling and going to theaters, circuses and horse races, therefore, should be abolished."

This is the gist of a report presented to the general conference of the Methodist Episcopal church by the board of bishops.

In recommending this radical change, the 24 active bishops stipulated that the church, however, should not be indifferent on these subjects, but that the people should be left to judge for themselves as to what is right or wrong in amusements, having before them only the injunction of John Wesley, which forbids "the taking of such diversions as cannot be taken in the name of the Lord Jesus."

The bishops declared the church reiterated its opposition to theatergoing and gambling, but the rule in force since 1872 could not fix a point between "the turf and the stock market."

The bishops' report was delivered by Bishop Earl Cranston of Washington, D. C., and it formed the second section of the Episcopal address.

"We would joyfully acclaim the day when every Christian would abstain from the amusements which have been prohibited, but we can't repress our conviction that Wesley dealt more wisely with the danger.

"The bishops, therefore, recommend a return to the consistent treatment of this subject by Wesley, and the more earnestly because we are dealing with the American people and the intelligence of the twentieth century.

"As a church we cannot approve dancing and theatergoing. They are questionable amusements. To us as to several of our sister churches they who justify these amusements as consistent with the spiritual life seem to manifest a deplorable lack of spiritual perception.

"Again we stand unitedly against gambling and we recognize clearly that it is the same sin in Wall street that it is in the lower resort, but we have never ventured legislatively to fix the point where the race track gambler, passing from the turf to the stock market, becomes a respectable business man eligible to church membership and the chairman of the board of trustees.

"In our absolute helplessness before this question we must continue to allow the world to suspect that the larger the stake and the more reckless of public weal the gain, the less vicious the crime provided the winner pays tithes to religion or beneficence."

HARD COAL MINERS ARE FIRM

Deadlock Between Operators and Men Referred to Convention of Unionists at Wilkesbarre, Pa.

New York City.—Ten per cent flat increase of wages, recognition of the union and restoration of the sliding scale—or strike.

This, in effect, is the ultimatum of the anthracite miners to the operators' refusal to grant the full concessions demanded by the men when negotiations were begun here a month ago.

At a final conference of the authorized representatives of the dissatisfied miners at the Hotel Earlington it was decided to refer the deadlock between the operators and their men to a convention of miners at Wilkesbarre, Pa., May 14. The 400 local unions of the three districts directly involved will each send one delegate to the convention. The questions in dispute will then be thoroughly discussed and a vote of the convention will be taken on each of them.

PARADE FOR WOMEN'S RIGHTS

Twenty Thousand Suffragettes March in New York—Cavalry, Negroes and Chinese in Line.

New York City.—Miss Annie Tinker's squad of suffragette cavalrywomen, booted, spurred, breeched and stayless, were easily the feature of the greatest suffrage parade of the century, which was held here on May 3. Twenty thousand equal righters, ten abreast and all wearing 28-cent suffrage hats, marched from Washington square at Eleventh street to Fifty-seventh street and Carnegie hall.

There were suffragettes of every description and color, including a squad of negresses organized and led by the intrepid Mrs. Albert Plimpton and a bunch from the far-off land of China, led by Miss Myrtle Jim.

New Papal Delegate Is Here.

New York City.—The Right Rev. Monsignor Giovanni Bonzano, titular archbishop of Mitilene, the new papal delegate to the United States, who succeeds Cardinal Falconio, arrived here May 3 from Rome. In the afternoon he was formally received at St. Patrick's cathedral by Cardinal Farley.

While he was still at sea he received his first welcome from the United States in the form of a radiogram from President Taft. The message afforded him considerable pleasure, he said.

Lynchers Are Dismissed.

Chester, Pa.—The lynching of Zach Walker of Coatesville, near here, on the night of August 13, 1911, when he was burned after he had been arrested for the killing of a special policeman, probably will go unpunished, despite the efforts made by the state of Pennsylvania. The accused men have been discharged.

The commonwealth's reason for asking for the acquittals was that it was unable to obtain conviction because of the state of mind of the people of the county.

THE BANANA IN COSTA RICA

A BANANA PLANTATION

All Costa Rica is divided into two parts, that which is the scene of the operations of the United Fruit company, and that which is not. The first is becoming Americanized. In the second, European nations now have the advantage in trade.

In the banana country the fruit company is everywhere and as a common carrier it has a powerful influence in the coffee country. It has developed the Atlantic coast of Costa Rica and probably has done more than any other single agent for the prosperity and commercial development of this small republic. Costa Rica is by far the most prosperous of all the Central American republics and has not had a successful revolution in more than 30 years, the correspondent of the New York Sun writing from San Jose, says. Americans living here and Costa Ricans are convinced that the absence of revolutions and the prosperity of the country are in the nature of cause and effect.

The bananas and coffee sent out of Costa Rica represent practically the entire export trade of this country. The value of the banana exportations average about $4,000,000 a year and the coffee a little more than half as much. The fruit company either grows or buys and transports and sells all the bananas and carries all the coffee produced in Costa Rica. In doing these things it has developed a great number of side lines of activity which make it the great power it is in Costa Rica. These other activities include railroads, stores, telegraph and telephone systems, light and power plants, hospital, schools and various forms of agriculture and stock raising. In addition it has its fleet of ships, carrying both passengers and freight.

Bananas Cost 40 Cents a Bunch.

The company owns over 200,000 acres of banana lands on the Atlantic seaboard of Costa Rica. On these lands it produces about 42 per cent of all the bananas grown in the republic. It buys all the bananas that native growers can produce. The annual shipment is about 10,000,000 bunches, bought by the fruit company at a fixed price of 30 cents a bunch. For handling the bananas the company allows 10 cents a bunch, and the declared export value of a bunch of bananas is fixed at 40 cents.

The outlet for both the coffee and the bananas is Port Limon, on the Caribbean. When Secretary Knox and his party arrived there recently there were three steamers in port awaiting cargoes of bananas.

To tap the banana districts the main line of the railroad, leased and operated by the United Fruit company under the name of the Costa Rican Northern railroad, extends from Port Limon to San Jose, the capital, 103 miles distant and 5,000 feet above the sea. From the main line extend a number of branches and from these branches other spurs and tramways, the whole forming a system of veins and arteries for the transportation of bananas. Every effort is made to get the banana from the tree to the ship as soon as possible and with the minimum of handling.

The main line is a common carrier of both passengers and freight. Discrimination by the fruit company is impossible under the terms of its lease. At Port Limon the company has built a number of steel piers from which the ships are loaded with bananas and coffee by special machinery. The company has large offices at Port Limon, and has in addition a wireless station, a hospital, quarters for its employes, light and power plants and wholesale and retail stores.

The Costa Rican government has co-operated with the fruit company, has put in many public improvements and keeps the city clean. The government receives a direct, as well as an indirect revenue from the fruit company through an export tax of 1 cent gold upon each bunch of bananas sent out of Costa Rica.

The big banana growing districts practically end in the foothills of the mountain range which divides Costa Rica, and where bananas stop coffee begins. The hills and mountains for more than 50 miles along the railroad from Port Limon to San Jose are covered with coffee plantations, many of them thousands of acres in extent. These are practically all owned by the Costa Ricans, many of them wealthy.

Costa Rican coffee is considered by many to be the finest in the world. England takes the entire product each year and pays a higher price for it than the United States pays for Brazilian coffee. Costa Rican coffee is strong and black as served here in San Jose, and to the writer it seems far superior to the average coffee provided in American homes and hotels. It is better without milk.

It cannot be doubted that if Americans were more familiar with the attractions of Costa Rica more would visit the country. The climate of San Jose is considered ideal. The city is 5,000 feet above the sea and the cool air of this altitude is a relief after the heat and sultriness of the Caribbean ports. Today the air is as clear, cool and bracing as a September day in the North Atlantic states. We are told that it never gets any cooler, though sometimes warmer, so that there is no necessity for artificial heating in the houses. The city is picturesque and interesting and surrounded on all sides by mountains the tops of which have been lost in the clouds since the arrival of the Knox party.

Scenery Is Beautiful.

The trip from San Jose to Port Limon is the more attractive because of the beauty of the scenery after the first hour of the ride. The railroad follows the line of a torrential mountain river from Port Limon to Cartago, 14 miles below San Jose. Though there are many railroads in the United States through mountains of greater altitude than those of Costa Rica, none of them have the tropical vegetation which distinguishes this country. Mountains which in the states would be bare, bleak and desolate are here covered to their very peaks with the luxuriant growth that is found at Port Limon. The mountains are always green the year around.

Dry goods and a great number of household articles are bought from Europe. It is frequently declared by Americans in Costa Rica that if firms in the United States would study the Costa Rican market as carefully as the European merchants do and make the same efforts to please their customers they would have no difficulty in gaining a greater proportion of the trade of Costa Rica. The same applies to the trade situation in all Central American countries, according to opinions expressed here.

For example, tons of concrete is being used in Costa Rica in all sorts of construction. It is said that American firms would get all this business if they would pack the cement in iron cans rather than in barrels, the metal containers being necessary because of the dampness on the coast, which spoils about half of each barrel of cement that is not used as soon as received. Another criticism of Americans in Central America is that they are too anxious to get rich in one day.

As it is, the United States receives more than half of the total exports of Costa Rica and sells Costa Rica nearly half of her total imports. The general view is that the sales of American made goods in Costa Rica will continue to increase. It is stated by Americans here that as the opportunities afforded in Costa Rica for agricultural development on a large scale become better known in the states more American capital will enter the country. The opening of the Panama canal will also help toward this end.

Skill of Alaskan Dogs.

Some of the Alaskan dogs are better trail followers than others, and some better leaders, says a writer in the Detroit News. In a blizzard the best of these lose the trail, but invariably find it again.

When on the trail they eat but once a day, then at the end of the journey. After feeding, like weary children, they fall asleep and are never quarrelsome. It takes, on an average, 22 pounds of meat a day for a team of 11 dogs on a hard route.

The dogs of the mail teams consumed last year three tons of bacon and one of rice. The rice and bacon are cooked together with frozen fish and eaten hot. The dogs are permitted to eat all they want.

When too hot they let it cool in the snow. If near the sea or river they will cunningly pull the vessel out on the ice and test the temperature of the contents with their long tongues until the mess can be eaten without burning the mouth. Frozen fish is the staple food of all native dogs.

A Mood.

A quiet owl stole in the field below, and vanished into the heart of a tree. And suddenly, above the moor-line, I saw the large moon rising. Cinnamon-colored, it made all things swim, made me uncertain of my thoughts, vague with a mossy feeling. Shapes seemed but drifts of moon-dust, and true reality nothing save a sort of still listening to the wind. And for long I sat, just watching the moon creep up, and hearing the thin, dry rustle of the leaves along the holly hedge. And there came to me this thought: What is this Universe—that never had beginning and will never have an end—but a myriad striving to perfect pictures never the same, so blending and fading one into another, that all form one great perfected picture? And what are we—ripples on the tides of a birthless, deathless, equipoised Creative Purpose—but little works of Art?—Atlantic Monthly.

Apropos Inquiry.

Fond Daughter—Pa, I saw in the paper where you got a number of sealed proposals at your office.

Official Father—Yes, dear.

Fond Daughter—Pa, were any of them proposals for me?

SPORT in XVI Century Drawings

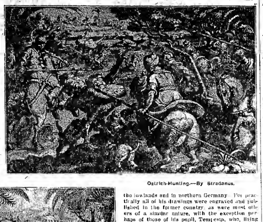
The recent discoveries of prehistoric designs in a cave in the south of France confirm the assertion made by mediaeval writers that as sport formed the subjects of the earliest designs, the disciples of Nimrod can rightly claim to have given the first impulse to art. Unfortunately for us, the old skin-clad sportsman artist who covered the walls of his Perigord cave with outline drawings of his fellow-denizens—the mammoth, the giant cave bear and the reindeer—thereby securing for himself undying fame as the most archaic of all artists, and endowing that underground gallery with the distinction of being the most ancient of all art repositories, failed to depict his own form divine in connection with the trotting mammoth or the shambling bear. True, the spirit of self-effacement which this omission betrays evinces a refreshing absence of the "personal element." It proves more convincingly than could a library of volumes what an infinite vista of ages intervenes between that flint-wielding cave man and the modern, self-assertive, press-the-button sportsman. But stay! Are we judging this instance of palaeontological self-obliteration quite justly? Was that troglodyte's failure to leave a single indication as to the relative position of man and beast really the result of genuine diffidence? What evidence have we that this artist of the Pleistocene Age had already emerged from that primeval condition when man was still the hunted instead of the hunter? How do we know that the huge Elephas primigenius or the formidable Ursus spelaeus portrayed in that Perigord Louvre was not hunting him, the pigmy homunculus? What proof have we that these crude tracings were not drawn with trembling hand after a horror-struck retreat to his cave, when his senses, which then were still as keen as those of the hawk, the far-scenting deer, or the acutely hearing wolverine, warned him of the approach of his relentless foe? Indeed, have we not evidence supporting such doubts in the shape of a stone hammer found embedded in the skull of a Megaceros hibernicus? Had that blow been dealt by a hunter to an animal already down in order to dispatch it, the precious flint tool, which to produce had cost such infinite labor, would not have been left where Professor Wauchoppe found it untold ages later. What more likely than that the blow was inflicted as a desperate act of self-defense on the part of the hard-pushed quarry when the antlered monster charged down upon him, crushing him to death before he had time to withdraw his invaluable flint? That bit of horn-encased rock—what tragedies of the Stone Age does it not suggest?



Ostrich-Hunting.—By Stradanus.

But we have strayed far afield from the real purpose of these lines, which is none else than to make the reader acquainted with the limnings of an infinitely less remote age, but which as samples of finished drawings of sporting scenes yet rank among the oldest we have.

Florentine of the Florentines, though Flemish by birth, for he was born in Bruges in the year 1524, Giovanni della Strada, or to use his Latinized name with which he frequently signed his work, Joannes Stradanus, had acquired by his apprenticeship to Michael Angelo many of the famous artist's peculiarities and mannerisms, as a glance at Stradanus' prancing heavily maned steeds and giant-limbed men discloses. Stradanus was born at a most opportune moment, for the craving for pictorial matter making itself felt in the second half of his century was creating a demand which far exceeded the supply, and though your Bodes and Tschudis, and even earlier art critics, insist that this craving helped more than any other circumstance to prostitute art, debasing the divine inspiration of the painter to a common craft, it must not be forgotten that but for men like Stradanus, Theodore de Bry, Hans Bol, the multitudinous Galle family at Antwerp, Collaert, Wierx, Mallery, Sadeler and Goltzius, as well as the De Passe family, who all worked with extraordinary energy in turning out "pictures of the day," our knowledge of the daily life and of occurrences in that tempestuous century would be nothing like as correct and intimate as it is. What progress, for instance, art made in the half-century between 1517 and the year 1567, when Stradanus drew his one hundred and four Venationes sporting pictures, a glance at "Theuerdank," Emperor Maximilian's famous book of adventures, and at the prints appertaining to the first-named series, will show. Both the designer of the pictures and the wielder of the graver had made giant strides in the interval, and as we can see from reproductions of original drawings by Stradanus' hand, many a master of the eighteenth century would have done well to study the Italianised Fleming's method and touches.

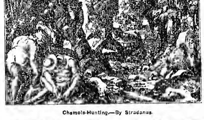
The drawings afford amusing evidence of the widespread ignorance which then prevailed in connection with certain forms of sport. Perhaps the most characteristic in this respect is the picture of mountain sport—viz., the chase of the chamois. When one first saw the print of this picture and one's astonished gaze rested upon the delineation of the agile mountain beast carrying horns that are crooked forward instead of backward, one naturally assumed that this extraordinary mistake was made by the engraver and not by the artist who drew the animal whose body and pose are in other respects correct. But in this one would have done the busy Antwerp engravers an injustice, as was disclosed when the original came into one's possession, for there, immortalized by master hand, prance about not one but several chamois with this curious malformation.

In other respects, too, Stradanus drew upon his imagination in concocting this drawing, for he represents the man of Michael Angelo-like limbs strapping steigeisen, or crampons, to his naked feet, which, of course, was never done. To turn to another form of sport—elephant and ostrich hunting—Stradanus in the former picture drew his quarry of very undersized dimensions, a mistake not usually made either by him or by other artists of his age, who, as a rule, magnified the size of foreign animals. Take as an instance our reproduction of an engraving after another drawing by the same Florentine artist. Here we have elephants which, if we accept the ordinary human form as our scale, must have stood something like eighteen feet high, though probably, as the inscription below tells us that the man in the act of hamstringing his quarry is a troglodyte or cave-dweller, a race who were believed to be of dwarf stature, the disproportion is intended to be as great as it is. As an early picture of elephant hunting its amusing details, such as the long file of natives carrying off loads of dismembered elephant on their heads and shoulders, are curious enough. The picture of the bear-hunt is more true to life, though we may express some doubt whether horses could be got to charge bears in the way Stradanus pictures.

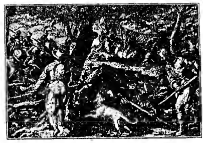
The last drawing represents the Florentine artist's ideas of heron-hawking. It tells its tale fairly plainly, though, of course, the incidents it represents are far too crowded together. It was considered the noblest of all hawking, and though it is not so long ago that more than two hundred heronries existed in the British isles—some of them comprising as many as a hundred nests with four or five eggs in each—the sport is now extinct. Mr. Harting tells us that in the last century Mr. Edward C. Newcome of Norfolk, who was the last English falconer who kept heron hawks (he died in 1871), killed in two seasons with his two famous hawks, Sulton and De Ruyter, which he had imported from Holland, no fewer than one hundred and eleven herons. This shows that the royal sport became extinct in England not in consequence of any dearth of herons. In the Netherlands it is still kept up, though the celebrated Hawking club at the Loo, near Apeldoorn, which Mr. Newcome, assisted by the Duke of Leeds and Mr. Stuart Wortley, had formed in the year 1832, was dissolved the very year it had reached its majority.

One detail in Stradanus' drawing deserves special notice, i. e., the turned-up heads of the two herons at which hawks are about to stoop. It shows that the artist fully believed the legend, sanctioned even by such late writers as Walter Scott, that the heron when hard pressed and stooped at by the hawk will point his beak upwards and thus receive the descending enemy upon its point, thereby inflicting serious injury if not killing him outright. According to modern experts this pretty story has no foundation in fact. It seems extraordinary that for centuries artists went on painting incidents which they never could have seen, scores if not hundreds of pictures of what was once a favorite and aristocratic sport depicting this very occurrence.

Stradanus' predilection for portly men and women as well as for steeds of the cart-horse type and for unwieldy fat spaniels and hounds betray his Dutch origin, and perhaps also a business-like desire to please his principal public in the lowlands and in northern Germany. For practically all of his drawings were engraved and published in the former country, as were most others of a similar nature, with the exception perhaps of those of his pupil, Tempesta, who, living in Rome, and evincing a like fertility and industry, had some of his drawings engraved by Italians. As edition after edition of Stradanus' series were issued by the Galle brothers of Antwerp, and eagerly bought up, the circle of his admirers in northern Europe grew ever wider, but there is no evidence that his work in the picture-book line ever became very popular in Italy, the country of his adoption. There his celebrated Naples frescoes, for Don Juan of Austria, and his equally good designs for tapestry for the Medici Grand Duke, enjoyed far more popularity.



Chamois-Hunting.—By Stradanus.



Bear-Hunting.—By Stradanus.

Considering the immense difficulties of transportation which then still handicapped all international and especially all transalpine intercommunication, it is rather curious that the formidable distance intervening between the city on the Arno and the harbor town on the North Sea did not interfere in a more discouraging manner between artist and engraver.

For more than half a century that studio in Florence, of which Stradanus gives us in one of his "arts and crafts" series, called the Nova Reperta, a characteristic picture, seems to have gone on supplying busy hands in distant Antwerp with material of the most heterogeneous kind. Saints and devils, popes and emperors, holy legends and scenes from purgatory, wars and sieges, land battles and naval engagements, royal progresses and peasant fetes, hunting, fishing and fowling scenes galore, the horses of all nations, the crafts and trades of the civilized world, the discoveries of Columbus and Vespucci, scientific inventions of the day, the working of the silkworm and scores of other subjects of the most diverse nature, were one and all depicted with a realism and with a power of imagination that really amaze one. It shows what an extraordinary demand for illustrations had suddenly sprung up in the second half of the sixteenth century among the nations of northern Europe as they awoke from the intellectual stupor that had enchained them during mediaeval times.

STANLEY'S EXPLOITS

No explorer before or since has approached the harvest that Henry M. Stanley reaped (says a writer in the New York Sun), and no man of letters, soldiers or scholar has had such a single lecture tour as Stanley's greatest. In something like ten big cities he received $2,000 for his first appearance. For the first night in another group of cities he received $1,000 and in still another group $500. Traveling in a special car, upon which he lived in most places, and accompanied by four or five guests, he ended the tour with $61,000 clear of all expenses. For that first night in New York a charity paid Stanley's agent $5,000 and the receipts from the lecture were $14,[illegible] On the other hand Alexander Graham Bell used to lecture for $25 a night in schoolhouses and the struggling inventor was glad enough of the fee.

Since Teacher Did Not Know.

It was in the primary class of a graded school in a western city, and the day was the 22d of February.

"Now, who can tell me whose birthday this is?" asked the teacher.

A little girl arose timidly.

"Well, Margaret, you may tell us," said the teacher.

"Mine," was the unexpected reply.—Everybody's Magazine.

WILLING WORKERS ON FARM

Birds Assist Tiller of Soil in Many Ways, Board Themselves and Ask No Pay.

Among the willing workers which work for nothing and board themselves are the birds, which have often been called "the farmers' best friends." They assist the farmer in three distinct ways—as insect eaters, as consumers of weed seed and as destroyers of large number of field mice, gophers and other rodents. Entomologists estimate that the destruction of agricultural products from insects amounts to over $500,000,000 a year. What it might be were not such a vast army of birds engaged daily from dawn till dark in making war upon these various insect pests can only be vaguely realized, says Farm and Home.

Among the birds that eat insects are the fly catchers, warblers, swallows and chimney swifts, which live exclusively on insects. Many others, such as the blackbirds and several varieties of hawks, depend on insects for a large part of their food. The meadow lark has a large appetite for insects and in the course of a season rids the meadows and pastures of countless pests that are injurious to crops. Even the much-abused crow had a fondness for cutworms that almost equals his liking for corn.

As seed eaters some birds are most tireless. To this group belong the large number of sparrows. Many other birds eat seeds; in fact, most birds eat both insects and seeds in varying amounts. A large number of birds feed on field mice, gophers, ground squirrels, moles, etc., chief of all being hawks and owls.

Their Only Use.

"What's the matter with you?"

"Got dyspepsia."

"Don't enjoy your meals?"

"Enjoy my meals?" snorted the indignant dyspeptic. "My meals are merely guideposts to take medicine before or after."

GUARD SLEEPS; PRISONER FLEES

TOOK KEYS FROM POCKET

Smith Watched Chance, and When Robert McDonald Was Overcome by Drowsiness Takes Keys and Jumps From Train.

Columbus.—While Jan Wunicki, alias John Smith, was being returned to the pen from Cleveland, where he had been taken to appear as a witness in the trial of a confederate, he slipped the handcuff keys from the pocket of the sleeping guard, Robert McDonald, who had him in charge, and escaped from the train. He is still missing. Smith had served but two weeks of a seven-year sentence for receiving stolen property. McDonald was discharged by Warden Jones when he arrived at the prison without his prisoner.

Was Not Handcuffed to Guard.

According to McDonald's story, he left Cleveland on the Big Four with Smith handcuffed to him. When the train was at New London, about 45 miles from Cleveland, McDonald says the conductor awoke him and he found that his prisoner had gotten out of the handcuffs and made a getaway.

Conductor Blacke of the train on which McDonald returned told Deputy Warden Resch today that the prisoner was not handcuffed to the guard when the latter went to sleep.

Came on Alone

McDonald continued his journey alone, returning to the penitentiary, where he notified Warden Jones that the convict had made his getaway. Warden Jones made McDonald an ex-guard immediately.

Smith is twenty-two years old, weighs 127 pounds, has chestnut hair and a medium fair complexion. He is a Russian and was attired in a convict suit when he escaped. The police departments all over the state have been notified. McDonald has been a guard at the pen for three years. He was formerly a Cleveland policeman.

CLAIM DELEGATES APPROACHED

Columbus.—Opponents of the Ross Joyce Democratic faction in this city allege that their candidates for delegates to the county convention were induced to withdraw by the offer of bribes and they have taken steps to secure evidence to turn over to Prosecuting Attorney Turner with the request that prosecution be brought under the corrupt practices act.

At a meeting held at the Rankin building, a committee of three attorneys, Carl Valentine, H. B. Moore and James B. Yaw, were appointed to gather the necessary evidence for presentation to Prosecutor Turner and the grand jury. The committee will hold future meetings.

At the special meeting candidates told how they had been approached and offered inducements to withdraw. W. T. Rice said he had been told if he would withdraw as a candidate he would be made a delegate to the state convention by the Ross-Joyce faction.

PRISONERS ESCAPE FROM JAIL.

Newark.—Six of the fourteen prisoners in the Licking county jail made their escape, after breakfast. The six were among the most desperate prisoners in the jail.

The door leading to the section of the prison where the men were confined was left unlocked for a moment while the keeper started towards another section to serve breakfast to other inmates. The men with a rush burst through the door, effected their escape from the building through a second story window, which leads to a porch roof, and then jumped 15 feet to the ground, and by scattering in different directions were soon lost to sight.

Those who escaped are Charles Muldoon, indicted for arson; Ambrose Nye, indicted for housebreaking; Charles Wheatley, indicted for petit larceny; Earl Rouse, charged with robbing box cars; Harry Bird Allison, charged with burglary; Otis Smith, charged with robbing a jewelry store at Granville. Nye was taken later by a member of the city police force but managed to escape before he could be arrested.

The other men each took a different direction and while a general alarm was sounded not the slightest clew has been obtained by the entire police and augmented force of the sheriff, who were called out of their beds to help in the chase.

HAS ONLY BAGGAGE CHECKS

Findlay.—A Belgian, [illegible] survivor of a party of [illegible] who left their native country a month ago to work in the sugar beet fields of this country, has arrived here. All he had was two baggage checks. His belongings now lie at the bottom of the ocean with the Titanic. He was a steerage passenger and was sucked into the vortex when the Titanic went down. He came to the surface and an hour later was rescued by a lifeboat.

JUMPS INTO RIVER

Cincinnati.—An unidentified man was seen to leap from the Central bridge here over the Ohio river into the water. Boats were sent out in an endeavor to effect a rescue but no trace of the man could be found.

Newark.—O. Flippo of Mt. Vernon was held up here by a colored man, who escaped. The robber got Flippo's watch but no money. Flippo is a switch inspector employed by the B. & O. railroad.

BIGELOW IS ENTERTAINED.

President of Constitutional Convention Guest of Newspaper Men.

Springfield.—Herbert S. Bigelow, president of the state constitutional convention, was entertained by the newspaper men of Springfield at a recent dinner here. Among those present were Mr. R. L. Blagg of The Farm News, Mr. Herbert Quick of The Farm and Fireside and the editor of The Springfield Daily News, Mr. Howard Brattain.

Following the dinner Mr. Bigelow delivered an address before the Springfield Commercial Club. The speaker said: "Certain Republican editors may have regretted to see a Democrat made chairman of the charter convention. Moreover the public service interests of the state would have preferred anyone else. There was therefore quite a chorus of criticism and the failure of our work was freely predicted even before we had started. But as the convention draws to a close it is apparent that no interest has been injured. On the contrary a splendid record of constructive statesmanship has been made, and as to its decisive ratification at the polls there seems to be no question."

THATCHER WILL RUN.

Lawyer After Job on Bench, Which Recently Disbarred Him.

Toledo.—Charles A. Thatcher, disbarred Toledo attorney, has announced his candidacy for judge of the Ohio supreme court.

Mr. Thacher stated he would run upon a platform advocating free speech and equal rights.

"The principal issue will be the right of the public in general, and of lawyers in particular," said Thacher, "to freely discuss the merits and demerits of judicial candidates, and the right to have a jury, instead of these candidates themselves or their friends on the bench, decide whether such criticism is proper."

Thacher expects to be nominated by petition under the non-partisan judiciary law, all candidates for judge will appear on a separate ballot without any party label.

Thacher says he is daily receiving requests for nominating petitions from all parts of the state and indications point towards his petition being signed by thousands of voters.

PROCEDURE LAGS NOW.

No Reason to Advantages Criminals Have, Says Peck.

[illegible]—[illegible] the present constitutional provision to the effect that an accused person need not testify, and that his failure so to do cannot be commented upon before the jury was declared, in the constitutional convention lately, to be without reason. The provision that in a criminal trial the state may not take depositions but must bring every witness face to face with the defendant, was similarly characterized.

The discussion took place during consideration of the Riley amendment which gives the state the same right as the defense in the taking of depositions and which, although it allows an accused to refuse to take the stand if he wants to, does not prevent the state from making comment on this fact.

MAYOR FILES CHARGES

Columbus Chief Executive Ill-Pleased at Municipal Civil Service Board.

Columbus.—Following a course indicated at the time he delivered his first message to council after assuming his office, Mayor Karb has ordered an investigation of the civil service commission. He says he has charges to file against the commission and has appointed Thomas E. Powell, Emmet Tompkins and Charles G. Ebach as the probing committee. The specific nature of the charges he has not disclosed, but the mayor says they will be given to the probing committee at once if the men appointed on the committee agree to serve. The commission is composed of Wm. F. Andrus, president; Winfield S. Potter, chief examiner, and Charles I. Warner, secretary. The action of the mayor came as a great surprise to the members of the commission who say they have had no intimation that such a move was contemplated. President Andrus, who spends a great deal of his time in the office of the commission without extra compensation, says he has no idea what the charges can be unless in his case it is for working overtime.

BACKACHE NOT A DISEASE

But a Symptom, a Danger Signal Which Every Woman Should Heed.

Backache is a symptom of organic weakness or derangement. If you have backache don't neglect it. To get permanent relief you must reach the root of the trouble. Read about Mrs. Woodall's experience.

Morton's Gap, Kentucky.—"I suffered two years with female disorders, my health was very bad and I had a continual backache which was simply awful. I could not stand on my feet long enough to cook a meal's victuals without my back nearly killing me, and I would have such dragging sensations I could hardly bear it. I had soreness in each side, could not stand tight clothing, and was irregular. I was completely run down. On advice I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and am enjoying good health. It is now more than two years and I have not had an ache or pain since. I do all my own work, washing and everything, and never have backache any more. I think your medicine is grand and I praise it to all my neighbors. If you think my testimony will help others you may publish it."—Mrs. OLLIE WOODALL, Morton's Gap, Kentucky.

If you have the slightest doubt that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound will help you, write to Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co. (confidential) Lynn, Mass., for advice. Your letter will be opened, read and answered by a woman, and held in strict confidence.

TO SUBSIDIZE FARMERS

Less government money for battleships and useless political navy yards more for the improvement of the public roads!

Every day this proposal is being urged upon the notice of the national law makers. The agitation for road improvement is becoming more and more pronounced and it is generally conceded among the members of congress that it will be only a question of time—and a very short time—until this agitation finds expression in legislation.

The champions of road improvements do not want and do not demand that any new expenses be saddled on the government. Their program is the essence of simplicity and reasonableness—from their point of view—for all they ask is that the government use money which is being wasted to give the nation better highways.

Up along the Maine coast there is a navy yard which cost the government twelve million dollars. The only useful purpose it ever served was to create a lot of fat jobs for the political friends of former Senator Hale. No battleship ever entered this navy yard, for the simple reason that the Atlantic ocean, at that point, is not deep enough to float a battleship.

The good roads men demand that instead of building useless navy yards for the political benefit of senators, the money be spent on the roads so that the farmer may more quickly and easily get his products to market and so that land, now of little value because of poor roads, may become valuable and useful. Here are a few of the A B C's of the good roads proposition:

The cost of hauling, per ton, over 5 miles of unimproved country roads is more than the cost, per ton, over 200 miles of railroad.

A farm 15 miles from a shipping station, on unimproved roads, will cost more per year than land can be rented for adjoining the station.

Improved roads, as compared with unimproved roads, will move the farm 15 miles from a shipping station to within one-half mile of the station.

If land ten miles from a shipping station rents for $6 an acre and is worth $100 an acre, having unimproved roads, the same land, with good roads, will rent for $12 an acre and will sell for $200 an acre.

These facts apply as a general proposition. They are based on averages compiled from figures gathered by government experts and are accurate.

The good roads idea is generally becoming of greater political significance and therein lies the hope of the friends of the movement, because whatever action is taken must have its source in congress.

HOW "DISSOLUTION" HELPS

Standard Oil stock has increased greatly in value since the recent "dissolution" decision of the United States Supreme court. In the report of a prominent Wall Street firm, issued recently, there is this significant language: "Whatever the effect the dissolution order had on actual values, it is apparent that the recent speculative activity in the component stocks has put quotations so much above the former average, as expressed particularly in Standard Oil stock, that the Rockefellers could sell out now, if they desired, at a much higher figure than ever before. Dissolution has greatly enriched them."

Having enriched the Standard Oil company and the Tobacco trust through dissolution suits, the Taft administration has now started similar proceedings against the harvester trust. Doubtless this trust will be duly thankful for the favor.

UPWARD GOES THE PRICE

Along with about everything else that the people use, the price of writing paper has now hit the up grade. The reason, of course, is the fact that the mills have all been organized into a trust, and this trust is over-capitalized to an extent probably greater than any monopoly yet organized in this country. When the American Writing Paper company was formed, common stock was piled on bonds, and preferred on the common, until a mighty pile was erected. On this great mass of water, dividends must be paid, and these dividends can be paid only by the imposition, on the public, of increased prices. Competition having been suppressed, the trust is now free to charge what it pleases.

EXPRESS TRUST IS IMMUNE.

The United States District attorney at Denver is prosecuting a railway mail clerk for carrying outside the mails and mailable packet, not first class, for hire. The prosecution is based on the law which makes it illegal for any person engaged in carrying mails to carry any letter or packet for hire.

If the same district attorney has read the next section of the same law he would have found this: "Whoever shall establish any private express for the conveyance of letters or packets, or in any manner provide for the conveyance of the same, may be imprisoned for not more than six months."

The express companies violate this section of the law millions of times every year, but no District Attorney is prosecuting them.

THEY ARE NOT WORRIED

Although the prospects for a complete Democratic success in November are becoming brighter each day, it is observable that business, which always keeps its eyes on the political situation, is not in the least alarmed. More and more it is becoming the sober opinion of onlookers from the business world that nothing is to be feared from the overthrow of both Republican factions. For the first time in more than a score of years the so-called "business interests" are not raising the old, pre-election cry of "Democratic success means business ruin." The stock market "bulls" never were more optimistic than they are now.

RANDOM THOUGHTS

By Tom, Dick and Harry

Why don't some brave spirit around this town come forth with a real noise in support of President Taft as a candidate for the presidential nomination. Has everybody profited by the experience of the Rev E Lee Howard? And by the way what has become of E Lee ——? Gone out of politics?

The man who is a slave to liquor is to be pitied more than censured. Painesville has a number of otherwise harmless residents who make their "booze" fighting a continuous performance. They purchase the worst kind of liquor in Cleveland, devour it with quick dispatch and seem only to look forward to the next consignment. This class of citizen is not desirable but must be tolerated. You can't reform them. They have lost their grip on life and the best that can be hoped for them is that they will speedily drink themselves to death for their own good as well as everybody else's.—Telegraph-Republican.

Why not chloroform them or pass a law authorizing coppers to pick 'em off whenever one of these "undesirable" citizens appears on the street in an intoxicated condition. Make it an open season for them, say from Jan 1st to Jan. 1st. To insure speedy extermination a small bounty might be placed on their scalps. This certainly would be more humane than hoping they "speedily drink themselves to death."

We have heard such sentiments expressed by thoughtless persons but we never thought to see them printed in the editorial column of a daily newspaper.

A man with money is It. Likewise a man who can make people think he has money is It. Both spelled with a cap I. You can talk about American independence until you are blue in the face but just the same you worship the rushing, rolling rollicking dollar. You wouldn't offend a goat if he was worth real money and you'd love a lobster if he had an automobile. Wouldn't eh? Well we're from Missouri—and we'll show you. (Yes, it's been revised).

A man with a little money can get out an injunction against the appointment of a cop and he can get away with it. Not a peep from the inwns funny paragrapher even. Everything just as respectful and nice as can be. Now if we did any such ridiculous thing as that, the first fellow we met next morning would hail us with, "Say, you darn old fool" do you want to disgrace your loving friends? Are you nutty? Are you a candidate for the bughouse?" and so on ad infinitum. In other words we would get "bawled" out from every quarter. But you wouldn't talk that way to a fellow with a chunk of the kale, would you? Not on your life and neither would we. Not that we would marry any one's rich widow but that we simply tip our hat to currency.

BIBLE STILL BEST SELLER

Continues to Hold Its Lead as the Most Popular Book Ever Published.

The one hundred and seventh annual report of the British and Foreign Bible society, the largest, if not the oldest, of such organizations, shows that the Bible still holds its ancient lead as the most popular book ever published. During 1910 the society distributed, in 432 languages and dialects, no fewer than 903,827 complete Bibles, 1,199,239 New Testaments and 4,782,720 single scriptural books. Its receipts from these sales—for though its prices are very low, it seldom actually gives Bibles away—were more than $500,000, and in addition it received about $700,000 as legacies and donations and from invested funds. Since its foundation, in 1804, it has distributed nearly 220,000,000 copies of the sacred writings, at a cost of fully $50,000,000. Its colporteurs today number 1,100 and its annual output of Bibles weighs nearly 350 tons.

The American Bible society, says the Baltimore Evening Sun, ably seconds the work of the great British society, and is almost as old, having been established in 1816. Down to 1900 it had printed and distributed 70,000,000 copies of the New Testament and the complete Bible, and since then it has continued the work at the rate of nearly 2,000,000 copies a year. It has given especial attention to the translation of the Bible into the Indian tongues, and is now ready to supply New Testaments, at least, in every such tongue as has been reduced to writing. Of late it has also given attention to the Philippines, and its colporteurs now distribute Bibles in Tagalog and all the other dialects of the islands.

Altogether these two great societies, with their Scotch, Prussian and Russian rivals, are now distributing fully 2,000,000 complete Bibles, 3,000,000 New Testaments and 6,000,000 lesser portions of the Scriptures a year. Just how many copies of the Book are otherwise sold in the world is not to be accurately determined, but the most reliable estimates place the number at 5,000,000 a year. In the United States alone the sales often exceed 1,000,000. No other book, sacred or profane, comes within miles of this stupendous record. The Bible outsells all the other best sellers. As a matter of fact, it comes very near outselling all of them taken together.

French Sailors.

Most of the French admirals are from the south, from which we may infer the greater success of their southern friends as politicians, and perhaps their own skill in hanging their hammocks at the admiralty, says a Paris letter to London Truth. The bulk of the seamen are Normans and Bretons but the latter are much more numerous. The Normans have in modern times grown lubberly. Under the Plantagenets they were less rich, soaked infinitely less cider, broody, had no factories and were constantly spurred to naval action by hostile Bretons. This kept up that spirit of hardy seamanship which landed the Dieppois in the time of the early Valois in the Kongo and enabled them to trade in coconuts and those elephant tusks which their sculptors transformed into such beautifully carved objects d'art. The seamanship of the Provencals was brought out by the piracies of Algerines, Tunisians and Moors. Bailli Suffren, who "skimmed" the oceans in the eighteenth century of East Indiamen and British merchantmen, was a Provencal. Whenever England and France quarreled in the Valois or Bourbon periods the Normans went with a rush into piracy and found in it heaps of money.

Deceptive Label.

A mother in a West End home attended a concert, and when she returned she was met by the servant, with: "Baby was very ill while you were out, ma'am."

"Oh, dear!" said the mother, "is he better?"

"Oh, yes, he's all right now, but he was bad at first."

"Yes, yes, and what did you do?" anxiously.

"I found his medicine in the cupboard."

"Oh, yes, there is," smiled the servant knowingly.

"And what did you give him? And how did you know it was his medicine?"

"'Cause it's written right on it," and the servant then produced a bottle labeled "Kid Reviver."—Duluth News-Tribune.

Holy Rood Day.

Holy Rood day was formerly a festival for British schoolboys, who were granted a holiday, without getting up a strike, for the purpose of going nutting. At Eton the boys had to write Latin verses about the fruitfulness of autumn or the cold of the coming winter before they were allowed to gather the nuts, which they had to share with their masters. This anniversary should inspire the city corporation and the London county council to replant the nut bushes in Epping forest and the recovered remnant of Hainault forest, of which they have the management.

The hazel is supposed to have been extirpated from the royal forest of Waltham, to prevent the "tall deer" being disturbed by nutting parties of noisy apprentices from London. At present there is only one nut bush in Epping forest, and not even one in Hainault.

"My little son had a very severe cold. I was recommended to try Chamberlain's Cough Remedy, and before a small bottle was finished he was as well as ever," writes Mrs. H. Silks, 29 Dowling Street, Sydney, Australia. This remedy is for sale by all dealers.

HOW INDIANS MADE HISTORY

If we could only get at the facts of the history of our Indian tribes, it would be of interest to compare these with what is related as the fortunes of most civilized nations. It is only in tradition that the history of the Indian lives, and only one version of the story is ever heard. Sometimes this is so true to nature that no room for doubt can be found. Such is the following chapter, from the annals of the Beavers, a Canadian tribe.

One day a young chief shot his arrow through a dog belonging to another brave. The brave revenged the death of his dog, and instantly a hundred bows were drawn. Ere night had fallen some eighty warriors lay dead around the camp, the pine woods rang with the lamentations of the women, the tribe had lost its bravest men.

There was a temporary truce. The friends of the chief whose arrow had killed the dog yet numbered some sixty people, and it was agreed that they should separate from the tribe and seek their fortune in the vast wilderness lying to the south.

In the night they began their march; sullenly their brethren saw them depart, never to return. They went their way to the shores of the Lesser Slave Lake, toward the great plains which were said to be far southward, by the banks of the swift-rolling Saskatchewan.

The tribe of the Beavers never saw this exiled band again, but a hundred years later a Beaver Indian, who followed the fortunes of a white fur-hunter, found himself in one of the forts of the Saskatchewan. Strange Indians were camped about the palisades; they were members of the great Blackfoot tribe, whose hunting-grounds lay south of the Saskatchewan. Among them were a few braves who, when they conversed, spoke a language different from that of the others; in this language the Beaver Indian recognized his own tongue.—Harper's Weekly.

Beigynwsky's Comet.

There is timeliness in the appearance of that newest heavenly visitor, Beigynwsky's comet. It appeared with the war, a conflict that seems to mark the serious wounding of Turkish pride, if not the appearance of a great Turkish misfortune. When the Turks took Constantinople a great comet blazed in the sky, and the terrified Christian world added to the Ave Maria the supplication, "Deliver us, O Lord, from the devil, the Turk and the comet." The superstitious may readily perceive in the relative unimportance and dimness of the latest flyer of this description a portion of Mahometan woe. The scientific aspect of the star is not particularly notable. It appears to be one whose return need hardly be looked for, and which in all probability was never spied by our grandsires. Consequently Professor Upton was unable to predict its appearance and neither he nor Mr. Seagrave has felt the need of translating evil anticipations of its meaning, caused by extravagant popularizers of astronomy, into terms of astronomical science.

Fault.

Nothing can work me damage except myself; the harm that I sustain I carry about with me, and never am a real sufferer by my own fault.—St. Bernard.

Appropriate Title.

"Farewell" was the title of a poem sent to a certain newspaper, says the Laclede County Republican. "It's a good thing the gifted authoress bade it good-by," the editor remarked, "because she will never see it again."

ORDINANCE NO. 870.

Ordinance to provide for the issue of bonds of the City of Painesville in the sum of One Thousand Five Hundred Dollars ($1500), to purchase additional equipment for and to extend the lines of the Electric Light Department.

Whereas the City of Painesville, state of Ohio, heretofore by formal resolution of the Council thereof has determined certain indebtedness to be an existing, valid and binding obligation of the corporation.

Now, therefore, be it ordained by the Council of the City of Painesville, State of Ohio, two-thirds of the members elected thereto concurring.

Section 1. That it is necessary to issue and to sell bonds of the City of Painesville in the amount of One Thousand Five Hundred Dollars ($1500) as herein set forth, to purchase additional equipment for and to extend the lines of the Electric Light Department.

Section 2. That under the authority of Section 3939 of the General Code of the State of Ohio, authorizing the issue of bonds by municipal corporations, bonds of the City of Painesville, Ohio, be issued to the amount of One Thousand Five Hundred Dollars ($1500) to purchase additional equipment for and to extend the lines of the Electric Light Department.

Section 3. That said bonds shall be designated Electric Light and Extension Bonds, shall be of the denomination of Five Hundred Dollars each, shall be numbered 589, 590, 591, shall be dated October 1, 1912 and shall mature as follows: No. 589 on October 1, 1919, No. 590 on October 1, 1920, No. 591 on October 1, 1921. Said bonds shall be payable at the City Treasurer's office in the City of Painesville, State of Ohio, and shall bear interest at the rate of four per cent per annum, payable semi-annually at the same place.

Section 4. Said bonds shall express upon their face the purpose for which they were issued and a citation of the law and ordinance by which they were authorized. They shall be prepared, issued and delivered under the direction of the Finance Committee of the Council and the City Auditor. They shall be signed by the Mayor of said City and by the City Auditor and sealed with the corporate seal of said City. Said bonds shall be recorded in the office of the Trustees of the Sinking Fund and shall bear interest as aforesaid.

Section 5. Said bonds shall be first offered at par and accrued interest to the Trustees of the Sinking Fund in their official capacity. If the Sinking Fund Trustees refuse to take any or all of said bonds at par and interest, then said bonds not so taken shall be offered at par, and accrued interest to the board of commissioners of the Sinking Fund of the City School District. If said Board of Commissioners also refuse to take any or all said bonds at par and interest, then such of said bonds as are not taken shall be advertised for public sale and sold in the manner provided by law, but not for less than their par value and accrued interest.

Section 6. That the proceeds from the sale of said bonds except the premiums and accrued interest thereon shall be placed in the City Treasury to the credit of the Electric Light Fund and shall be disbursed upon proper vouchers to pay for certain equipment and to extend the lines of the Electric Light Department and for no other purpose.

Section 7. This ordinance shall take effect and be in force from and after its passage and legal publication.

Passed April 29 1912

Eskimo Wife a Hard Worker.

Eskimo widowers often remarry within a week after the demise of the wife. The helpmate of the savage does most of the work, and he is almost helpless without her. She makes and breaks camp, cooks, cuts up her husband's kill and carries it to camp. She dresses the skins of deer and seals. She makes the footgear and clothes, paddles the canoe and carries every burden. Without her no domestic arrangement can go forward.

MENTOR.

Spring is coming on with a great rush, and now our people are having to hurry up the gardens, the planting out of shrubs and new trees; the sprayers have all been busy this past week, a great deal of plowing has been done all over the township wherever it was not too wet to set in a plow, and everybody is just hustling! Most of our housewives have finished the spring job of house-cleaning, all the paperhangers and plasterers are busy, and there seems to be unusual activity along all lines for this time of year. After the extremely hard and trying winter, there is a universal notion here, that we are to have not only an early summer, but a very hot one, and as a wise old neighbor said yesterday, "we want to be ready for it."

The epidemic of colds, grippe and influenza still continues, and one hears coughing all along the streets at all hours of day and night. What is worse, when one has actually gotten the "epidemic" it seems impossible to get over it, and persons who never before in their lives had a cough, are now "barking" away with the old sufferer, while the "whooping cough" people are having such a time that it has been feared that it might be necessary to close the schools.

And speaking of whooping cough and other contageous diseases, in the city such are quarantined and no child so afflicted is ever seen on the streets, we are told. Down here, they run around any where, thereby spreading it, and causing no amount of trouble. Our village health officer might get after these careless folks, now he is at home, and put a stop to some of these things that ought not so to be!

Mr. and Mrs. L. B. Miller and family have returned to their country home in West Mentor for the summer. Mr. Miller now owns the John Tyler place, formerly owned by Mr. Harry Holmes. (This is for the benefit of Mentorites away from home who wish to keep track of the changes and improvements.) Mr. Miller built over the house he found there, and greatly added to it, building tenant houses farther back, tearing out the old orchard and putting same into lawn which now extends to the Garfield line on the west, and to the eastward as far as the new street that has been opened opposite "Lawnfield" the Cadle property, known years ago as the Loomis place, and before that as the "Randall Farm." So there have been a great many changes in the west part of the old village.

Mr and Mrs H H VanCleve were here all last week, superintending the packing up and getting off of the old massive furniture which they had installed in the big house on "Delhurst Farm" and which we understand the present owners did not care for, intending to simply make of it a summer home. The Van Cleve's now live in New Jersey, where they are doing well in the drug business.

Mrs Church of Lorain is here with the family of her son, Mr. Charles Church, for her annual summer visit.

The Missionary society have their May meeting at the home of Mrs. Henry Sandberg, same being in charge of Miss Jennette Munson and Mrs. Frank Case.

Announcement was made yesterday of a most interesting lecture to be given by Mr. George Crossette of Cleveland, entitled "Two years among the Cannibals of the Fiji Islands," (but he had one experience that he may not tell in public). This lecture is to be delivered in the Methodist church on the evening of May 14th, is for the benefit of the Sunday school whose finances the Superintendent declares "are in a hole" and the tickets will be twenty-five and fifteen cents, (peddled all around by the kiddies).

Mrs. Albert Hanson, nee Miss Jenn Munson, is packing up this week, getting ready to ship their furniture to Winnipeg, where she will join her husband some time later in the month.

Mr. Samuel Whiting and Mrs. N W Morley arrived at home on Saturday evening from Florida.

Rev Mr Dye and Mrs Dye have returned from their sojourn in Cleveland and will, in all probability remain here through the summer or until another Conference year, when it is expected that Mr. Schnauffer will be appointed here and will have the parsonage.

The "Star Bakery Co" of Cleveland has again started their wagon on the road, and again it is being "manned" by Ed Markell, and is having a good trade.

Mrs. Harry Hart has opened a Home Bakery in one of the Radcliffe Block, where the bread, pies, cookies and cakes, are really and truly home made, and splendid, (for we know some of the cooks who are now helping out). All our Mentor women who wish to get rid of baking all this season, can easily do so.

Miss Nelly King has so far recovered from her recent attack of grippe as to be able to be out again.

Mr. Frost is still confined to the house, but seems to be slowly on the gain, we understand and hope.

Mrs S. G. Remington is enjoying a visit at present from two of her grand-daughters, Miss Marin Wigg and Miss Stella Andrews of Cleveland.

Mr. J. C. Jackson has recently been building a new garage and has now a handsome new automobile which his family are learning to drive around; and others we hear, are thinking of investing in the same way sometime during the summer.

Mingled with the spring songs of birds, comes to our glad ears the hum of the lawn-mower, and the call of the fish-peddler's horn.

The fruit growers who have been prophesying all spring that fruit of all sorts, kinds and conditions was killed "dead as a door nail" are probably standing 'round with open mouths about this time, looking at the cherry and plum trees that are just loaded with blossoms!

Mr. Maurice Rosenthall has been spending some time in Erie recently on business there.

Any one wishing to address Harry C King on any chicken business will after this have to put on "Southwood," as he has changed the name of his poultry farm.

Mr. W. S. Ackley of Geneva, has come back home to Mentor, which has for so many years been the home of his family that no other place seems quite like it, and will be with his daughter, Mrs Dr Lowe all summer, at least.

Mrs. Galen Tower has been visiting relatives and friends in Ashtabula very recently.

Mr. Clark Bradway moved into his new store in the Bostwick block at the Center last week, and has been handing out "chocolates" to his many visitors ever since. Mr. Bradway has been assisted in the choice of stock, by his wife's brother, Mr McCullough, of Girard, Pa., who is a grocery traveling man, and one who knows the goods. The trade will be "strictly for cash" and no favoritism shown.

Mr. Burton A. Smith celebrated his eighty-second birthday on Sunday the 28th, with a family dinner, receiving from many of his friends the well-known words "Many happy returns of the Day."

Miss Frances Cleveland recently attended the Librarian's Convention at Youngstown, making the trip in company with the librarian from Lake Erie College and has expressed herself as feeling well repaid.

The Methodist Sunday School is to observe "Mother's Day" next Sunday with the usual appropriate exercises.

The Methodist pulpit was occupied on Sabbath last by Rev. Mr. Jester, the pastor of the Windermere church who gave a most acceptable sermon and assisted the regular pastor Mr. Schnauffer in the Communion service.

Miss Nellie Rexford has been spending the past three weeks down at New Lisbon, Ohio, where she is getting Mrs. Dunbar and her daughter all sewed up for the summer.

Mr. Wallace Thompson has recently returned from a business trip up to the "Old Dominion."

Word has come to the Misses King of the death of their cousin, William King Randall, formerly of Chardon, but more recently of Claremont, New Jersey, where he died on the 10th, of cancer. Mr. Randall was well known all through this county, where he has sold musical instruments for a great many years, where he has many friends, all of whom bear testimony to his beautiful character.

The last Miscellany Club was held at the home of Mrs. Heath in West Mentor on Wednesday, where the following officers were elected: Mrs. Harry King, Pres.; Mrs. Lyman Ferry, 1st Vice Pres., Mrs. Elgie Hayford, 2nd Vice Pres., Mrs. T D Morley, Sec'y, Miss Ida Merkle, Treas. The club's year of study begins with September and ends with May. The program committee for next year is composed of Mrs. Clara Gilbert, Miss Elgie Hayford and Mrs. Robert Case.

News came last week of the illness of our former pastor, Dr. John P. Morton, who is now stationed at Hubbard, this state, but who was some better when the message came.

Mr and Mrs. Charles Church are now having a visit from one of their Michigan cousins, Miss Church, who holds the important position of dietician in one of the Baltimore hospitals, and is just off now for a little vacation in which to enjoy Mentor.

Mrs. Nelson Corning returned to her daughter's home in Collinwood, that of Mrs. Earl Woodruff, where she makes her home now, after spending nearly a month down here with her son, Mr. Frank Corning and family and other friends.

Mrs. Sam Curtiss has been very sick and confined to her room for some little time, but is slowly getting better now.

Mr. Schnauffer has recently been down to Union City, Pa., on very important business, we understand.

Mr. and Mrs. John Newell have returned to their Mentor summer home "Willow Brook" for the summer, after spending the winter in Chicago.

Mrs. Charles Luth of Painesville together with her little folks, has been out here with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Stohl for a few days.

The "Good Citizenship Association" have elected the following officers for the ensuing year: Pres. Edward Steele Sawyer, Frank M. Smith Vice Pres., Lloyd Carleton, Sec'y, Dr. Lowe, Treas., Cassius Harris, chairman of athletic sports, Perry H. Smith, chairman of educational work, T. P. Cadle, chairman of deportment and morals, Will P. Hart, chairman of local baseball team.

Jury Duty a Godsend.

While many men seek to escape jury duty there are others who are anxious to serve, says the New York Evening Sun. Recently Commissioner Allison received the following letter:

"I most earnestly beg you to place my name on the jury every year instead of every second year as heretofore, and to let me serve as often as permissible by law and compatible with the requirements of your department. Strange as this request may seem, I will regard it as an act of charity to have it granted. Having had to retire from business and from all accustomed busy and active life by order of doctors, my days have degenerated into a dreary series of walks and reading, so that the least break in it, even that of jury duty, that I formerly regarded as a hardship, would be welcomed. I will hail it as a godsend, as a temporary break in the unbearable monotony."

Another man, anxious to serve, wrote to the commissioner:

"Some people hate to do jury duty, but I love it. I have not served in this city, and as I am not over busy at this time of the year it would please me greatly if you would be kind enough to have me on a jury. I am qualified to serve."

SYNOPSIS.

Dan Blair, the 22-year-old son of the fifty million dollar copper king of Blairtown, Mont., is a guest at the English home of Lady Galorey. Dan's father had been courteous to Lord Galorey during his visit to the United States and the courtesy is now being returned to the young man. The [illegible] has an ideal girl in his mind. He meets Lily, Duchess of Breakwater, a beautiful widow, who is attracted by his immense fortune and takes a liking to her. When Dan was a boy a girl sang a solo at a church, and he had never forgotten her. The Galoreys, Lily and Dan attend a London theater where one Letty Lane is the star. Dan recognizes her as the girl from his town, and going behind the scenes introduces himself and she remembers him. He learns that Prince Poniatowsky is suitor and escort to Letty. Lord Galorey and a friend named Ruggles determine to protect the westerner from Lily and other fortune hunters. Young Blair goes to see Lily, he can talk of nothing but Letty and this angers the Duchess. The westerner finds Letty ill from hard work, but she recovers and Ruggles and Dan invite her to supper. She asks Dan to build a home for disappointed theatrical people. Dan visits Lily, for the time forgetting Letty, and later announces his engagement to the duchess. Letty refuses to sing for an entertainment given by Lily.

CHAPTER XIV.—Continued.

On the threshold of her door he asked her to let him know when she would sing in Park Lane and in touching her hand he repeated that she must count on him. With more tenderness in his blue eyes than he was himself aware, he murmured devotedly:

"Take care of yourself, won't you please?"

As Blair passed from the sitting room into the hall and toward the lift Mrs. Higgins came out hurriedly from one of the rooms and joined him.

"How did you find her, Mr. Blair?"

"Awfully seedy, Mrs. Higgins; she needs a lot of care."

"She won't take it though," returned the woman. "Just seems to let herself go, not to mind a bit, especially these last weeks. I'm glad you came in. I've been hoping you would, sir."

"I'm not any good though; she won't listen to a word I say."

It seemed to surprise the devoted woman.

"I'm sorry to hear it, sir. I thought she would. She talks about you often."

He colored like a schoolboy. "Gosh, it's a shame to have her kill herself for nothing." Reluctant to talk longer with Mrs. Higgins, he added in spite of himself: "She seems so lonely."

"It's two weeks now since that human devil went away," Mrs. Higgins said unexpectedly, looking quietly into the blue eyes of the visitor. "She hasn't opened one of his letters or his telegrams. She has sold every pin and brooch he ever gave her, scattered the money far and wide. You saw how she went on with Cohen and her pearls."

Dan heard her as through a dream. Her words gave form and existence to a dreadful thing he had been trying to deny.

"Is she hard up now, Mrs. Higgins?" he asked softly. And glancing at him to see just how far she might go the woman said:

"An actress who spends and lives as Miss Lane does is always hard up."

"Lord," exclaimed the woman, "it wouldn't be hard, sir! She only knows that there is such a thing as money when the bills come and she hasn't got a penny. Or when the poor come! She's got a heart of gold, sir, for everybody that is in need."

He took out of his wallet a wad of notes and put them in Higgins' hands. "Just pay up some bills on the sly and don't you tell her on your life. I don't want her to be worried." Explaining with sensitive understanding: "It's all right, Mrs. Higgins, I'm from her town, you know." And the woman who admired him and understood him and whose life had made her keen to read things as they were, gazed earnestly.

"I quite understand how it is, sir. It is just as though it came straight from [illegible]. She overdraws her salary [illegible]."

"Have you been with Miss Lane long?"

"Ever since she started, I hope, and [illegible] she'll serve her without being very fond of her indeed."

Dan put out his big warm hand [illegible]. "You're a corker, Mrs. Higgins."

[illegible] he smiled [illegible]

As he went down [illegible] too late [illegible] engagement [illegible] with [illegible], he stopped in the writing room to scribble off a note of excuse to the duchess. At the opposite table he saw Prince Poniatowsky writing as well. The Hungarian did not see Blair, and when he had finished his note he called a page boy and Dan could hear him send his letter up to Miss Lane's suite. The young westerner thought with confident exultation: "Well, he'll get left all right and I'm darned if I don't sit here and see him turned down!"

"Will you please come upstairs, sir?"

CHAPTER XV.

Galorey Gives Advice.

Lord Galorey had long been used to seeing things go the way they would and [illegible] and his greatest effort had been attained on the day he gave his languid body the trouble to go to and see Ruggles.

"My God," he muttered as he watched Dan and the duchess on the terrace together—they were nevertheless undeniably a handsome pair—"to think that this is the way I am returning old Blair's hospitality!" And he was ashamed to recall his western experiences, when in a shack in the mountains he had watched the big stars come out in the heavens and sat late with old Dan Blair, delighted with the simple philosophies and the man's high ideals.

"What the devil does it all mean?" he wondered. "She has simply seduced him, that's all."

He got Dan finally to himself and without any preparation began pushing Dan back into a big leather chair, and standing up like a judge over him.

"Now, you really must listen to me, my dear chap. I shan't rest in my grave unless I get a word with you. Your father sent you here to me and I'm damned if I know what for. I've been wondering every day about it for two months. He didn't know what this set was like or how rotten it is."

"What set?" The boy looked up pitifully young as Gordon stared down at him. There wasn't a line or wrinkle on his smooth brow or on his lips and forehead finely cut and well molded, but there were the very seals of what his father would have been glad to see. The boy had the same clear look and unspoiled truthfulness that had charmed Galorey at the first. He had been a lazy coward to delay so long.

"Why, the rottenness of this set right here in my house." And as the host began to see that he should have to approach a woman's name in speaking, he stopped short, his mouth wide open, and Dan thought he had been drinking.

"I am going to marry her."

"You mustn't."

Blair got up out of his chair. It didn't need this [illegible] of Galorey's to bring to his mind hints that had been dropped that Galorey was in love with the Duchess of Breakwater. It illuminated what [illegible] was giving [illegible] and [illegible].

"I mean to say, my dear chap, that you mustn't marry the Duchess of Breakwater. Look at most of these [illegible] marriages. They all go to smash. She is older than you are, and she has lived her life. You are much too young."

"Hold up, Galorey, [illegible] go on, you know. You know I am [illegible] that's all there is about it. Now let's go and have a game of pool."

"I'm responsible for this, and by gad, Dan, I'm going to put you on your guard."

"You are responsible for nothing, Galorey, and I warn you to drop it."

"You would listen to your father if he were here, wouldn't you?"

"I don't know," said the boy slowly. Then followed up with an honest, "Yes, I would."

Gordon caught eagerly. "Well, he sent you to me. Your friend Ruggles has gone off and washed his hands of you, but I can't."

Lord Galorey walked across the room briskly and came back to Dan. "First of all, you are not in love with Lily—not a bit of it. You couldn't be—and what's more she is not in love with you."

Blair laughed coolly. "You certainly have got things down to a fine point, Gordon. I'll be hanged if I understand your game."

Galorey went bravely on. "Therefore, if neither of you are in love, you understand that there is nothing between you but your money."

The Englishman got his point out brutally, relieved that the impersonal thing money opened a way for him. He didn't want to be the bounder and the cad that the mention of the woman would have made him.

The boy drew in an angry breath. "Gosh," he said, "that cursed money will make me crazy yet! You are not very flattering to me, Gordon, I swear, and Lily wouldn't thank you for the motives you impute to her."

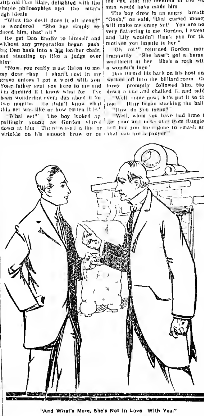
Dan turned his back on his host and walked off into the billiard room. Galorey promptly followed him, took down a cue and chalked it, and said:

"Well, come now, let's put it to the test." Blair began stacking the balls.

"How do you mean?"

"Well, when you have had time to get your first news over from Ruggles, tell her you have gone to smash and that you are a pauper."



"And What's More, She's Not in Love With You."

"I don't play tricks like that," said the westerner quietly.

"No," responded Galorey bitterly, "you let others play tricks on you."

The young man threw his cue smartly down, his youth looked contemptuously at the worldly man, and he turned pale, but he said in a low voice:

"Now, you've got to let up on this, Gordon. I thought at first you had been drinking. I won't listen. Let's get on another subject, or I'll clear out."

Galorey, however, cool and pitiful of the tangle in the boy's affairs, wouldn't let himself be angry. "You are my old chum's boy, Dan," he went on, "and I'm not going to stand by and see you spoil your life in silence. You are of age. You can go to the devil if you like, but you can't go there under my roof without a word from me."

"Then I'll get out from under your roof tonight."

"Right! I don't blame you there, but before you go tell Lily you have lost your money and see what she is made of. My dear chap"—he changed his tone to one of affection—"don't be an ass. Listen to me for your father's sake, remember your whole life's happiness is in this game. Isn't it worth looking after?"

"Not at the risk of hurting a woman's feelings," said the boy.

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

Didn't Need to Swear Off

It Was Really a Monkey the Ohio Man Saw in His Hotel Bed

The story of the monkey that was discovered in the bed of a visitor at the Waldorf a few nights ago struck a responsive chord in the recollection of an Ohio man who once came to New York for a week of rest and recreation.

The day he landed he got into a poker game and for seven days he stuck at it, the game being punctuated as many poker games are. On the last day he started in to play at 3 o'clock in the afternoon. He quit at 11:25, cleaned out.

Going upstairs to his hotel and opening the door, he noticed his valise sitting on the floor and decided he would get a clean handkerchief out of it and sit down and think it over. As he started near his glance fell upon the be[illegible] the spot where his head might have been two beady green eyes in a hairy little face gleamed at him.

According to the Ohioan's account he made not a single exclamation. He simply closed the valise, turned out the light and shut the door from the outside. He went downstairs, took two or three turns about the lobby, gave it up, called for a cab and spent the night driving about, first to one place and then to another. Daylight found him still going about, and he did not revisit the hotel until late in the afternoon, when he went up to the room clerk to apologize.

While standing there he heard somebody say, "Well, they found that monkey after all."

"Good Lord, I am saved," shouted the Ohio man, to the astonishment of the clerk. "Then it was a monkey after all, and there is no need of my swearing off."

Health & Beauty Hints

By Katherine Morton

"I would like some formulas for harmless beauty materials, some simple powder or rouge that won't show too much or hurt my skin.

"READER."

Harmful cosmetics there are in plenty, but with the average articles their abuse is in the method of employment. The skin must be well prepared so as to resist even the least tendency to hurt. The cleansing night bath must be a sacred rite, and there must always be some consideration of the ethics of taste. So the powder and rouge that 'won't show too much' are the only sort to use. Fashion allows them and issues every year attractive pots and dainty boxes and stoppered bottles filled with the dusts and pastes and philtres her daughters demand.

'But use them with prayer and fasting,' she commands, which is to say decently. Fairy gifts can never be squandered.

Now, my dear reader, have you ever heard of that wonderful liquid white called in the old days "magnolia balm," "pearl liquid," "beauty's delight," and so on? But then the name counts for nothing—remember "the rose by any other name," etc.—what I wish to say is that this face wash is still put up under countless new titles and that it can be made at home with the utmost ease.

When correctly applied, a good liquid white is a veritable fountain of youth, and, as said before, the skin must first be prepared and the pores kept open at night with careful cleansing.

| | |
|---|---|
| Pure oxide of zinc | 4 drams |
| Glycerin | 2 drams |
| [illegible] water | [illegible] drams |
| Tincture of benzoin | [illegible] drams |
| [illegible] | [illegible] drops |
| Essence [illegible] | [illegible] drops |

Dissolve the zinc in just enough of the orange flower water to cover it, add the tincture to the glycerin, and then the rest of the perfumed water; when these last are thoroughly mixed stir them into the prepared zinc and then add the essence.

This can be faintly tinted with a few grains of good carmine, but unless the coloring is very expertly done the white would be ruined. So it is far better to apply a soupcon of rouge after the white has been smoothed down. As a last move, a touch of dry powder would further the look of naturalness. The bottle of liquid white must always be shaken before using and kept stoppered so that the dust cannot get in.

Prepare the face for the make-up by rubbing a little good cold cream into the skin, massaging it down into the pores and at last rubbing off the residue with a soft bit of old towel. Use a bit of absorbent cotton for applying the liquid white and rub the balm over the skin as evenly as possible; when it has dried, take another bit of cotton or cloth and smooth the white down until the artificial look has gone, leaving only the hint that your complexion looks better than usual.

Only a dry rouge can be used with a liquid white, and this had better be applied with a hare's foot, as the hairy little puff at the bottom of this gets the red on evenly. Put the red only at the point where the natural color usually appears—faintly, faintly. And be careful of getting too much white on the nose, for this member won't stand much rubbing, and that awful whiteness of the nose is what gives the face an artificial look.

About the very best powder I could advise would be a good talcum, which is sufficiently adherent and is absolutely harmless. In fact, owing to its fineness, talcum is all but imperceptible when well put on, and it never changes color, as do the fancy powders, and has the additional advantage of being cooling to the skin. If there is the least eruption at any time, a talcum should certainly be used in place of a liquid white, and if it is carbolized—many sorts are—it will have an additional advantage. A plain talcum, which sells for about fifteen cents a box, can be sweetened up any time with a few fragrant flowers. One girl I know scents her plain powders, talcum, rice starch, wheat starch and prepared chalk, with orris root. Dried lavender can be used in the same way, a little bag of it shut up with the powder and the two left to kiss and shake hands until the little perfume is distilled.

KATHERINE MORTON.

Timely Advice and Hints for the Hostess

By Mme. MERRI

A Puzzling Question.

I have been going with a young man for some time but lately he keeps breaking engagements with me. I asked him why and he always gave some excuse. At last I have gotten tired of this, so asked him out and out if he cared to come up any more. He said he did, but made no further engagement. I care a great deal for this young man. What would you advise me to do in regards to such a matter?

I have written you some letters before but my answers never appear in the paper. May I ask if I have made any mistake and why they do not appear?—B. H.

Perhaps your letters have been among the many that request a reply "in next Sunday's paper." That is utterly impossible, for the department is always made up in advance and then by that time probably a reply would be too late for your purpose. Then, too, there is only a very limited space for "Questions and Answers," and each letter has to take its turn. About the young man, it never does to be too anxious. I think I would just let him go his own sweet way, appear indifferent, and if possible go with some one else. If this process does not bring him to time, he is not worth worrying over.

A Budget of Questions.

If it is proper for a young man to walk between the mother and daughter when out, if it is better for the young man to walk on the outside and beside the daughter and the mother next to her and on the inside? I have always wished I knew if a young lady should help a gentleman with his overcoat in a public place, such as the theater or restaurant?—Grace.

A man walks on the outside, never between two women. In the case mentioned he would walk next to the daughter. Never assist a man with his overcoat, either at home or in a public place, unless he be very old or incapacitated in some way. Young men are perfectly capable of getting into their coats.

From a Bride-Elect.

I have often found just what I was looking for in your column. I am to be married soon and will wear my "going away" suit in place of the usual wedding dress. Do I wear my hat, gloves, etc., during the ceremony? What about the bouquet? Is the wedding ring to be worn on same finger as the engagement ring? And how and when do they put it on?—H. E.

The hat is worn and it is as you prefer about the gloves, with or without being equally proper. You may carry a bouquet or wear one, whichever pleases you best. Remove the engagement ring for the ceremony, afterwards slip it on over the wedding ring, at any convenient time, usually before you start away. Glad you find the department helpful and thank you for telling me.

Three Questions.

Having been interested in your paper, I thought I would take the privilege of writing to you.

How long should she wear her dresses?

Is it proper to speak to a gentleman first or should he speak first?—A Stenographer.

Girls of sixteen usually wear their hair in braids around the head with or without a bow, or in braids looped up in the back with a bow. Dresses are worn just below the shoe tops. It is a woman's privilege always to speak first.

MADAME MERRI.

Pillows of Scrim.

Pillow covers of scrim are extremely serviceable, are easy to make and can be made very beautiful.

Buy plain ecru scrim for the pillow's back, and for the front ribbon scrim with a colored border, two strips, one for each side of the pillow, with a strip of plain scrim for the center. This is to be embroidered with a conventional design in mercerized cotton or brightly colored wool yarn. A flat bead border of the colored ribbon scrim is sewed all the way around the pillow.

Fashion's Fancies

For automobile coats, rough effects are particularly desirable.

The short coat of lace has returned at the bidding of fashion.

Two small roses made of beads adorn a child's hat.

Fashions in Jewelry.

As regards ornaments for evening wear, the tide appears to have set against long chains such as we have been wearing of late, and to have turned in the direction of large plaques of stones, enamel and metal. The more barbaric these plaques are, the better pleased the wearer appears to be. Since we have become accustomed to the gorgeous in apparel, the same splendor seems to have crept into our jewels as into the embroideries of our gowns. The semi-precious stones are having a decided vogue, as well as the costly gems, and malachite and jade, coral and lapis lazuli are all included in the scheme of things.

Growing Plants in the Home.

Thousands of people are nowadays growing many kinds of bulbs in undrained bowls filled with fiber, shell and charcoal. The result is lovely where care is taken in the cultivation.

When we hear of failure it is generally one of two things that has caused it. The fiber has become too dry and the active, healthy roots of the bulbs have withered, so that they can no longer perform their functions, or else the fiber has been kept in too wet and saturated a condition, till the roots have rotted.

The safest way of treating the bulbs grown in this manner is to water when needed. As soon as the fiber has taken up all the moisture it can absorb tip up the bowl and drain away any that remains.

Knowledge That Has Brought Man Nearer to God

THINKING IN MILLIONS

LET us think a little in millions—not, my speculative friend, millions of dollars, but, to begin with, in millions of miles.

Where were you last year at this time? "Just where you are now and sighing for some experience of travel," do you say? Why, my dear sir, or madam, you have traveled some hundreds of millions of miles in this twelvemonth and still are traveling. What is Panama or Constantinople or Pekin in comparison with this great journey of the sun and its attendant earth! While you have been longing to go from Boston to Lynn to visit friends, you have in fact traversed an unimaginable breadth of space. The difficulty of getting started is in your imagination. The veriest Lob-lie-by-the-fire, in the remotest hamlet—even that woman who lived for sixty years within sight of the passing trains and never stepped on board of one of them—is a far traveler.

Yes, but you say, that cosmic travel is both unimaginable and unsatisfactory. Lynn and Boston are at least real places where houses stand and taxes are collected. One gets the excitement of the crowded station and may look out of the car window. But our world spiral round the hastening sun is like going from nowhither to nowhere. There are neither stations nor stops nor scenery.

Two Views of Life's Journey.

It is quite true, of course, in one sense, that the pleasures of this prodigious journey are largely out of sight. But do not the world and your fellow travelers take on a different aspect because you are not marooned in some corner of the universe, but travel in the midst of stars and suns? These thoughts may not appeal to you. Perhaps your imagination is so rusty from disuse that you cannot make it work at all in this direction. Then you are like the fly that buzzes in a moving railroad car. It is unaware that its car has moved from Boston and will arrive in Montreal. So long as it finds food and occupation, the journey is a matter of indifference. The fly is happy—let it buzz and find no fault with its limitations. It will be quite as much at home in Canada as Massachusetts. And so are we, except that age draws on, in all the stages of our unimaginable journey. The vividest imagination, like the exactest research, cannot grasp and picture the facts and implications of this planetary and solar flight—a journey where to stop would be annihilation, and in which we have no hint of destination. Did we start from anywhere? We can only guess. Are we bound for anywhere? We can never know. Some of our friends, the astronomers, have reasoned that we are bound from a collision and catastrophe to a collision and catastrophe. Others incline to guess that—barring accidents—our journey may be endless.

The first effect of this thinking in millions of miles was to make man seem insignificant and God remote. The poet Young, who told us that "An undevout astronomer is mad," might come back to find astronomers of this degree of madness not uncommon. God, regarded as the artificer, must certainly seem far away when we consider the unthinkable distances we travel and the greater spaces we discern. Man seems puny in the limitations of his being and his knowledge. How slow our steps beside the silent onrush of the earth. A mile a minute is fast traveling for iron or flight. But the sun flies, they estimate, some sixteen miles a second—well toward a thousand miles while our Chicago limited passes from milepost to milepost on its journey. And the speed of light from star to star is much more than a hundred thousand times as great as that of the rolling train. How slow is man in the midst of the swift movements of the universe. How little is man, who thinks the little earth so large.

God in the New Knowledge.

Yet the second and the real effect of this new knowledge was different. It helped displace the thought of God as the artificer. It gave man real dignity and close relations in a larger universe. How little and cramped the ancient maps of the earth in space! In fact, space, as we think of it, had no real existence for the ancients. They did not get outside the closed box in which sun, planets and stars went circling round the earth. In all good faith many of them believed that Jerusalem was the physical center of all things. In place of that conceit of our human importance, we have gained the thought of God as the soul of the universe and made the old doctrine of his presence everywhere something more than a cold dogma. If we can no longer localize the New Jerusalem (there was a man, I remember, who wrote a book to prove that the globe within the sun was our heaven), we are learning to think that this earth is given us to make as much like heaven as we can. And all these things the Good Book told us centuries ago.—Boston Transcript.

The Bee and the Honey.

Mr. Moody once told the story of an artificial bee that would buzz and fly around. The man who made it placed it on a table beside a real bee, and then challenged any one to tell the difference. A man secured a drop of honey and placed it upon that table. The real bee went directly for the honey, while the artificial bee continued to buzz and fly around. There are many who profess to love God, buzzing around in church activities, "cumbered with much serving," but who will not feed his sheep. Love must express itself upon an object, and a real living child of God goes after the lost sheep.

UNIQUE POSITION OF CLEVELAND PLAYER

PAUL THOMPSON PHOTO

Neal Ball, Naps' Great Utility Player.

No one reckons that he has a chance to become a regular in the immediate future. The only thing that may bring that title to him is an injury to Nap Lajoie or a shift of Larry from second to first.

But every one reckons Neal a regular member of the club just as they do Larry, Gregg and Olson.

Neal isn't fighting for a job. He is a star utility man. Before the gong sounds announcing the opening of the campaign he can rest assured that his name will remain on the roster, no matter who else departs.

It is doubtful if there has ever been a parallel to his case in the history of baseball. A utility role is a hazardous one at its best.

Forced to rest upon the bench during the greater part of a season, then suddenly called upon to jump into a breach during the heat of a race, asked perhaps, to fill the shoes of a man who has been playing brilliantly, the fans invariably demand that the utility player deliver the same high-class article as the man who preceded him. It's an injustice to expect a man, virtually out of practice, to do so. The utility player who can do so is one of the rarest things in baseball. By the same token he is almost invaluable.

That's just what makes Neal Ball a great player for the Cleveland club. The folks around the circuit are still talking about his performance last year. There was not a better fielding second baseman in the league. A huge number of the critics and players believe that Neal was the greatest fielding second baseman of 1911.

Neal is undoubtedly one of the most popular players with his teammates that the club has ever had. It is doubtful if anyone ever heard a Cleveland player criticise the "triple play hero." He's everyone's friend. He's a conscientious athlete. On the field he gives the club everything he possesses. Off the field he takes perfect care of himself.

PIRATES' HOODOO IS SOLVED

Pittsburg Team Find Long-Wanted First Baseman in "Dots" Miller—Has Hard Job Ahead.

The Pittsburg team of the National league claims to have found its long looked-for first baseman in "Dots" Miller, the Kearney, N. J., boy, who has been shifted from second base to first. The Pirates have searched diligently for a first baseman ever since they traded Kitty Bransfield to the Phillies in the spring of 1905. In the last seven years the Smoky City aggregation has tried out first sackers by the wholesale, but never succeeded in landing a high class man. Among the men tried were Del Howard, Nealon, Flynn, Swacina, Gill, Abstein, Sharpe, Hunter, Kealing and McKechnie, but none of them suited Fred Clarke or the Pittsburg fans.

Last spring and through all of 1910 the Pittsburg scribes were singing the praises of Fred Hunter, said to be by far the greatest first sacker that ever performed in the American association. Fred lasted half the season, when he was shunted to the side lines and was released before the season was over.

Followers of the Pirates now are asking themselves whether Miller also will prove to be a fizzle at first base. "Dots" has a hard job ahead of him, as there seems to be a hoodoo to the position on the Pittsburg team. It is even intimated in Pittsburg that Hans Wagner would rather not tackle the place, as he believes he might succumb to the hoodoo and lose his batting eye or his fielding ability.

Signs Pitcher Hume.

Manager Hugh Duffy of the Milwaukee team has signed Pitcher Hume, who worked in the Wisconsin-Illinois league last year.

NOTES of the DIAMOND

Bush, Vitt and O'Leary are the smallest shortstops in the American league.

St. Paul has sold its giant catcher, Hub Dawson, to the Beaumont club of the Texas league.

Joe Raidy, last season manager of the Zanesville team, has been given his unconditional release.

Veteran Jack Warner says Amos Rusie had more puzzling curves and better control than Rube Marquard.

Fred Clarke of the Pirates finds it much more pleasant to manage the team from the bench than on the field.

Manager Wallace of the Browns has sent a recruit first baseman named Miller to Lowell, along with Wolfgang and Magee.

"If you can show me a better outfield than Carey, Donlin and Wilson, I'll buy," says Fred Clarke, the Pirate's manager.

"If St. Louis could buy Lajoie for $10,000 he would more than earn the purchase price back for them in ten days," says Hughie Jennings.

President Comiskey, of the White Sox, has promised his team a training trip to California in the spring of 1915, the year of the Panama exposition.

Big Bill James, the Cleveland pitcher, has the biggest hand of any player in the major league. A baseball look like a pea in the giant's hand.

The only thing that Connie Mack needs to strengthen his Athletics is a bat boy who will hit for over .300. The remaining positions are well taken care of.

Charlie Dooin, the manager of the Phillies, is just as spry as ever and does not show the slightest sign of the bad injury he received last season in St. Louis.

Joe Kelley, the manager of the Toronto team, claims he has the best infield in the International league in Tim Jordan, Amby McConnell, Ed Holly and Bill Bradley.

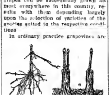
PRUNING AND TRAINING OF GRAPE VINES OF IMPORTANCE

No Other Fruit-Bearing Plant Responds So Generously to Attention, Adjusts Itself to Conditions, or Is Used for So Many Varieties of Purposes—Many Methods of Grafting.

(By GEORGE C. HUSMAN.)

By nature the grapevine is a great rambler. Forms of it are found in our woods striving to overtop the tallest trees, and single plants overspread large areas. Again, other forms are grown as mere bushes, two or three feet high, producing crops ranging from 1½ to 22 tons of fruit to the acre. No other fruit-bearing plant responds so generously to attention, adjusts itself to so many conditions, or is used for such a variety of purposes. For these reasons its culture has always kept pace with civilization. Grapes are often grown on soils too poor for other purposes. Native species of the grape are found in nearly all parts of the world and no country is blessed with a greater number of them than our own. It is therefore reasonable to conclude that grapes can be successfully grown almost everywhere in this country, results with them depending largely upon the selection of varieties of the species suited to the respective conditions.

In ordinary practice grapevines are propagated from seed, from cuttings, by layering or by grafting. For originating new varieties, seedlings must of course be used. The individual seedlings differ so widely that they are seldom used by the intelligent planter even for grafting stock.



1. Pruning Grapevine Roots Ready for Planting. 2. Vines Grafted According to the Cleft-Graft Method, at the Left With Two Scions, at the Right With One Scion.

There are many so-called methods of grafting. The mechanical operations performed are similar and the underlying principles are the same, the essential difference being the place where the work is done—as implied by the names—bench, nursery and vineyard grafting.

Bench grafting is done on benches or tables usually indoors during winter. The grafting of vines growing in the nursery is called nursery grafting.

Rooted cuttings of other varieties are grafted in the nursery and the resulting vines planted in the vineyard. In vineyard grafting the vines growing where they are to remain are grafted.

In cleft grafting, the vines are cut off at a smooth place near and preferably a little above the surface of the ground, unless it is desired to have the grafts establish themselves on their own roots, as it makes the removal of water sprouts and roots starting from the scion much easier and lessens the danger of injuring the scion before it is thoroughly knitted to the stock.

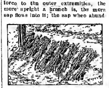
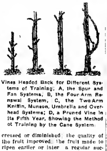
To prune intelligently, the age, size and condition of the plant, the location, climate, soil and other features of its environment, and the principles governing its life must be considered.

A statement of some of the more important of these life principles follows: The sap flows with greatest force to the outer extremities, the more upright a branch is, the more sap flows into it; the sap when abundant and active produces wood; the more abundant the flow of sap, the larger and later the fruit; the ascending sap grows richer the farther it flows; checking the flow of sap makes the plant bear earlier and produces more and richer fruit. The vine usually bears its fruit on new shoots growing from the wood of the previous year. The time for pruning is in winter, when the vines are dormant. They should not be cut when frozen or while the sap is flowing rapidly. Summer pruning is practiced on the young growth to regulate the quantity of fruit and the shape of the plant.



Grafts Ready for Healing In.

In pruning one or more of the following objects are usually accomplished: Parts of plants removed, renewed, promoted or retarded; wounded and diseased plants cured, the shape and habits of plants modified, the size and quantity of the fruit increased or diminished, the quality of the fruit improved, the fruit made to ripen earlier or later, a regular succession of fruit secured, and the spraying, training, cultivation and gathering of fruit facilitated.



Vines Headed Back for Different Systems of Training, A, the Spur and Fan Systems, B, the Four Arm Renewal System, C, the Two-Arm Kniffin, Munson, Umbrella and Overhead Systems; D, a Pruned Vine in Its Fifth Year, Showing the Method of Training by the Cane System.

Around the city homes, where there is only room for a few vines, grapes are often trained on porches, fences, outbuildings, trees, arbors and stumps. In vineyard practice some growers use only a stake or post, and others use extensive systems of training the vines.

The spur, the fan, the four-arm system, the two-arm kniffin, the Munson, umbrella, overhead and cane systems are a few of the many methods of training adopted by vineyardists.

The writer considers the Munson system of training the best all-round system for use in localities where rains and storms occur during the growing season. It protects the fruit and places it in the most advantageous surroundings for the best results. It makes practicable and facilitates spraying for fungous diseases and insect pests and, after the original outlay for the trellis has been incurred, lessens the cost of all operations and makes them easy and pleasant.

In California trellises are comparatively rare. Stakes only are used. These give the vines the necessary support and allow the vineyard to be cultivated crosswise as well as lengthwise.

Inbreeding.

Breeding in-and-in may tend to fix the characteristics of certain strains or families, but sooner or later the results will be lack of constitutional vigor. Those who adhere strictly to pedigree are better able to avoid inbreeding of the stock than those who do not. While pedigree of itself adds nothing to an animal as an individual, yet it distinctly points to the family in which the individual belongs, and enables the owner to arrive at a partial knowledge of its capacity as a future performer.

Many Varieties of Roses.

A gardener of Berkley, Cal., announces that he is planning to graft 2,000 varieties of roses on one bush and expects to show the bloom of almost every variety known in the United States.

SECURE HEALTHY PLANT GROWTH

Proper regulation of moisture is the greatest factor in securing healthy plant growth. While plants can withstand great extremes in temperature, corresponding extremes in moisture will surely tend to ruin if not kill even the strongest.

Water should be given only when needed, and then in such copious quantities that the soil is thoroughly soaked. When potting plants space should always be left at the top for pouring in water. An inch and a half will suffice.

Consider the kind of plant you are watering. Soft-stemmed kinds, especially those with large leaves, will require much more water than hard-wooded, slow growing kinds. While the former easily recover from drought the hard-wooded suffer permanently from extremes.

The character of the soil should also regulate watering. Heavy clay soils sour easily while very light loamy soils dry out quickly, and unless carefully watched plants in them will wilt. In either case it is better to water thoroughly and less frequently than to water sparingly and often.

The seasons and time of day should also be watched. Plants not in active growth should be watered sparingly until they have regained their foliage. Watering in the evening just before dark greatly aids fungous diseases as the foliage remains wet through the night.

Increase of Pig.

The feeder should try to keep the pig steadily increasing in weight from one-half to one pound each day on an average.

Currying Cows.

The man who said it is all bosh to curry the cows was either lazy or crazy. Get out your curry comb.

FEARED FOR HIS CHARACTER

Disciple of Bacchus Evidently Realized That Circumstances Looked Bad for Him.

Harry was a faithful servant of a large cotton planter whom he called after the manner of slavery days M Sam (Marse Sam). At stated intervals Harry was wont to get gloriously drunk, and one night in the fall, after a day in town, the mules hitched to his wagon drew up before the lot of the plantation, with Harry prostrate and snoring in the bottom of the wagon. Here one of his numerous progeny, a boy named Job, discovered him, and unable to awaken his father, or to secure any assistance from Harry's disgusted wife, he appealed to the planter, who had the mules unhitched, covered Harry with a blanket and with his own hands dragged the wagon under a shed.

Next morning Harry woke hazily and sat up, rubbing his eyes. "Job!" he cried aloud, "hurrah heer, Job!" and when Job had come under the shed, "How come I here?"

Job sulkily explained how it had happened.

"Did M Sam pull me under here?" asked Harry in dismay. "Great Lordy, I feared he t'ink I mus drunk!"—Kansas City Star.

ERUPTION COVERED BODY

"Three years ago this winter I had a breaking out that covered my whole body. It itched so it seemed as if I should go crazy. It first came out in little pimples on my back and spread till it covered my whole body and limbs down to my knees, also my arms down to my elbows. Where I scratched it made sores, and the terrible itching and burning kept me from sleeping. I tried several remedies all to no purpose. Then I concluded to try the Cuticura Remedies. I used the Cuticura Soap and Cuticura Ointment, also the Resolvent, for about four months and they completely cured me of eczema. I have had no return of the disease since. I never had a good night's rest after the skin eruption first broke out till I commenced using the Cuticura Soap and Ointment. I had only used them a few days before I could see they were beginning to heal, and the terrible itching was gone.

"Those that lived in the house at the time know how I suffered and how the Cuticura Soap and Ointment cured me. I never take a bath without using the Cuticura Soap, and I do not believe there are better remedies for any skin disease than the Cuticura Soap and Ointment." (Signed) Miss Sarah Calkins, Waukegan, Ill., Mar. 16, 1911. Although Cuticura Soap and Ointment are sold by druggists and dealers everywhere, a sample of each, with 32-page book, will be mailed free on application to "Cuticura," Dept. L, Boston.

FOR THE WOMAN WHO THINKS AND FEELS.

Some women complain that they periodically suffer from dull and heavy feelings, or dizziness in the head, nervousness, pain and bearing down feelings which should not occur to the normal healthy woman. But most every woman is subject to these pains at some time in her life, due to abnormal conditions in life, such as corsets, over-taxed strength, bad air, poor or improper food, wet feet, sluggish liver, etc. A regulator and female tonic made from native medicinal roots with pure glycerin, and without the use of alcohol, called

SMALL BOY TOOK PICTURE OF SISTER IN WORK RIG.

Now She Has to Pay Him 25 Cents for a Print Each Time Her Best Beau Is to Call, and Youth Rejoices.

Perhaps the orneriest, meanest small boy extant lives in New York. This boy's sister, who is of marriageable age, gave him a cheap camera for his birthday recently. The boy used his camera for legitimate purposes for a few days, but that way of using the machine finally palled upon him and he thought up a scheme.

He waited until his sister got herself rigged out for her share of the work in the weekly housecleaning. Then, unbeknownst to her, he took a full length snapshot of her just as she was. The young woman is pretty and decidedly winsome looking, but this negative, taken of her by her small brother, shows her standing with a broom in her hand, clad in a loose, voluminous, ornate calico wrapper, with a towel tied around her head and with her curl-papered hair, giving her the appearance of a beetle.

The boy developed the negative and made a print of it. When he showed it to his sister she thought it was rather funny, not suspecting the "edge" which the negative gave the small boy over her.

"He's a-comin' tonight, ain't he?" said the small boy after showing his sister the print.

"He? Who? Mind your own business, kid!" said the sister after the manner of sisters thus addressed by younger brothers in such connections.

"He's a-comin' tonight," repeated the small boy. "How much do you give me for the picture of you?"

Then she saw the connection.

"Why, you little incorrigible!" she said, "what do you—"

"Gimme a quarter and I won't show it to him," said the boy in a business like tone.

And he stood pat. Expostulations and pleadings didn't go. He held out for his terms, which were 25 cents, payable in advance, no more, no less.

She promptly tore it up and put it in the fire. But the boy still had the negative hidden away, and on the very next occasion when his sister's young man was due to call in the evening he sprang another print from the negative upon her. He got another quarter for the surrender of this print, too.

He knows a good thing when he has got it, does this extraordinarily mean, small boy, and he has been flashing one of the prints from the negative upon his sister every night upon which her may-be youth is due for a visit. She has offered him $1 for the negative, but the boy prefers to draw interest instead of sacrificing his principal, and he retains possession of the negative up to the hour of going to press.

Cure That Failed.

The story recently published in a southern newspaper, to the effect that an ignorant negress had given her little girl a mixture of dog's blood and powdered bone to cure her of a fever, recalls an Indian prescription contained in an old volume entitled "Primitive Superstitions."

An Indian had been desperately hurt in a fight with a grizzly bear, and the medicine man prescribed a mixture of rattlesnakes' heads, worn-out moccasins and chewing tobacco, seasoned with pepper and bear's grease, of which the patient was to drink a pint every half hour. "He was a brave man," says the story, "but he died with the utmost expedition." The members of the tribe agreed that the remedy was faultless, and that death was due to the fact that the medicine man had failed to order that it should be administered to the accompaniment of a dance and a yell.

Snug One for a Queen.

Instances of something strangely like humor sometimes creep into the British periodicals, in spite of everything. Among the stories told by the London papers of the late Dr. Robinson Duckworth, canon of Westminster, is one of a somewhat uncourtierly remark which he made once when showing Queen Victoria over Westminster abbey. When they came to the spot where kings and queens lie, Queen Victoria shivered a little and said: "I should not care to be buried here—it seems so cold and damp." "Madam," replied Duckworth, "I assure you it is perfectly dry. You would be quite nice and snug."

It strikes a mere American that the queen's part of this interview shows more humor than the reverend canon's. But Victoria's sense of humor was Teutonic.

A Strike on Babel.

The confusion of tongues had done its destined part, work on the tower of Babel being pretty much suspended when all at once Welsh emerged from the racket.

The sound of consonants being pronounced without the help of vowels was at once seen to cause no small uneasiness in high quarters.

"No use overdoing the business!" these hastily exclaimed, and forthwith called a halt.

As for Welsh, what was done could not, of course, be undone, but the ensuing distribution of languages happily relegated it to the remote corner of a remote island of the sea, so that the embarrassment was by no means what it might have been.—Puck.

Again the G. P.

"My greatest profanity provocation," writes J. S. L., "is to be taken to a church entertainment by my wife and have to remain calm while a gawky, six-footed thing which calls itself a tenor and has a face like a carp, warbles, 'I Wish I Were a Rose.'"

Fruits Comparatively New.

Not until the days of Henry VII. were raspberries, strawberries and cherries known in England.

PRESIDENTS ON TOUR

ARTHUR AND CLEVELAND WERE NOT GOOD TRAVELERS.

Latter Did Not Like Crowds—Harrison Was Impatient—Once Had Train Sidetracked in Woods So He Could Rest.

"If anybody traveling needs rest over Sunday it is a president on a jaunt," said a man who has been out with several presidents. "Fortunately for Mr. Taft, he likes this sort of thing, but I notice that he has ordered rests over Sunday in his itinerary.

"I have traveled with Arthur, McKinley, Cleveland and Harrison on their jaunts. Arthur, in spite of his talent for mixing with a New York crowd, was never equal to the job in the country. If any town in this country is up on the art of catering to any exclusive taste it is Louisville, Ky. Arthur was the first Republican president to go south, and Louisville spread herself to make him feel at home. Political lines were obliterated on the occasion of his visit when he went there to open the cotton exposition. The Pendennis club gave him a banquet fit for a king, but he was glad when it was over.

"When he left Chicago for his hunt in Yellowstone he told Phil Sheridan, who had charge of the party, that he was glad he was going where he could have uninterrupted rest.

"McKinley was not as good a traveler as Taft, but he never showed that he was tired. I heard him say once that he wished railroad companies would make some arrangement by which a log cabin could be attached to a train instead of a Pullman sleeper.

"Cleveland never liked a crowd. He fretted under handshaking and always grunted when he had to make a rear-platform speech. When he visited Chicago with his bride he got the greatest reception ever seen in that city. The fact that Mrs Cleveland broke down under the strain of the excitement may have had something to do with making Cleveland impatient, but the way he raved over the jam and mismanagement of the affair would have melted the type of any newspaper that tried to quote him. When he left the city for Madison, where he was a guest of Colonel Vilas, he expressed himself as delighted over the rest to which he was bound. I saw him at an inaugural ball in Washington. I wouldn't like to repeat what I heard him say about the mob on the floor.

"Harrison was the most impatient presidential traveler of all I ever jaunted with. One night the crowd in Burlington became unmanageable. It was the worst I ever saw. The police were as useless as a lot of wooden soldiers. When the meeting was over and Harrison and his party went to the presidential train, Harrison asked when the train was due at the next stop, Oskaloosa, Ia., where he was to open the Corn Palace the next day. When he was told that the schedule was for noon the following day he requested that the train be sidetracked somewhere for the remainder of the night in order that he might get rest.

"It was so ordered, and the train was run out of Burlington about 40 miles and placed on a siding in the woods. There it remained until after breakfast. For the first time in any presidential jaunt that I ever heard of the president was lost to the people of the country for ten hours. There was no wireless apparatus then.

"The next day, when Harrison and his party reached St. Joseph, Mo., he was routed out of bed at sunrise to take breakfast at the railroad station and talk to the people. I think Harrison came nearer forgetting his Presbyterian pledge then than he ever did before."—New York Sun.

He Has a Past.

"Can you not?" she said sympathetically. The girl loved him.

"No," he cried. "I have a past, and it is only fair that you should know. I would marry no girl on false pretences. She might find it out afterward. I have a past."

"Reveal it," she cried softly. "I could forgive you anything." For the girl loved him.

"I told you that I left my home town to seek my fortune," he said hoarsely. "That is not true. I had to flee it."

"One day—about six o'clock, it was, well I remember the time—a fellow townsman passed me with his little boy. Suddenly the child fell, slipped, stumbled, to the street.

"'Ah, I see it is son down!' I remarked, gazing up at the sky.

"A number of citizens heard me; the news spread, and—well, to make a short story shorter, the town got too hot for me. Can you forgive me for that?"

Shuddering, the girl shrank away from him. Her lips moved, but the power of speech had deserted her. Sadly he reached for his hat.

Intrinsic Values.

"Why do you select Charles instead of George?" asked Maude.

"Well," replied Maymie, "George said I had eyes like violets, cheeks like wild roses, shell-like ears and lips like cherries."

"Very pretty."

"Yes. But Charles said I had eyes like diamonds, teeth like pearls and lips like rubies. It seemed to me that his ideas were much more practical."

Origin of "Mausoleum."

When Mausolus, king of Caria, died his widow, Artemisia, decided to erect over his body the most magnificent tomb that the world should ever see. Sculptors and artists from every known land were put to work and no expense was spared, and for years the work was pursued, though it was not finished even at the death of his widow. It is from this incident that there arose the word "mausoleum," which means a stately tomb.

LUNGS KEPT INFLATED

SIMPLE APPARATUS THAT MAKES HEART SURGERY POSSIBLE.

A dog's life was sacrificed at the Coates House in Kansas City to show Kansas City surgeons and nearly a hundred others that heart surgery—the sewing up of stab wounds and the removal of bullets—is possible. Those present predicted after the demonstration that such practice would be common among surgeons within five years.

After more than thirty years of work, during the entire period withstanding the bitter attacks of the antivivisectionists, Dr. F. Merill Ricketts, of Cincinnati, and the other pioneers in the field, have perfected a system of administering anesthetics that makes heart surgery possible.

Dr. Ricketts, who gave the demonstration before the Western Surgical association, made his first experiment in 1874. Since then doctors connected with the Rockefeller Institute in New York have pushed the investigation also. Hundreds of animals have been sacrificed in the work, but since the experimental stage was passed the lives of 74 persons already have been saved, and yet only two or three surgeons in the United States have learned the operation.

Formerly the lungs of persons under an anesthetic collapsed, causing death, when the chest was opened by a surgeon. The apparatus used by Dr. Ricketts, consisting of little besides a bellows and a rubber tube, keeps the lungs inflated during the operation.

The anesthetic is administered in air forced into the lungs by the bellows used to keep up artificial respiration. The wonder of the method is to a great extent in its simplicity. Dr. Ricketts in 20 minutes was able to demonstrate to the eager surgeons the entire process of operation on the heart, the lungs and the other bronchial components.

"This development in surgery has passed the experimental stage," Dr. Ricketts said. "Already 178 operations on the heart have been performed, and of these 74 were successful, the patients recovering. This is a wonderful percentage, considering that death was certain otherwise in every case.

"Bullets were removed and knife wounds sewed up. Most of the operations were performed at the Rockefeller institute. By this method of administering anesthetics the patient may be kept alive for hours, permitting the surgeon to perform any operation on the heart, the lungs or any other thoracic organ.

"The apparatus, very simple in itself and in its operation, is easily portable and may be taken by the surgeon anywhere. To a Dr. Williams, a negro, of Chicago, belongs the credit of performing the first successful operation on the heart as long ago as 1893. In a few years the practice will be common."

He Also Serves Who—

If you want to "serve the people" it isn't necessary to run for an office. Work hard, attend to your own business, and pay your bills on the first of the month. Follow that plan and you will be more popular than any statesman, and will have less grief.—Emporia Gazette.

Professor's Remark.

A certain high school professor, who at times is rather blunt in speech, remarked to his class of boys, at the beginning of a lesson, "I don't know why it is—everytime I get up to speak, some fool talks." Then he wondered why the boys burst out into a roar of laughter.—Lippincott's Magazine.

Golden Rule.

Whatever I have tried to do at all, I have tried with all my heart to do well. What I have devoted myself to, I have devoted myself to completely. Never to put one hand on anything on which I could not throw my whole self, and never to affect depreciation of my work, whatever it was, I find now to have been one of my golden rules.—Charles Dickens.

IN GETTING AN ELECTRIC SUCTION CLEANER

DON'T BE DECEIVED and buy one with a cheap motor, small vertical shaft which will soon wear and drop, especially when in connection with a small fan which must necessarily be run at high speed in order to get sufficient power. Such machines make a neat appearance and may do good work while new, but are SHORT LIVED.

After three years' experience with various makes, we sell the BEST the market affords.

MOVING PICTURE OWNERS

Should Be Made to Comply With State Laws.

State Inspector Henry Leahy of Massillon was in the city last week and gave some special attention to conditions connected with moving picture shows. He says the crowds in attendance at some of these shows and the lack of proper exits makes it very dangerous in case of panic or fire. The local authorities should join with the state inspector and see that proper protection is furnished at these places of amusement. Below we print a section of the law that should be strictly enforced.

Section 12574. Using hall, theater etc., without certificate, or obstructing aisles. Whoever, being the owner of a hall, theater opera house, church or schoolhouse, or having control thereof individually or as agent of a society or corporation, permits it to be used by public assemblies or schools without having the certificate required by law that it is provided with the means of speedy and safe ingress and egress, or blocks up the aisles and hallways thereof by placing chairs or stools therein, or permits them to be occupied by persons standing therein or by any obstruction endangering the safety of persons therein, or cuts off easy escape and egress therefrom, shall be fined not more than one thousand dollars. (R. S. Sec. 7010.)

The Buckeye Boys Corn Growing Contest.

Over one hundred boys are now assured for the trip to Washington, next December, and the number is increasing.

The Cincinnati Enquirer offers $175 in cash prizes viz: $75, $50, $25, $15, $10, for the best acre.

The Ohio State Board of Agriculture offers in cash prizes $50, $40, $30, $20, $10, $5, $2.50, for the best acre of corn grown by boys in the State.

The Ohio State Fair will pay the expenses of two boys from each county in Ohio this year to attend the State Fair six days. This will be a great trip for the boys and will afford them an opportunity to see the Capital city of Ohio, and learn the lessons of Ohio's great Exposition.

Boys to be eligible to compete for the free trip to the State Fair must be entered in the corn growing contest for the free trip to Washington and the cash prizes.

The important thing at the present time is for every farmer and farmer boy to test every ear of seed corn before planting. Much of the seed corn tests below 60% this year and if half the seed planted won't grow, the boy is licked before he starts. Test seed corn by all means.

Every person interested in this corn campaign should insist that every farm boy in Ohio make an entry in this contest at once. Farm boys are naturally modest and may hesitate to go in. Committees should be organized and a campaign made to get them all in. Some counties expect to have one thousand boys.

Wheat is almost a failure in some of the counties the harvest will not return the seed. The corn crop therefore becomes the more important this year.

Respectfully,
A. P. SANDLES, Sec'y.

Council Meeting

A resolution asking the city engineer to make plans, specifications, and estimates for the new paving in the south end of town was passed by the city council on Monday evening. This pavement is to be laid on State street from the Nickel Plate tracks north to the intersection of Bank street and on Walnut street from State street to St. Clair street. Mayor Smith recommended that the street committee investigate the re-enforced concrete pavement.

A resolution authorizing the laying of a four inch water main on Gillette street was also passed by the council.

A delegation from Richmond attended the meeting and again asked that Painesville furnish lights to the Grand river village. The matter was referred to the water and light committee who were asked to confer with Supt. Collister and the committee from Richmond. It is estimated that the cost of running wires to Richmond will be about $1,000 and the only thing delaying the same is a lack of funds to complete the proposed extension. The committee stated that their village was not as hard up as Painesville and if necessary they could advance the first year's rental at once so as to get the project under way.

Spatinn—Bolender

Mr. Joe Spetinn of Painesville and Miss Pansy Bolender of Cleveland were married in Cleveland, Saturday, May 11, 1912, Rev. Namman of Calvary Evangelical church officiating. The young couple will make their home in Painesville.

Mr. Spation has been employed for some time in the office of the Educational Supply Company and has made many warm friends since his residence in this city.

TELEGRAPH-REPUBLICAN

"Owned by Jay Moodey's Father, a Cleveland Millionaire."

The "cub" reporter of the Telegraph-Republican distinguished himself when Mrs. Beach, the pedestrian passed through Painesville on her walk from New York to Chicago. The following is from the New York Globe, written by a reporter who is attending upon the report of Mrs. Beach's travels:

"Mrs Beach had a busy trip over the twenty-nine miles from Geneva to Willoughby. From Painesville to Willoughby she was met by scores of persons who came on foot, in wagons and in automobiles to see her and to wish her luck. Just before she reached Painesville she was greeted by that famous young reporter, Jay Moodey of the Painesville Telegraph-Republican, who is the only newsgetter on the paper, which is owned by his father, a Cleveland millionaire. Reporter Moodey came out in his $3,000 touring car, which he left carelessly by the roadside and walked through the town with Mrs. Beach. Reporter Moodey offered the other newspaper men with Mrs. Beach cigarettes out of a gold case, and confided to them that his salary was $10 a week, "Which is more than I'm worth," he added frankly."

"Reporter Moodey had aroused the town, and when he and Mrs. Beach passed by the Court House and City Hall steps were so crowded with people that it looked as if a convention had gathered there to have its picture taken."

Municipal Plant Succeeds.

Geneva, May 2.—The United Light & Power Company has been forced to quit business at Painesville on account of the success of the municipal plant and the failure to get a franchise renewal. The company will continue to furnish juice for Geneva, Madison and Fairport, and has adopted a new scale of rates which went into effect May 1.—Ashtabula Standard.

Sad Death

The deceased is survived by a widow and two children.

It is said that Proudfoot has been in ill health for the past few weeks and this fact may have caused the despondency which prompted him to end his life. He was a son of Ed Proudfoot of Mentor.

Minnelli Bros. Creed

Big Genial Frank Minnelli dropped in the Herald Office today to announce the twelfth annual visit of the ever popular Minnelli Bros Company to our city, Monday, May 20th. When asked concerning the theatrical outlook for the coming season he said "I believe it will be a great season, I believe we have the best company we ever had, I believe the Painesville people want to see Miss Gennell and her company of ladies and gentlemen, I believe in working not waiting, in laughing not weeping, in boosting not knocking, I believe that a man gets what he goes after if he has the goods and is sincere, I believe in today and the work I am doing, in tomorrow and the work I have to do, and in the sure reward the future holds for a hustler, I believe in courtesy, in honesty, in good cheer, I believe no man is down and out until he has lost confidence in himself. I have confidence in our attraction to hold the friends we have made and that we will make many new ones next week—A pretty good creed! Don't you think so?

Don't be surprised if you have an attack of rheumatism this spring. Just rub the affected parts freely with Chamberlain's Liniment and it will soon disappear. Sold by all dealers.

For rheumatism you will find nothing better than Chamberlain's Liniment. Try it and see how quickly it gives relief. For sale by all dealers.

ABOUT PEOPLE AND PLACES

Uncle Jud's campaign must have the Spring fever.

For a big man President Taft gets over a lot of ground during a campaign.

—o—

How would it do for the Mayor to appoint a policeman to enforce the civil service law.

—o—

Mr Bryan not only blocks traffic wherever he goes, but the people seem to enjoy it.

—o—

Miss Jane Adams of Chicago will give the commencement address at Lake Erie college this year.

—o—

If policemen can break the civil service rules how can they expect other people to obey the laws.

—o—

The fellows who never like to be with a loser are leaving Governor Harmon's ship and taking to the life-boats.

—o—

We have voted three times for William Jennings Bryan and nothing would give us more pleasure than to be able to do it once more.

—o—

The Colonel had better keep an eye on that "cub" reporter and give him a raise or some metropolitan paper will steal him, cigarette case and all.

—o—

James Rider, aged 85 who has been an inmate of the county infirmary for several years, passed away at that institution on Friday morning after a short illness.

—o—

The paper mills are sending out notices that all grades of writing paper and envelopes have been increased in prices from 10 to 20 per cent.

—o—

Plans for a big Taft rally in the park in the near future with the Citizens' band and flags and banners are now being completed by the leading Republicans of the city.—Telegraph Republican.

—o—

That "cub" reporter on the Telegraph-Republican is certainly a sport and shines on all necessary occasions. Jay will be the real editor of the Telegraph one of these days if "dad" will keep on buying newspaper stock.

—o—

Mrs Sophonia A. Barton, of East Erie street, passed away Thursday morning at 10 o'clock, at the home of her son, Harry Barton at Richmond. Mrs. Barton, who lived all of her life in Painesville, was 72 years of age.

—o—

If policemen are allowed to electioneer and run for office under the civil service rules, probably Mayor Smith would loan a few of them to the Taft machine on election day to club that insurgent crowd of Roosevelt voters away from the polls.

—o—

The oldest member of the D. A. R. Mrs. H. J. Hill of San Francisco, who is 104 years of age, will cast her first vote in November and says it will be for Taft. Were it not for the fact that we might be called unchivalrous we would say that this poor old lady has reached her second childhood.

—o—

B. F. Crafool is the most clever republican politician in Lake county. He can tell the difference between a band wagon and a funeral car at long distance. While all the other fellows are sitting on the fence watching the procession go by, Frank is on the top seat of the Roosevelt wagon and is going through Lake county like a whirlwind.

—o—

State Inspector H. L. Leahy, who has spent several days in this vicinity inspecting factories and picture shows closed the "Happy Hour" theater in Fairport Friday. The state law prohibits frame buildings being used as moving picture theaters and as the "Happy Hour" theater was in a wooden building the inspector ordered it closed.

—o—

Within a week it is expected that the first oil well on the east slope of the mountain will be sunk by S. F. Showalter. Mr Showalter and Jennie B. Showalter of Pittsburg, Pa., have obtained leases on about 2,000 acres of land lying east of Little Mountain and the new company expects to commence work at once sinking wells for oil.

—o—

The May meeting of the Lake County Horticultural society will be held at Mentor, O., May 18, at the Methodist church. Subject, "Lawn and Garden Flowers for the Home Garden." Essayist, John Merkel. A musical program will be furnished by H. C. King of Mentor. This is an all-day meeting with basket dinner. All are cordially invited to attend. Stop 60, C. P. & A.

—o—

A small boom has been launched for Judge A. G. Reynolds, of this city for governor. No one has been able to find out whether the Judge is a Roosevelt or Taft candidate, and any prominent citizen who is capable of maintaining a perch on the fence for a certain length of time without disclosing his convictions is an available candidate for governor or any other state office. The Judge has always been very fearless in announcing his contempt for democrats but we'll bet yer can't get him to take sides in the Taft-Roosevelt scrap.

Mr. Michael Devanney, one of Gov. Harmon's campaign managers has sent a letter to Lake county asking for the names of 1000 democrats, to whom he wishes to write a letter and send Harmon literature. This Mr Devanney is the same man, who in 1908 wrote a letter proposing to buy delegates in Ohio for Harmon after they had been instructed to vote for Bryan. Below is the traitorous letter Devanney wrote when he and Harmon wished to betray Bryan and that was only four years ago.

Cincinnati, O., June 29, 1908.

Dear Sir: In a conference with our mutual friends, Mr. —— of —— he advised me that you were in touch with the two delegates from the —— district.

He suggested that you see Mr. —— of —— and have him see the delegates of that place (whose name he did not remember) and have him together with Mr. —— at —— meet Mr. —— at Columbus on the evening of July 2, so that arrangements may be made for the trip to Denver.

Mr. —— of Cincinnati will meet them and take care of their transportation to Denver. (By this letter, my dear Mr. —— you will see there is 'something doing' and whilst endorsements have been given in your district, I hope that your two delegates can see their way clear to vote for Judge Harmon on the first ballot at Denver.)

This, my dear Mr. —— is asking you to put yourself to a great deal of inconvenience, but I sincerely hope that for the good of the cause you will be able to find time to accomplish what I ask of you.

Thanking you very sincerely, I am,
Very truly yours,
MICHAEL DEVANNEY

DEMOCRATIC PREFERENCE

Below we publish a facsimile of the official ballot for the expression of a presidential preference in Lake county. Every democrat should call for this ballot at the primaries May 21st, and remember that a vote for Harmon is a vote for the old style Cleveland democracy, which opposes direct election of U. S. Senators and opposition to the Initiative and Referendum, etc., while a vote for Wilson means a vote in favor of the Bryan style of democracy and progressiveism. A vote for Wilson is the only way to express your choice for a Bryan candidate for president as Champ Clark is not a candidate for the Ohio delegates.

Real Inducement for Work.

The simplest affection may become a thing of beauty, the love of any human being comes to our lives as the great revealer. By this alone we hear and see. It is also the great health giver. Our work no longer continues selfish when the thought of another is constantly with us; there is always an avenue for relief from the deadening routine and tedium. Work with a thought of some one else is living work, and that which is living becomes beautiful.—Arthur L. Salmon.

Seek the Best.

Nobleness springs to our eyes wherever we look, rich stores of poetic inspiration, if one has receptivity large enough to take it in and reveal it touched with emotion, the magic light of the imagination. Bravery, goodness and truth lie on every side. We need not seek the exceptional for themes, the usual affords more than enough. Look closely with understanding into the common, you will find everywhere the uncommon, the wonderful.—The Christian Register.

Marines.

Marines—soldiers serving on shipboard—date back to the year 1664, when an order in council, dated October 16, authorized 1,200 English soldiers to be raised and formed into a regiment. More regiments were later formed, and by 1759 the marines numbered 18,000 men. In the latter years of the French wars they numbered 32,000. The marines are today a feature of every navy, and in most countries officers of the marines are equal in rank with those in the army and navy.

Tailor's Cutting Retort.

A newly elected Australian labor M. P. returns his occupation as "tailor's cutter"—an avocation rarely represented in parliament. Some time ago, says the London Chronicle, Australia had a remarkably eloquent and witty tailor, who became not only an M. P., but a minister of the crown. To him a new governor made this maladroit remark: "I hear, Mr Jones, you were once a tailor?" "Yes, my lord, I was." "And how are you engaged now?" "Taking your excellency's measure."

Sold Wife to Friend.

At the village of Utznach, Switzerland, the other day, a curious sale took place. With her own consent a woman was sold by her husband to another man, an Italian, and a friend of the Swiss couple. The price asked by the affectionate husband was four dollars. To further "legalize" the bargain, the Italian procured two witnesses to the transaction and had a contract written on stamped government paper.

BUSINESS DEAL BY A KING

Kalakaua Sold to His Legislature Some Cannon Given Him by the Austrian Emperor.

The digging up of three rusty—but loaded and ready to go off—shells in Kapiolani Park recently, and the facts of their history as dug up for the Advertiser, started a flood of old-time "revolution" reminiscences, one of the most interesting of which dealt with the presentation to Hawaii of the particular Austrian battery with which the old shells were connected. It appears that when King Kalakaua was making his royal tour of Europe, being entertained by kings and emperors, he wandered to the capital of the Austrian monarch, Emperor Franz Joseph. By way of impressing upon his Sandwich Island royal cousin the greatness of Austria-Hungary, the emperor took Kalakaua to a grand field review, where Austrian gunners shot holes in targets to demonstrate the Austrian field pieces had no peers existing, especially when Austrian marksmen sighted them.

Kalakaua was properly impressed, so much so, in fact, that he ventured to ask the price of a battery, such as he had seen in use. He intimated that he might find business, at the Crossroads of the Pacific, for just such wicked implements of death, especially as the "Supremacy of the Pacific" idea was incubating in his headpiece. He was told, very politely, that Austria's cannons were not on the market, but that, as from monarch to monarch, the ruler of Austria might make the ruler of the Sandwich Islands a gift of a few guns. The gift was made and Kalakaua shipped his battery to Honolulu, where it was used later in Kapiolani Park to scatter the revolutionists out against the republic and perched along Diamond Head ridge. The sequel to the presentation is the funny part of the story, however.

Kalakaua came home in triumph from his trip and his Austrian guns barked out a welcome salute, which reminded him. The trip had cost money even if there had been no hotel bills, so Rex sat him down and made out a bill to the legislature for his guns. The figures on the bill called for $21,000, which the legislature had to appropriate and pay over to the private treasurer of the royal household.

For a gift those guns came high.—Pacific Advertiser.

To Heat City With Electricity.

It is planned to electrically heat the dwellings and business houses of Stavanger, Norway, and the board of directors of the electric light plant at that place has asked permission from the city council to make contracts up to a consumption of 100 horse power. It has been suggested that the price for current thus used shall be $6.70 per horse power (746 watts) per year. It is also planned to heat the government and city buildings in that manner. The population of Stavanger is 38,000 and the city has water power facilities to furnish 25,000 horse power for electrical purposes.

Home Mascot.

The household cat has the commendation of no less a personage than the president of the University of California, who says, regarding this little animal:

"I am one of the persons who is well disposed toward the household cat. It has always seemed to me that the humming of the tea kettle was cheerier when the cat is content on the rug. Whatever the cause of it, the cat is an individual which has made homes a little sweeter and gladder and by which many a lonely woman has been cheered."

Good Sense a Prized Possession.

Good sense is a fund, slowly and painfully accumulated through the labor of centuries. It is a jewel of the first water, whose value he alone understands who has lost it or who observes the lives of others who have lost it. For my part, I think no price too great to pay for gaining it and keeping it for the possession of eyes that see and a judgment that discerns. One takes good care of his sword that it be not bent or rusted, with greater reason should he give heed to his thoughts.—Charles Wagner.

"Gag" That Upset Bernard

Sam Bernard acknowledges that he is a past master at "gagging" on the stage, but he confesses that a sister artist entirely upset him one night, when she came out with a carefully prepared interpolation without telling him what to expect.

"Will you please," said the actress, "pass me my diminutive argenteus truncated cone, convex on its summit, and semi-perforated with symmetrical indentations?"

She was asking for her thimble.—Sunday Magazine.

Not the Same Thing

"Here's Rumsy told me he was a lawyer and I find he is nothing but a hanger-on of saloons."

"I heard him and he told you the literal truth. He didn't say he was a lawyer; he said he had a steady practice at the bar."

Foreign Relations

Teacher—If I were cousin german to you what relation to you would my father be?

Dick—Dutch uncle, of course!—Puck.

Bewildering

"Hasn't that actor got things rather mixed?"

"In what way?"

"He told me in the farce he is in now, he is playing a crooked part straight."

Retribution

"When the milkman went on the stand as a witness, he met with retributive justice."

"In what way?"

"In the way the lawyers pumped him."

COMMENTS ON THE ASTOR WILL

RECTOR THINKS LATE MILLIONAIRE SHOULD HAVE LEFT MORE TO CHARITY.

TELLS WHAT SHOULD BE DONE

Clergyman Says Make Impossible the Accumulation of Large Fortunes and Advocates Government Control of Many Things.

Philadelphia, Pa.—The Rev. George Chalmers Richmond, rector of St. John's Episcopal church, delivered a startling sermon May 12. His remarks in the criticism of the Astor will are of public interest in connection with the criticisms which have been made throughout the country. In this respect Dr. Richmond had this to say:

"We are filled with a patriotic shame after reading the will of John Jacob Astor, which was made public in New York. He was a man of great wealth and as such he stands forth at the bar of judgment before the Christian conscience of the American people. What our American millionaire must remember is this: That if he expects to shine in glory hereafter he must reveal certain traits of the gleam to us who are his contemporaries.

Compares Wills.

"What a difference between this will and that of Dr. Francis Bacon, the great surgeon of Yale, who died last month. He was a poor boy. Through toil and skill in handling his small income he left an estate of $[illegible]. Of this $[illegible] goes to a tuberculosis institution. A few thousand go to other equally worthy movements and the residue to help poor boys through Yale. Oh, how much [illegible] as such a man [illegible] Astor! [illegible] to be able to leave more than $2[illegible] most after [illegible] [illegible]. We must [illegible] that such wills as Astor's will be impossible in the future. America is no place for multimillionaires. We are a nation set in the universe for the building up of God's kingdom of love and righteousness. We need to look ahead and make laws which will prevent fortunes like this from reaching such a high figure. It is a disgrace to have such fortunes of $[illegible] in these days. The state must step in and settle this question or some day we shall have a congress practically socialistic in both houses. And then we shall see what property is worth in the eyes of our masses of toilers who are so crushed and beaten in some of our industries as in Russia.

Tells What Should be Done.

"Make such fortunes impossible of accumulation. If that seems impossible owing to the property rights of American labor, then enact that after the death of the owner of the fortune all but $2,000,000 goes into the treasury of city or state where he resided.

"Confiscate all coal lands so that in the future we shall have no strikes in that business.

"Take over for government control the Standard Oil Co. and the tobacco trust as much as they do [illegible] to report their [illegible].

"Have the government own and run all express companies, telegraph and telephone concerns. If all this could be accomplished the kingdom of God will be hastened mightily in our midst."

500 FALL IN MEXICAN BATTLE

Rebels and Federals Are Killed and Wounded as Government Forces Win a Victory.

Conejos, Mexico.—Twelve hours of brisk fighting on the desert plains 300 miles south of the American border between a force of 5,000 rebels under General Orozco and an equally strong body of federals under General Huerta resulted in a decided advantage to the government.

The fighting began at daybreak and at nightfall the sandy mesas between here and Yermo, where the insurrectos were gradually forced back, were covered with dead and wounded. Nearly 500 are believed to have been killed and wounded on both sides.

Taft Signs Pension Bill.

Washington, D. C.—President W. H. Taft has signed the Sherwood dollar a day pension bill making that measure a law. The pen with which the bill was signed was presented by President Taft to Col. John McElroy, editor of the National Tribune, one of those who witnessed the signing.

The bill as finally agreed to carried an increase of $[illegible],000,000 for pensions during the first year of its operation. During the first three years the increased payments to veterans will aggregate $72,000,000.

Man Wants to Wear Dresses.

Atlanta, Ga.—From a prominent South Georgia [illegible] in Ware county, Controller General William A. Wright has just received a letter expressing a desire to wear women's attire and asking permission to do so.

"I have very much the appearance of a woman and when dressed as such and wearing long hair I look a perfect figure of a female and would not be noticed as being a man. I wish to adopt this attire because it is more suitable for me than male attire."

Pays Tribute to Southerner.

Washington, D. C.—Nearly half a century after becoming his captor at the battle of Franklin, Tenn., Congressman Isaac R. Sherwood of Ohio arose on the floor of the house and paid a last tribute to the memory of the late Congressman George W. Gordon of Memphis, Tenn. The house met in special session to eulogize General Gordon and chief interest centered in the tribute of General Sherwood, who fought on the other side in that memorable battle. Nearly a score of other members spoke.

DIRECT ELECTIONS O. K'D

AMENDMENT TO CONSTITUTION FAVORED BY HOUSE.

Resolution Has Already Passed Senate and Must be Ratified by Three-fourths of Legislatures.

Washington, D. C.—By a vote of 237 to 39 the house passed the resolution declaring for an amendment to the constitution providing for the direct election of United States senators. The resolution has already passed the senate. The amendment thus initiated by congress must be ratified by three-fourths of the state legislatures before it will become law. A number of states have by resolution declared for direct election of senators. This action has no force, however, as has the action of the legislatures that have ratified the income tax amendment.

The resolution as modified by the senate on motion of Senator Bristow, provides for federal supervision of the senatorial elections. As passed the resolution is as follows:

That in lieu of the first paragraph of Section III of article I of the constitution of the United States, and in lieu of so much of paragraph 2 of the same section as relates to the filling of vacancies, the following be proposed as an amendment to the constitution, which shall be valid to all intents and purposes as part of the constitution when ratified by the legislatures of three-fourths of the states:

The senate of the United States shall be composed of two senators from each state elected by the people thereof for six years, and each senator shall have one vote. The electors in each state shall have the qualifications requisite for electors of the most numerous branch of the state legislatures.

When vacancies happen in the representation of any state in the senate, the executive authority of such state shall issue writs of election to fill such vacancies, provided that the legislature of any state may empower the executive thereof to make temporary appointments until the people fill the vacancies by election as the legislature may direct.

This amendment shall not be so construed as to affect the election or term of any senator chosen before it becomes valid as part of the constitution.

SOUTH TRIMBLE, Clerk.
Attest: CHARLES C. BENNETT.

[illegible] after a stubborn resistance of ten years the senate yielded to this reform. When the house passed the resolution declaring for direct election the senate promptly amended it with the federal supervision rider. It was the belief that this rider would kill it on its return to the house, owing to the opposition of members from the south. The house was in no temper to block the passage of the resolution any longer, as the overwhelming vote it received shows.

There were cheers and applause when Speaker Clark announced that the measure had received the two-thirds majority required for a constitutional amendment, and it was predicted that the reform will be accepted by a sufficient number of states to incorporate it into the constitution.

The majority of the state legislatures meet next January and each will probably act on the amendment as speedily as possible. In the cases of other states there will be no new legislatures for another year, so it will be at least two years before the voters will have an opportunity to go to the polls and vote for a senator as they would for a congressman, even if ratification is prompt and general.

WALL PAPER MEN ON TRIAL

Manufacturers and Jobbers, Charged With Violation of Sherman Law, Appear in Federal Court.

Cleveland, O.—Contesting through their attorneys every move of federal officials and every scrap of evidence submitted by the prosecution, eight wall paper manufacturers and jobbers, charged by the government with violation of the Sherman anti-trust law, came to trial before United States Judge William L. Day. The stiff opposition offered by the defense was met in kind by government attorneys. By the ruling out of a mass of testimony given by the government's first witness, Frank Hall of Weehawken, N. J., against whom the defendants are charged with discrimination, the defense claimed a temporary advantage.

Winfield A. Huppuch of Hudson Falls, N. Y., J. B. Pearce of Cleveland, C. C. Aler of Columbus, Norton Newcomb of St. Louis, Charles E. Maxwell of Chicago, R. E. Hobbs of Hoboken, N. J., John McCoy of York, Pa., and George Tull of Glens Falls, N. Y., the defendants, sat together and listened while Hall charged them with conspiring to drive him from business.

Camel Is Party Emblem.

Atlantic City, N. J.—Members of the national Prohibition executive committee in annual session here decided to use the "Original Water Wagon" in their parade at the time of the national convention here in July. A milk white camel, or as near to such as can be obtained, will hump itself ahead of a monster wheel chair pageant on the board walk.

Deputy Sheriff Kills Two.

Knoxville, Tenn.—After David Elliott, a deputy sheriff of Bell county, Kentucky, had killed Luther and James Sizemore he notified his victims' wives, then surrendered to county authorities. Elliott came upon the Sizemores and told Luther to consider himself under arrest, whereupon Sizemore fired. His aim was faulty and Elliott returned the fusillade. Sizemore dropped dead. Aiming to avenge his brother's death, James Sizemore tried to reach a pistol that lay near the corpse and he fell dead.

Harmon Opens Ohio Campaign.

Wooster, O.—In opening his Ohio campaign for the presidential nomination in this city, Governor Harmon spoke bitterly of the effects the attacks of Bryan would have on the Democratic party in the state. He also took up the opposition of Harvey Garber, and, although not mentioning Garber's name, denounced him as the lobbyist and log roller of special interests who expects personal profit from the governor's defeat and the success of the Bryan campaign.

The opera house here was filled.

TEDDY IS CHOICE OF CALIFORNIANS

COLONEL IS VICTORIOUS IN THE STATE PRESIDENTIAL PREFERENTIAL PRIMARY.

CHAMP CLARK ALSO WINNER

Election Is Made Noteworthy by Fact That It Was First Time That Women Have Been Allowed to Vote.

San Francisco, Cal.—Col. Theodore Roosevelt and Champ Clark are the nominees of their parties as the result of the presidential preferential primary. The only question is the size of the majority over their opponents. Clark managers in San Francisco claim that out of the total vote in the state of 100,000 Clark received 75,000 and Wilson 25,000. The indications are that Clark carried every county in the state all the way from a fair majority up to ten to one. Los Angeles is probably for Clark. San Francisco is without doubt for the speaker.

Although La Follette received a heavy vote in the state the Roosevelt managers claim that when all the rural districts where the Roosevelt plurality is exceptionally large are heard from the colonel's vote will be two to one over Taft.

In San Francisco complete returns from 180 precincts out of 350 give Roosevelt 8,471, Taft 6,871, La Follette 3,491.

In Sacramento Roosevelt ran ahead of Taft and Clark far ahead of Wilson. In San Diego Clark's majority is large while La Follette was the choice of the Republicans by a narrow margin.

Alameda county, in which Oakland and Berkeley are located, has given Roosevelt a tremendous plurality.

The election was made noteworthy by the fact that it was the first time that the women of California have been allowed to vote. Women formed clubs in all parts of the state and generally took an active part in the campaign. They probably added 10,000 to the registry in San Francisco alone. The result indicates that this vote largely went to Roosevelt and Clark.

KING OF DENMARK IS DEAD

Frederick VIII, Who Was Brother of Ex-Queen Alexandra of England Succumbs to Pneumonia.

Hamburg.—Frederick VIII, king of Denmark, died here after a long illness. Although it was known that the king was seriously indisposed it was not thought that his illness had reached a critical stage. At the time of his death the members of the king's immediate family and the court physician were at the bedside. The direct cause of King Frederick's death was pneumonia. Several weeks ago the king took a severe cold and although it apparently yielded to treatment at the time, the relief was not permanent.

The king, who was a brother of the ex-Queen Alexandra of England, was born in 1844. He succeeded to the throne of Denmark by virtue of the Danish law of succession on the death of his father, King Christian IX, in 1906. He married the Princess Louise of Sweden in 1869 and has three daughters and four sons, the eldest of the latter being Crown Prince Christian, who will succeed his father as head of the Danish monarchy.

Frederick was probably the most popular and beloved monarch who ever occupied the Danish throne. Of quiet, highly cultured bearing, he led a simple and peaceful life for a man of such high rank. Although he was not a politician in any sense of the word, King Frederick's chief activities were confined to thoroughly acquainting himself with the big topics of the day concerning the welfare of the country and his subjects.

INSTRUCTS FOR ROOSEVELT

Maryland State Republican Convention Abides by Wishes of Preference Primaries.

Baltimore, Md.—Although the Taft men were in control of a majority of the 129 delegates to the state Republican convention, they made no effort to defeat the instructions of the preference primaries which were for Colonel Roosevelt, and as a result the 16 delegates, eight chosen by Taft and a similar number by Roosevelt's adherents, were instructed to vote for the colonel at the Chicago convention.

President Taft's administration was endorsed.

New Hampshire for Clark.

Concord, N. H.—The entire Democratic delegation from New Hampshire to Baltimore will vote for Champ Clark for the nomination. Although there had been rumors of a split when the 700 delegates gathered for the state convention, they were soon dissipated by the strong pro-Clark sentiment, which crystallized later into a resolution expressing the preference for the speaker which was unanimously adopted. Four delegates at large were chosen and they were "morally bound" to vote for Mr. Clark.

Swims Mile in 23 Minutes.

Detroit, Mich.—Rose Pitonof, 17, of Boston, who claims to be the champion girl swimmer of the world, swam a mile in the Detroit river in 23 minutes and 45 seconds and incidentally rescued a drowning man en route. The man Miss Pitonof rescued was Charles Woodward of Detroit, her competitor in the race. Woodward was taken with cramps. The girl reached him as he was going down the second time, grabbed his bathing suit and held him up until the patrol boat came up and took him aboard.

CUTS COMMERCE COURT

HOUSE PASSES BIG APPROPRIATION MEASURE.

Lower Branch of Congress Puts Through Bill Asking $34,000,000 for Government.

Washington, D. C.—The legislative, executive and judicial appropriation bill, carrying an appropriation of approximately $34,000,000, passed the house. The bill contains several important changes in existing laws, including a provision abolishing the commerce court. The bill also consolidates the bureau of manufactures and the bureau of statistics in the department of commerce and labor. The consolidated bureau is to be known as the bureau of foreign and domestic commerce. This bureau will be in effect a tariff board. Another section of the bill abolishes the bureau of trade relations in the state department. The house rejected a provision in the bill abolishing the mints at San Francisco, New Orleans and Carson City and six assay offices. No record vote was taken on the final passage of the bill.

The house passed the bill cutting off all appropriation for the commerce court, leaving that tribunal stranded after July 1 next.

The senate passed the Heyburn bill authorizing the Philippine government to issue bonds not to exceed $10,000,000 in addition to the indebtedness already incurred for the purpose of providing funds for public improvements in the Philippines. The term of the bonds is limited to 10 years and the interest rate to 4½ per cent.

BRAINS WIFE, CUTS HIS THROAT

Wealthy Farmer Brutally Beats Woman to Death and Then Tries to End His Own Life.

Beaver, Pa.—Frank Attle, a very wealthy farmer, it is alleged, brutally murdered his wife, a divorcee and former society belle of East Liverpool, O., by beating her on the head with a poker at his farm near Frankfort Springs, this county.

After attempting to conceal the crime by throwing the body of the woman in a creek close by his home it is alleged the man sought to end his life by cutting his throat. It is expected that he will live. The man in extenuation of his crime alleges that his wife was attempting to kill two children by his first wife, who committed suicide two years ago.

DR. HIBBEN IS INAUGURATED

Great Throng Attends the Formal Installation of the New Head of Princeton University.

Princeton, N. J.—In the presence of thousands of visitors, alumni, college professors, students and their friends and relatives, Dr. John Grier Hibben was formally inaugurated May 11 as president of Princeton university.

The inauguration exercises began at 11 o'clock and consisted of the singing of a chorale, the reading of Scripture and the offering of prayer, the administering of the oath of office to the president and the presentation to him of the charter of the university and the keys of Nassau hall. These exercises were followed by the president's inaugural address, a hymn and a benediction.

TO PROVIDE EXPERT FARMERS

One Million Dollars Is Given by a Chicago Firm to Make Scientific Agriculturists.

Chicago, Ill.—A movement to put an agriculturist in all the counties of every state to make a study of local conditions and suggest plans of scientific farm management, received impetus with the announcement of a gift of $1,000,000 from a Chicago firm to further the plan.

The project is favored by the crop improvement committee of the council of grain exchanges, which includes mercantile bodies in many of the principal cities of the United States. It is intended to start with expenditure of $1,000 in each of the 100 selected counties.

Warns All Churches in Ohio.

Columbus, O.—Attorney General Hogan in an opinion to Prosecutor J. G. O'Donnell of Miami county urges churches and societies to cease soliciting funds from candidates for public office for the reason that such practice conflicts with the corrupt practice act.

Referring to the alleged practice of some churches and societies soliciting candidates because they are candidates, Mr. Hogan says: "I am of the opinion that when the organizations and societies realize that these practices are contrary to the law they will cheerfully discontinue them."

Frigate Pensacola Is Burned.

San Francisco, Cal.—The old frigate Pensacola, which was first under command of Admiral Farragut, later a flagship on foreign stations, and in recent years a training ship anchored in Yerba Buena station, was set on fire in a remote section of the bay near Hunters Point and is now only a blackened hulk.

Once the Pensacola was a full rigged ship of the line, the pride of the navy, and carried the flag through the Civil war and later to the ports of Europe and the far east.

One Is Killed, 34 Injured.

Kokomo, Ind.—Howard Beattie of Kokomo was killed and thirty-four persons injured, several seriously, when a crowded Indiana Union traction car collided with a Wabash Valley car south of here. The accident occurred on a stretch of straight track near a switch where the two cars were to have passed.

Both cars telescoped as far back as the smoking compartments. The fatality list was shortened by the fact that most of the passengers were in the rear of the coaches.

CLERK AT PEN IS SUSPENDED

I. N. REX IS RELEASED BY ORDER OF T. B. JONES THE CHIEF WARDEN.

ARE AT WORK ON THE BOOKS

Expert Accountants From Auditor's Office Are Examining Accounts to Ascertain the Exact Amount of the Shortage.

Columbus.—Following the discovery of an apparent shortage in his accounts said to approximate nearly $5,000, Chief Clerk I. N. Rex of the Ohio penitentiary has been suspended by Warden T. B. Jones.

This discovery was made by E. F. Brown, financial officer of the Ohio state board of administration. It was reported at once to that board and to Warden Jones.

When confronted with the evidences of the disclosure made before Warden Jones, Chief Clerk Rex broke down and cried, declaring that an examination of his books would show everything to be all right.

Accountants at Work.

Recently two examiners from the auditor of state's office, Wheeler A. Wikoff and John A. Will of Columbus, began work on the accounts of all the officials at the penitentiary. This examination, of course, will include in its scope the accounts of Chief Clerk Rex.

Financial Supervisor Brown, who discovered the alleged shortage, declined to state just what it appeared to be. "I will only say that my examination of the books, begun a few days ago, disclosed an apparent shortage," said he.

Supervisor Brown then returned to the penitentiary to again pursue the investigations further. His work will be augmented by that of Examiners Wikoff and Will of the auditor of state's department.

Handled $300,000 a Year.

It is estimated that the money passing through his hands exceeds more than $300,000 annually. He is aided in his work by prisoners detailed because of their special fitness for bookkeeping, by the warden.

The chief clerk handles all the prisoners' funds, all moneys that are taken from them at the time of their arrival, and money that is sent to them by relatives and friends. These funds are retained in his custody, to be returned to the prisoners upon their liberation or paid out to them in small sums during the period of their incarceration.

Chief Clerk Rex was appointed to his present position when the Democratic administration came into power at the institution three years ago. He was appointed by the board of managers, which body was wiped out of existence when the board of administration assumed control of the penitentiary and other institutions.

Rex was appointed from Tiffin, Seneca county. He held a county position there before coming to Columbus to take his state job. The news of his suspension came as a great surprise as he was regarded as a most competent official.

WILL NOT PAY SEMI-MONTHLY.

School Board Won't Divide Salaries Into Bi-Weekly Installments.

Columbus.—The plan to pay the teachers of the public schools semi-monthly instead of in 10 equal installments throughout the school year, which was proposed several weeks ago by Socialist members of the school board, has been favored by but six out of 171 teachers. Those voting were third and fourth grade and junior high school teachers. The majority favored the plan of paying the second week of school in the fall and every four weeks thereafter through to the end of the school year in June.

MOTHER OF 13 IS SHOT.

Akron.—Jealousy caused Norman Brockenridge, aged fifty-four, to attempt to kill his wife here. Brockenridge went home and when he learned his wife was away he became enraged. On her return he emptied the contents of a revolver at her. Only one bullet took effect. It lodged in her head, close to the brain. She is the mother of thirteen children, ten of whom are living at home and witnessed the deed.

COULDN'T AFFORD BURIAL.

Dayton.—Declaring that she lacked the funds with which to give her child a decent burial, Anna Louise Newman was taken into custody and is said to have admitted placing the babe recently found in a burlap sack under a South Park clubhouse.

Columbus.—While there is no apparent motive for a twelve-year-old boy ending his life, Coroner Hanes is satisfied Ernest Burnett of Brice Station purposely hanged himself. The boy was found dead by Clarence Sangher and Elijah Motz, two of his young companions, when they went to a structure near the school building. He had tied one end of a stout cord around a rafter and fastened the other about his neck. Then he stepped off of a raised platform. The boy asked his teacher three times to be excused from the school building.

Canton.—An O. T. & L. interurban car containing many passengers, narrowly escaped disaster when a deliberate attempt was made to wreck it near Oreentown, 12 miles north of Canton. Supposedly by enemies of the road, a heavy tie was placed directly across the track at the bottom of a steep grade. The motorman saw the obstruction and threw on the reverse, but the car struck the heavy timber with a crash. For a moment it seemed inevitable that the car would topple over, but it righted itself.

HIT WOMAN WITH IRON.

Heavy Bunch of Hair Saves Life—Feared to Stop Assailant.

Columbus.—The police authorities of this city are puzzled over the actions of an unknown negro, who, after firing a shot at Mrs. Mary Edgar, a white woman of 335 Neilston street, knocked her down with a six-pound flatiron and escaped into the railroad yards nearby. Mrs. Edgar was attacked inside her own home. The fact the iron struck her head in the back, where her hair was rolled, possibly saved her life.

Mrs. Edgar was up ironing clothes. She looked out into the alley, beside her kitchen door, and noticed a mulatto of medium height, wearing a light soft hat and light coat. She took little notice of the man and a moment later decided to go to the grocery. When she returned from the grocery she stepped inside her kitchen to be faced by the man she had seen in the alley.

He had come out from behind a door, and without a word raised a revolver and fired at the woman. She jumped aside and the shot passed through the door. The man grabbed a flatiron from the ironing board, where the woman had been working, and as she turned to run, threw the iron at her. Her head was cut somewhat, however, and she needed the attention of a physician. The woman's screams had summoned neighbors, but all feared to stop the man, who still held the revolver in his hand.

LIVED 76 YEARS IN COLUMBUS.

Mrs. Knoderer Came to the Ohio Capital From France in 1836.

Columbus.—Mrs. Catherine Knoderer died at the home of her granddaughter, Mrs. E. G. Butler, 777 Gilbert street, of exhaustion following a paralytic stroke. She was aged ninety-three years. Mrs. Knoderer was born in Alsace-Lorraine and emigrated to America with relatives when she was only eight years old, her passage across the ocean taking six weeks. She came to Columbus in 1836 when it was a city of only [illegible] inhabitants. She walked from Crawford county, a distance of 7[illegible] miles, in three days to enter the class preparing for confirmation. She has been here since that time, living for 29 years at 197 North Fifth street and for 46 years on the corner of Long and Water streets. She claimed a continuous residence in this city of 76 years. Mrs. Knoderer was an active member of the Lutheran church and her son, W. A. Knoderer of South Parsons avenue, was organist and director of the choir for 28 years. She leaves the following children: Mrs. Emma Courtellier, 777 Gilbert street, Mrs. H. J. Reinmann, Oil City, Pa., J. T. Knoderer, 468 South Ohio avenue, W. A. Knoderer, 4[illegible] East Rich street, Robert F. Knoderer, 162 King avenue. She had 18 living grandchildren and 13 great grandchildren.

TAKES A RAP AT QUACKERY.

Medical President Upholds Legislation—Should Stop Fake Practices.

Dayton.—Generally rapping medical quacks, medical nondescript and cultists, and declaring that doctors owe it to themselves and the public to resist the organized encroachments of such classes, Dr. Howe Bonner of this city, president of the Ohio State Medical Association, sailed into quackery in his annual address delivered here at the opening session of the state convention of the association. He justified political action by the doctors when such is directed to words the preservation of health.

At its recent session the association went on record as supporting the Owen bill, now before the senate and which provides for a national board of health. The association also favored the proposition of the appointment of a commission to investigate and report needed legislation that may aid in stamping out tuberculosis; also the proposition of requiring all school children of the state to undergo a medical examination before being permitted to attend school.

ORDER INVESTIGATION.

Dayton.—Authority was given to Dr. Henry Baldwin of Springfield, who was elected president of the Ohio Society for the Prevention of Tuberculosis, at its annual meeting, to appoint a committee to investigate the charges of extravagance in the management of the state sanitorium at Mt. Vernon. It was pointed out that inasmuch as the claim had been made that it had been costing in excess of $3.50 a day for the care of each patient at the institution an inquisition should be conducted. President Baldwin announced that he would name the committee in the near future. The need of 10 more district hospitals was also urged and a movement started for their establishment.

DECLINES SWILL, KILLED.

Waverly.—In a quarrel which originated in the question of to whether he "wanted to drink a bucket of swill," Henry Jordon was shot dead in the street by Luther M. Silcott, barber. Silcott is in the county jail charged with second degree murder. The trouble started when Silcott appeared with the slop and Jordon asked what it was. Silcott had been drinking. The case is attracting considerable attention on account of its unusual features.

ANOTHER SOCIALIST GOES.

Lorain.—Orren Eck, Socialist safety director, who announced he would stand by the party, did not have a chance to quit June 1, as planned. He was removed by Mayor Pape. Albert Horn of the city engineering department was appointed to the vacancy. The Socialists took exception to the appointment of L. A. Dawes, Republican, as service director and ordered all heads of departments to quit. This is but a step toward displacing Socialistic officials.

The Earliest Known Englishman

A Pre-Boulder Clay Man

IF ALL the evidence holds good—and in the opinion of those qualified to judge, this is likely to be the case—a skeleton recently dug up near Ipswich, England, represents not only the earliest remains of man yet found in England, but, with the exception of the Heidelberg jaw, the earliest yet found in Europe. The modern type of man was evolved before the commencement of the glacial period. At least it is now certain that thousands of years before the Neanderthal race flourished in South Germany, Belgium and France, England was occupied by a race of men which in build of body and form of brain were of the modern type.

About a mile north of Ipswich, England, is situated a brick field which is famous to geologists for the very ancient quaternary and tertiary deposits which have been exposed by the excavations of the London clay for brickmaking. These deposits, which are given in the descending order, are:

Chalky boulder clay,
Middle-glacial sand and gravel,
Decalcified red crag,
London clay,
Woolwich and Reading beds,
Thanet sand.

For some six years past J. Reid Moir, of Ipswich, has been collecting flint implements from the beds above the London clay, and, realizing the importance of finding human bones in any of these deposits, had carefully instructed the workmen to communicate immediately with him should such relics turn up.

A few months ago he was notified that one of the workmen, while removing some of the decalcified boulder clay to get at the underlying glacial sand, had found a portion of a human skull, and on going down to the pit discovered that this indeed was the case. As two bones could be seen projecting from the vertical face of the section at a depth of about 4 feet from the surface, Mr. Moir, accompanied by three friends interested in archaeology and geology, went down on the following afternoon to the pit and superintended the digging out of the remainder of the skeleton. As a most careful examination of the hard clay above the remains showed that no digging had ever taken place on this spot before, it was recognized that the find was an important one, and every care was taken in removing the overlying material. When the bones were reached it was found that they were in such a friable state as to necessitate the strata in which they lay being dug up in large lumps; and as it was of the greatest importance to have them at once placed in the hands of experts, they were forwarded the same evening to the Royal College of Surgeons, London, where they were most carefully and skilfully examined by Prof. Arthur Keith, the conservator of the college. During the next week the strata each side of the place where the skeleton was found were examined and reported on by Mr. W. Whitaker, F.R.S., Dr. J. E. Marr, F.R.S., and Mr. George Slater, F.G.S. The chalky boulder clay, under which the bones were lying, covers an immense area in East Anglia, and is a landmark in Pleistocene geology. It owes its origin to the ice-sheet associated with the last episode of the great Ice Age, and its antiquity may be gauged from the fact that since its deposition most of our present river valleys have been formed. Before the chalky boulder clay was laid down there was apparently a sandy land-surface to the north of Ipswich, and on this land surface lived the man whose remains have been found. The flint implements he and his associates made, which were no doubt lying on the land surface before the advance of the ice, have been found in some abundance in the boulder clay, and at the junction of the clay with the glacial sand, and, therefore, at exactly the same horizon as the bones themselves occurred. These implements, and those from the underlying middle-glacial gravel, though very skilfully made, are of pre-Palaeolithic forms, and there is no doubt that in pre-boulder clay times the true Palaeolithic stage of culture had not been reached.

Yet the man who lived in Britain in the interglacial period before the boulder clay was laid down, and who is, therefore, of a vast and unknown antiquity, was to all intents and purposes modern man. He stood about 5 feet 10 inches in height, his head was perhaps a trifle smaller and flatter than present-day examples, but there was nothing brutal or simian in his appearance.

Now, the Neanderthal men whose remains have been frequently found in caves and rock shelters in the south of France and elsewhere, and who lived in these districts in mid-Palaeolithic times, and are, therefore, much less ancient than the Ipswich man, show distinctly primitive and somewhat simian characteristics. The implements which they made are also of a more simple type than those found in the river-terrace gravels, which are nevertheless more ancient. Therefore, if we are to judge of the type of man from the implements he made, the earlier river-drift man was of a more advanced type than the later Mousterian or Neanderthal man. The famous find at Galley Hill of portions of a human skeleton in the very ancient 100-foot terrace of the Thames has proved this to be true; for here we have a type of skull which is by no means degraded, and associated with flint implements which show an advanced civilization.

Thus the evidence of the flints and the evidence of the human bones are in entire agreement; but the 100-foot terrace of the Thames at Upminster, in Essex, rests upon, and is therefore less ancient than, the chalky boulder clay, and under this boulder clay at Ipswich a modern type of man has been found! And yet not quite modern, for the Ipswich man's tibia, or shin bone, is different in every way from ours, and not only ours but from any which have hitherto been found or described. This peculiar tibia, which, as Professor Keith says, represents a stage in evolution and will serve to distinguish the race to which this man belonged, was no doubt associated with his manner of walking, but at present it is impossible to say exactly what this association was. The finding of a modern type of man below the chalky boulder clay is, as has been suggested, at first sight rather puzzling, but the dexterously flaked implements which have been found in the older middle-glacial gravels, and the still much older detritus bed below the red crag, make the discovery much more easy to understand. The outstanding fact about this discovery is that even at such an immensely remote period as that preceding the deposition of the chalky boulder clay, modern man was already evolved, and that to find the primitive human type we shall have to carry our investigations back into a still more dim and distant past.

The Neanderthal man of the earlier Ice Age is the oldest known European. Of this type Prof. Arthur Keith, in "Ancient Types of Man," says:

"We know now that the men who lived in Europe during the earlier and greater part of the Glacial Period—one estimated to have extended over a period of from 500,000 to 1,000,000 years—were of the Neanderthal type. . . . A comparison of the crania of the Neanderthal and [illegible] with the [illegible] of the Galley Hill man [illegible] its peculiar features. Both are very long skulls, the Neanderthal being [illegible] mm., the Galley Hill some 2 mm. more. . . . The great size of the supraorbital torus gives the forehead of the Neanderthal man a receding appearance. . . . It is a striking fact that the brain had reached, as regards size, more than a modern degree of development in the Neanderthal type (over 1,500 c.c.; [illegible] is usually accepted as an average for modern man). The earliest trace of the Neanderthal type of man yet found was discovered in the valley of the Neckar, some six miles above . . . Heidelberg. Only a lower jaw was found. . . . The Heidelberg man had a massive jaw. . . . One can be absolutely certain that the head form of the Heidelberg man was of the Neanderthal shape. . . . In the manner of head fixation Neanderthal man retains a distinct trace of the anthropoid form.' . . . The earliest trace of the skeleton—of man yet found in Europe must be assigned to a period which carries us back many hundred thousands of years. . . . Yet even at that early date we find man already evolved, brutish perhaps in appearance, savage, no doubt, in his nature—yet large-brained, erect in posture, and in every sense of the biologist a man."

Of the type known as Pithecanthropus erectus, called the "missing link," Dr. W. J. Sollas in "Ancient Hunters," says:

"Dr. Eugene Dubois, who had left Holland for Java with the avowed intention of finding the 'missing link,' discovered in September, 1891, a molar tooth . . . the wisdom tooth of Pithecanthropus erectus; later . . . the cranial vault or the skull cap was found. . . . The thigh bone of the left leg was found lying fifty feet away from the spot where the first tooth was obtained, but still on the same horizon, and finally, in October (1892), another molar tooth. . . . A description of the remains of Pithecanthropus has been published by Dr. Dubois. . . . All are agreed that they indicate an animal bearing a close resemblance to man and apes. Some regard Pithecanthropus as an ape with certain human characters, others as a man with evident simian characters, others . . . as a connecting link midway between man and the higher apes. The suggestion has even been made that the remains are those of a [illegible]. That which distinguishes man from all the beasts of the field is the power and complexity of his mind. . . . [illegible] in the [illegible] attaches to the skull cap or brain pan . . . this is certainly more simian than human. . . . The [illegible] has been fittingly designated Pithecanthropus erectus, the ape man who walked erect."

Ancient Deed Recorded.

Yellow with age and beginning to fall apart where it had been folded nearly 106 years ago, a real estate transfer was recorded at Cumberland county registry recently by A. H. Kilby of Freeport, who found the document after a long search among old papers in his possession. It is quite likely that never before in the history of the county has 106 years elapsed, as in this case, between the time that a deed was passed and the time that it was recorded.

The writing on the paper is quite legible, although in places it is faded somewhat and the old style writing man has a tendency to make the writing hard to read, but as a whole the document is in a fine state of preservation for one of its age. The document was dated October 15, 1806.—Portland Press.

Art.

Art is the great and universal refreshment. For art is never dogmatic; holds no brief for itself; you may take it or you may leave it. It does not force itself rudely where it is not wanted. It is reverent to all tempers to all points of view. But it is wilful—the very wind in the comings and goings of its influence, an uncapturable fugitive visiting our hearts at vagrant, sweet moments, since even before the greatest works of art we often stand without being able quite to lose ourselves! That restful oblivion comes, we never quite know when—and it is gone! But when it comes, it is a spirit hovering with cool wings, bearing us from least to greatest according to our powers, a spirit deathless and varied as human life itself.—John Galsworthy in the Atlantic.

42 PROPOSALS ARE APPROVED

AMENDMENTS ADOPTED BY THE OHIO CONSTITUTIONAL CONVENTION.

TO BE VOTED ON BY PEOPLE

Total Number of Measures Favorably Acted Upon by Delegates Represents only 12 Per Cent of 339 Ideas Submitted.

Columbus, O.—What the Ohio constitutional convention set out to do is all but complete. When the convention reassembles here May 22 it will have little work other than the revising of a phrase here and there or making some other minor changes in the drafts of proposed amendments. No date for final adjournment has been fixed, but leaders in the convention hope the last meeting will come shortly after May 22. Of the 339 proposals introduced in the convention only 42 were adopted for submission to the people. The most important amendments and the material facts of each are given herewith:

No. 81—Reform of jury system: Gives general assembly power to authorize verdicts in jury tried civil cases on the votes of not less than three-fourths of the members of the jury.

No. 110—To provide for a system of good roads in the state covering all counties, permits the state to issue $50,000,000 in bonds for a system of wagon roads in all the counties in the state, not more than $10,000,000 to be issued in any one year. Provision is made for maintenance of the roads and for payment of the bonds from the proceeds of a sinking fund. Counties will locate the roads first improved, the plan being to have a through state system for continuous travel touching the larger points in all counties.

No. 5—Qualification of an elector: Eliminates the word "white" from the constitutional qualification of an elector. It is an alternative for the women's suffrage provision.

No. 151—Establishing license system for liquor traffic: Provides the general assembly may pass laws for the licensing of the liquor traffic in sections of the state where it is not prohibited, retains all the liquor regulatory laws now on the statute books and retains power in the state to pass [illegible]

[illegible] "neither measure" and if [illegible] "neither measure" both fail. Constitutional amendments may be submitted direct to the people when 12 per cent of the voters sign the petition. The use of the initiative and referendum to secure classification of property for taxation or to secure single tax in the state is prohibited.

No. 181—Reform of judicial proceedings: Provides one trial and one review in all cases and no more, thus shortening the time consumed in reaching a conclusion. Leaves supreme court with same number of judges but provides five of the six judges must agree to declare any law of the state unconstitutional; retains same original jurisdiction of the court but adds the writs of prohibition and certiorari. Writ of prohibition permits the court to estop an inferior court from a wrong procedure in causes, and the certiorari writ permits the supreme court to instruct an inferior court to certify to the supreme court the record in a case of great or general public interest that it may be finally determined. Abolishes the circuit court and establishes courts of appeal composed of the circuit court judges in office when the amendment is adopted, that court to have final jurisdiction in all cases not affecting the constitution and felonies that involve life sentences.

No. 51—Providing double liability for holders of stock in any corporation that receives money on deposit and is authorized by law to do so. Provides no person or corporation or partnership can use the word "bank" in its business unless it is chartered by the state, is examined by the state banking department, makes reports to the state banking department as is provided by law [illegible] every bank in the [illegible]

No. 240—Direct primaries: Requiring all state, county and district officers shall be chosen at direct primaries in all places save townships and municipalities of less than 2,000 people, the latter two divisions to have direct primaries if the people on petition of 50 per cent of the voters so indicate their wish. Requires presidential preference primaries and nomination of United States senators by direct vote.

No. 62—Capital punishment: Abolishing capital punishment, provides life sentence for all who would now be given capital punishment.

No. 61—Conservation: Gives power to the general assembly to provide for conservation laws affecting the method of mining coal, for conservation of water power on all streams in the state, all development of power to be under state supervision, to encourage forestry, by exempting from taxation wholly or in part, woodlots and land devoted to the growing of forest trees.

No. [illegible]—Making legal the use of voting machines, which supreme court said were illegal.

No. 122—Minimum wage: Provides the state shall have power to investigate working conditions in the various lines of activity and decide what shall be fixed as the minimum wage in each class of labor, and also have power to make regulation for the lives, health and safety of the people employed in all lines of labor.

No. [illegible]—Eight-hour day: Makes eight hours' work a legal day and 48 hours' work a legal working week on all public works in the state.

No. [illegible]—Compulsory workman's compensation: Writes into the constitution the present workman's compensation laws with the addition that they shall cover "occupational diseases" and that the employer and the state shall [illegible] the fund, workmen being exempted.

No. 7—Special sessions of general assembly: Provides only such matters as are mentioned in the call of the governor shall be considered during special sessions unless they are submitted during the session in special messages.

No. 261—State printing: Permits the state to establish its own printing plant, provides all printing contracts and all supplies shall be given and bought under competitive bidding.

No. 309—Constitutional conventions: Provides future conventions shall be non-partisan, that future amendments be placed on the ballot free from party emblem or party designation and adopted by majority vote of those voting on the proposition. Leaves unchanged the constitutional requirement that a three-fifths vote of all those elected to each branch of the general assembly shall be necessary to submit a constitutional amendment.

No. 169—Civil service: Requires the state, counties and cities of the state to adopt civil service in selection of appointees.

No. 71—Corporation regulation: Gives general assembly power to classify and regulate all corporations and joint stock [illegible] creates a commission to [illegible] the issue of stocks and bonds and [illegible]

[illegible] Municipal home rule: Gives [illegible] way to all municipalities with [illegible] to frame special charters [illegible] on referendum vote. [illegible] federal plan, commission plan or any other plan of government the people care to try. Classes municipalities as cities and villages, 5,000 population being the dividing line. General laws are to be passed applicable to all cities that adopt them. Municipalities may by condemnation or purchase procure control [illegible] pay. Up to the debt limit the bonds shall be issued against the credit of the whole municipality and the excess of bonds over the limit shall be against the property acquired. Vote of the people is made necessary before any such steps can be taken.

No. 179—Education: Allows school districts by referendum vote to decide the form of organization of their board of education and fix the number.

No. 170—Taxation: Provides uniform rule for valuation of property for taxation, restores all municipal bonds to the tax list, provides uniform or graded income and inheritance taxes, allows excise, franchise and mineral production taxes and prohibits poll tax. Compels levy of sinking funds for retirement of bonds as they fall due.

No. 114—Injunction: Empowers the general assembly to pass laws regulating proceedings in contempt, provides injunction in labor troubles shall issue only to protect property, that people cited for contempt in violating injunction committed outside [illegible] court room may have speedy trial by jury.

No. 15—Trial by jury: Gives general assembly right to fix number of people in [illegible]

Four Die When Boat Upsets

Sioux Falls, S. D.—An attempt to shoot the flood dam in the Big Sioux river here in small row boats cost the lives of four men. One of them, Ray Beck, was recently discharged from the United States navy and held a United States navy gold medal for swimming.

Beck and a companion had passed the dam safely but returned to pick up two men in another boat which had capsized.

All four were drowned when Beck's boat also upset.

Doctor Was Fooled by His Own Case For a Time.

A physician speaks of his own experience:

"I had used coffee for years and really did not exactly believe it was injuring me although I had palpitation of the heart every day. (Tea contains caffeine—the same drug found in coffee—and is just as harmful as coffee.)

"Finally one day a severe and almost fatal attack of heart trouble frightened me and I gave up both tea and coffee, using Postum instead, and since that time I have had absolutely no heart palpitation except on one or two occasions when I tried a small quantity of coffee, which caused severe irritation and [illegible] I must let it alone.

"When we began using Postum it seemed weak—that was because we did not make it according to directions—but now we put a little bit of butter in the pot when boiling and allow the Postum to boil full 15 minutes which gives it the proper rich flavor and the deep brown color.

"I have advised a great many of my friends and patients to leave off coffee and drink Postum, in fact I daily give this advice." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

Many thousands of physicians use Postum in place of tea and coffee in their own homes and prescribe it to patients.

"There's a reason," and it is explained in the little book, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs.

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true, and full of human interest.

WHO HAS CHANGED?

On Aug. 19, 1907, William H. Taft, then becoming a candidate for the presidency, delivered a speech at Columbus, Ohio, from which the following quotation is taken:

> I am glad to express my complete, thorough, and sincere sympathy and admiration for the great conserving and conservative movement which he (Roosevelt) has with wonderful success initiated and carried so far against bitter opposition, to remedy the evils of our prosperity and preserve to us the institutions we have inherited from our fathers. . . . There is nothing either radical or severe in the reforms that he proposes.

On May 8, 1912, William H. Taft again spoke in Columbus and in the same hall delivered a speech, which the New York Times reports as follows:

> The President also scored Col. Roosevelt as an advocate of class hatred and a man who is appealing to the element of discontent. "It is dangerous to put such a man in the office of president," he said.

There is discussion as to whether it has been Taft or whether it is Roosevelt that has changed and thus justifies the other in an alteration of attitude. The two Columbus speeches of Mr. Taft throw some light on the question.

When we see democrats who fought loyally for principle in the campaigns of 1896, 1900 and 1908 now turning to the support of Gov. Harmon, who after two terms of office repudiates the platform upon which he was elected, when we see things like this, we feel like quitting the political game. If Harmon can carry Ohio or Lake county after his speech before the constitutional convention, the democrats ought to go hang their heads in shame and never talk to republicans about honesty or principle again. We are tired of such demagogery and it makes us sick to see it. A large vote for Harmon next Tuesday will not only loose for democrats the respect of honest men in other parties, but a lot of honest democrats will feel like deserting the old hulk for something better. But let us look on the brighter side and not mourn until after the result of the election is made public. Probably there are not so many Harmonites in Ohio after all.

The Herald would like to see every precinct in Lake county give a majority for Woodrow Wilson. The voters of Lake county know that the Herald always advocates progressive democracy and it will be pretty safe to bank on the Herald's advice this year when it is opposing the reactionary democratic machine of this state. All the money and political machinery is on the other side but democrats of Lake county are fighting for principles and will not stand for traitors to democratic principles.

Every democrat who is in favor of Bryan democracy should go to the polls next Tuesday and vote for Woodrow Wilson. The line between the progressive and reactionary voters in the democratic party is clearly drawn in the Ohio battle and the progressive can express his sentiment only by voting for Wilson. The nomination of Gov. Harmon or any other reactionary candidate on the democratic ticket means the end of the democratic party.

The Herald wishes to warn the progressive democrats of Lake county against over confidence at the election next Tuesday. The Harmon workers are not numerous, but they are wide awake and Wall street is furnishing them with money to get out every vote. Let no progressive democrat be "asleep at the switch." A few votes will nominate the county ticket but it will require a large vote to carry this county for Wilson.

The day of pusillod presidents, or even those who think that keeping on saying "I am a Democrat" will be enough to furnish presidential timber, has gone by. When Republican stand-patters have come to a realizing sense of the folly of sticking to stand-patism and are abandoning it to its merited fate, is it any time for Democrats to pick up the foundling?

Let the old "Bryan" guard of Lake county be out and working for true democracy next Tuesday. There is more danger from the Harmonites within the party than from the foe in front.

Vote for Woodrow Wilson next Tuesday, and every democrat should vote.

RANDOM THOUGHTS

By Tom, Dick and Harry

When a candidate for sheriff or constable, in the turmoil of battle, gets "het up" and calls his opponent a liar we think of Sherman's definition of war, the man and the office and then forget about it. It's rather a common occurance and doesn't call for much comment. But when candidates for the presidency of these United States go on the war path and call each other liars, "honey fuglers," whatever that is, and everything else short of the libelous, its astonishing. It's especially so when one of them is an ex-president and one the president of this great country. It's more than that. It's tearing the dignity of the office into tatters and bringing it down to the level of a stock exchange. Did you ever see an exciting moment in a grain or stock pit when the operators jump up and down and claw each other? Well this scrap for the nomination for the presidency in the Republican party reminds one of such a moment. When men loose their heads over an idea and kick dignity and discretion in their respective eyes.

It's even worse for Taft than for Roosevelt. The ex-president is supposed to be a fire eater. He catches lions by their tails and snaps their heads off. He eats them alive. But Taft is supposed to be three hundred pounds of solid dignity. He has been touted for the last eight years as having a "fine judicial mind." Now he is talking his head off, making as high as eighteen speeches per day and they say the rear platform of his private car is equipped with a fire proof asbestos drop. Think of it, eighteen times a day he jumps in the air and cracks his heels together (figuratively of course). We can't help but wonder who his trainer is and what has become of that fine judicial mind of his.

And "Teddy"! Well he is simply going against time with all the assistance permissable, wind shield, pace maker and on a superb track. He is hitting the elevations like a major and has his off eye on the long end of the purse. He is running to form and that's going some.

A football game to us is a tame looking affair, a prize fight don't give us palpitation of the heart; we believe we could watch a bull-fight and not bat an eye but when two men supposed to be of the largest calibre of any in the world get to publicly indulging in personalities it gets under our belts. We may be old fashioned but to us a chewing match is only one degree removed from a fist fight. It's hard to say where one leaves off and the other begins.

We don't care how much of the inside history of a few cases—they unearth, it might be a good thing. But why not cut out the "honey fugling" business.

There are some things about "this little old burg" that are rather hard to get used to. One of them is to be walking along the street and have a boy ring a bicycle bell right at your heels. We suppose its perfectly alright but it certainly brings a fellow out of a trance. He can't help but duck pretty suddenly to one side and wish that—well, that they wouldn't do it.

In spite of all the bustle and commotion of a large city one feels perfectly safe. At least when he is on the sidewalk. He may have to dodge autos out in the street but nothing but something crazy is going to bother him on the walk. He is not used to having things honk at his heels and then go whizzing by and somehow resents it. He feels that the pedestrian rights that are supposed to be prior to all others are somehow being "shoved off the boards."

Of course as we say it may be alright but its durn hard to get used to it.

DANDYISM SERVED HIM WELL

Unwilling to Go to the Guillotine Without His Boots, Condemned Man Cheated Death.

In the French Revolution a feuilletonist named Schlaberndorf, who possessed considerable ability as a writer, by heartily espousing the cause of the Girondists in all that emanated from his pen rendered himself obnoxious to Robespierre, and at the dictation of that fierce leader was incarcerated. When the death cart one morning came to the prison for its load of those that were that day to be butchered, Schlaberndorf's name was on the list of the condemned. The jailer informed him that such was the case, and the writer dressed himself for his last ride very nonchalantly and—he was extremely fastidious as to his personal appearance—with great care. His boots, however, he could not find. Here, there, everywhere, assisted by his jailer, he looked for them to no avail.

"I am quite willing to be executed," said he to the jailer, after their fruitless search, "but really I should be ashamed to go to the guillotine without my boots. Nor do I wish to detain this execution party," he added, smiling grimly. "Will it make any difference if my execution is deferred until tomorrow? By that time I shall probably succeed in finding my boots."

"I don't know that it will matter particularly when you are guillotined," responded the functionary, between whom and Schlaberndorf there had existed a sort of friendship. "Suppose we call it tomorrow, then?"

"All right," and the jailer allowed Schlaberndorf to remain, not unwillingly, as owing to his universal good humor he was especially liked by all the jail attendants.

The following morning when the cart drew up before the prison door for its batch of victims Schlaberndorf, dressed in his best, including the boots that had been found, stood waiting the summons of the jailer to take his place therein. Meantime, however, a new jailer had taken the place of the old one, the latter himself having suddenly been displaced by reason of suspected disloyalty to the revolutionists, and Schlaberndorf's name was not called that morning. Nor was it called the next morning, nor the morning after that; nor, indeed, ever again. It was believed by all outside of his friends in the jail that he had perished on the morning originally set for him. He remained in prison until the sway of Robespierre had ended. Then he regained his liberty, as did the rest of those prisoners whose heads had not fallen beneath the blood stained ax.

Hidden Women of Persia.

Should the women of Persia ever get a vote, they will doubtless see to it that the lot of their sex is considerably improved, for at the present time they are regarded as nonentities. A husband in Persia never speaks of his wife to his acquaintances, and, if obliged to mention her, it is by some other term than wife, as "mother of my son," of "my house." She must not exist for anyone but her husband and from all others she must be hidden—non-existing. For this reason when the harems of governors or very high personages pass through the streets of Persia the men whom they meet either turn their backs or slip down a by-street or into some convenient doorway.

On passing a European, if sure that none of her co-religionists see her, a woman, particularly if she be young and good looking, will often raise her veil, from under which a pair of dark eyes follow the stranger with a curious gaze.

Maidens wishing to get married visit the tomb of some sacred woman. There are many such tombs. Marriages are contracted very early. Sometimes, owing to family reasons, one hears of a youth of 15 or 16 married to a girl much older. The marriage for a girl is fixed at 8.—Brooklyn Eagle.

Honest Election.

Much of the grim humor one hears among practical politicians has to do with these incorruptibles who owe their positions to corruption. A case in point is that of a member of the supreme court of a western state, who began his career by running for congress. The story was told to me by one of the workers who secured his election.

"One day the candidate met me," said my informant, to whom I had been introduced by a practical politician, as he took me into his confidence and began to talk as one briber might to another, "and asked me how things were going in a certain district.

"'Fine,' I replied. 'You will have a good majority there.'

"'I am not surprised,' he said enthusiastically. 'When I was speaking there I made the best speech that I made in the whole campaign.'"

The worker nudged me as he said: "It cost us just $7,000 to win that particular district for him, and he thought his speech did it."—The Forum.

True.

"Now, Johnny," said the teacher after she had explained the meaning of the word, "I wish you would write a sentence containing defeat."

After a struggle which lasted for about twenty minutes Johnny announced that he was ready to be heard.

"Please read your composition," the teacher directed.

"When you git shoon dat's too tite' it any read 'it's hurt on de feet."

Real Need of the Age.

We already have a thousand men who can make money to one man who can think and make other men think.—Century Magazine.

"My little son had a very severe cold. I was recommended to try Chamberlain's Cough Remedy, and before a small bottle was finished he was as well as ever," writes Mrs. H. Silhe, 29 Dowling Street, Sydney, Australia. This remedy is for sale by all dealers.

The Lake County board of examiners will offer examinations for teachers' certificates on the first Saturday of each month in the year 1912. If first Saturday falls on holiday examinations will be held one week later. Boxwell pupils will be examined the third Saturday in April and the third Saturday in May, 1912. All examinations will be held in the old High School building, Painesville, beginning at 8:15 standard time.

By order of the board.

J. R. ADAMS, Clerk,
Unionville, Ohio.

Joke by Accident.

You may wrong the child by the name you give it. In this matter the girl baby has the advantage of the boy. She can change it at maturity. A friend of mine whose name was Creamer had a daughter who was christened Constance—very thoughtlessly. A good name for a baby, perhaps, when you put them together. But it took her twenty-three years to change it and spoil the joke.—London Chronicle.

As They See Us in England.

Political riots in America are carried out in a thoroughgoing fashion. Lord Rosebery tells a story of a friend of his who visited Baltimore when an election for congress was in progress. Turning in for a shave he complained to the negro barber that his razor was very blunt. "Vurry likely, sir," was the reply; "I was out last night at an election meeting."—London Chronicle.

Genius and Its Tribulations.

"Genius," says the Washington Post, "is the most curious psychological phenomenon with which the mind of man has ever grappled." And the great trouble is that the mind of man never can be sure even while the grappling is going on that genius is really being grappled with.

BOTH PHONES 21

The weather is behaving up again today, with some wind and rain with a little snow mixed in to give variety. Some of the old pioneers say that there was a year within the recollection of those living today who are over eighty—when there was snow every month in the year right here in Lake county. And so, it is just as well to "count our mercies" and recall the fact that things are never so bad but that they might be worse!

Will Galloway, the only son of our David Galloway and his wife Mrs. Addie Ryder Galloway, was almost instantly killed near Erie on Wednesday night, by falling under the moving train while trying to board same. The report came here that both legs were cut off and other injuries sustained, so that the poor boy never regained consciousness after the hurt. The body was brought home, and funeral services held at his father's house on Friday afternoon. All the village is sympathizing with his sorrowing parents in this terrible affair.

Miss Mary Anderson, of Cleveland, formerly of Tiffin, this state, is the guest of the King sisters for the week.

Mrs. George Parsons, a former Mentor resident, but one whose home is at present in St. Petersburgh, Va., has been visiting old friends in Mentor and renewing acquaintances here. Mrs. F. G. Hart had a luncheon for her on Tuesday, and Mrs. E. S. Sawyer entertained a number of ladies in her honor on Thursday. Mr. and Mrs. Parsons, we understand, are expecting to move back to Ohio very soon when they will live in Columbus.

Mrs. Harry King spent the day on Tuesday in Cleveland, when she was one of the guests of the "Melville Street Club" which held its annual meeting in one of the largest downtown club rooms in the city this year, and where a very delightful day was enjoyed.

The choir of our Methodist church is getting up quite a reputation for itself, has just been invited to sing in the old Mormon Temple in Kirtland on May 31st, and has accepted said invitation.

Mrs. Herbert Van Cleve left on Saturday for her New Jersey home having come to superintend the packing up of their furniture and other belongings and having [illegible] come with her their little son [illegible] who was taken very sick while here and so the mother felt it would be best to hurry home with him. Many of the friends of Mrs. Van Cleve were deeply disappointed at not seeing her once again, but [illegible] promise was secured of a visit later on.

Mrs. [illegible] has been visiting in [illegible] for two or three weeks [illegible] with her daughter, Miss Nora and her two brothers, the Messrs New whose home are up there, and is not expected back before the last of this week.

Mrs. Jenny Pratt Bostwick will very soon have a nice commodious flat for rent up over her new block at the Center. These rooms (seven in all) are being finished off by "Jap" Rexford, and are very pleasant indeed, with plenty of big windows, etc.

The Missionary meeting held last week with Mrs. Henry Sandberg was well attended considering weather and everything else that seemed to be on hand to hinder. The next meeting is to be with Mrs. T. D. Morley in June, when the leaders will be Mrs. Albert Hanson and Mrs. Robert Case. The Foreign topic is "Our Adopted Children" and the Home topic, "Christian Conservation."

Mr. and Mrs. Fenner, Cleveland people who bought the house built by Mrs. Hurst some years ago, have just returned from wintering in Florida.

Our friend and Mentor boy, George Mather and his family, have just come back home to Painesville also from spending the cold weather months in Florida.

Mr. and Mrs. Welcome Hardendorf of the city have been visiting down at the home of Mr. and Mrs. Bradway this past week, or a part of it.

News has just come from Lakeside hospital that Dan McCarty has no chance whatever for his life, blood poisoning having set in.

Mr. N. C. Frost is slowly gaining a little now, having been able to get out of doors for a short time during those (all too few) pleasant days of this past week.

Mr. and Mrs. E. B. Barber and family were out for the day on Sunday with Mr. and Mrs. John Tyler, relatives of Mrs. Barber.

Mrs. Matthew Dickey and her sister, Mrs. Russell Critchford have both been enjoying a visit this past week or so from their grand father, Mr. G. A. Pinney, whose home is in Cleveland.

The many friends of Mr. [illegible] Harrison and his daughter, Miss Alice, were shocked to learn of his dangerous illness down at their home in Eustis, Fla., having heard but a short time before that he was unusually well this spring.

Mrs. William Eddy spent Thursday in Wickliffe at the home of her sister, where Mr. Eddy, Sr., lies at death's door, unconscious, and with no hope whatever, of his recovery.

Mrs. Smith of Massillon, is at present here with her sister, Mrs. Will Kerr, for a few days.

Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Northcote together with their grand-daughter, Florence Northcote, are again occupying their home on Jackson Rd.

The Disciple ladies held their annual election of officers at the home of Mrs. Lorenzo Carver last week, when the following members of the Aid Society, were elected as officers for the ensuing year: Pres., Mrs. C. W. Sandberg; Vice Pres., Mrs. Anna Warren Shumaker; Sec'y, Mrs. Geo. Marsh; Treas., Miss Stella Hodges.

The house built by Mr. Wallace Dille of Euclid some ten years ago and owned by Mrs. Fisher the oldest daughter of Col. Parker, has just been sold we understand, to parties from Chagrin Falls.

It is rumored around that wedding bells for two of the Mentor couples are to be rung on June 10th. There is an old saying, that trouble will always follow, where two couples who are relatives or friends are married on the same day. (But sometimes it comes—when they are not!)

Mr. Bligh Sawyer of Cleveland, has been down with the families of his two brothers, for a short time recently, always being too busy to go and see any of his "kith" and "kin" who are farther removed.

The new store just opened by C. W. Bradway is receiving considerable patronage, all the stock being first class in every way and brand new besides being somewhat cheaper than the other stores. Besides groceries some fruit and vegetables will be handled later on, when there is [illegible] to handle anything of the sort, but always strictly [illegible] which is a good thing.

The Social Com. for the Mentor [illegible] Club has been appointed for the ensuing year, and will consist of Mrs. Ben Warren, Chairman, Mrs. [illegible] Mrs. Spindle and Mrs. A. D. Carlton.

The Lookout Com. for the same [illegible] are Mrs. Clara Gilbert, chairman, Miss Elsie Harford and Mrs. [illegible] Case.

Mr. and Mrs. Frank Huggins are now enjoying a visit from their brother, Dr. Huggins whose home is somewhere in Maine. There was a time we understand, when Dr. Huggins seriously thought of locating in our village, but was persuaded otherwise by friends, and now is in the south somewhere, Georgia, we think it is.

Mrs. [illegible] Kerr is no better, and at times is a very great sufferer but always bearing everything with the greatest patience and sweetness.

At a recent meeting of the township trustees Dr. Lowe was chosen health officer for the village and physician for the township, a position that he has held for a number of years, and always with the greatest satisfaction to the people in general.

The Lake Co. Horticultural Meeting is to be held in the M. E. church parlors here on Saturday. Picnic dinner at noon and program at one o'clock. Everybody and his wife are invited.

Seg Postoffice.

Every one is aware that a large quantity of mail comes from Europe; probably most persons assume that it is dumped off the steamers in bulk and sorted and routed in the postoffice of the receiving port. Such a system would result in hopeless congestion and practically all of the fifteen million pounds of foreign mail matter received at New York, on an average of recent years, is ready, sorted and sacked when the steamers make port. This work is done in the sea postoffices aboard the ships, and means days saved in the time of delivery of mail matter intended for inland points.

In the huge mass of mail brought into New York each year there are, on an average, 80,000,000 separate pieces, many thousands with inadequate addresses, yet to such a degree of efficiency has the operation of the sea postoffices been brought, and so carefully is the work done, that less than 500 errors are made annually. As the entire quantity of the ocean mail received in a year would fill 2,200 standard mail cars, an almost incredible accuracy is indicated—less than one error of any kind whatever for every four carloads of mail.—Harper's Weekly.

Expensive Luxury.

"The Florida in Buenos Ayres," he said, "is very elegant and charming, but in the past the young men were too prone to accost the beautiful women shopping and promenading there.

"Accordingly, a law was passed which imposed a fine of $50 on any one who should dare to accost or annoy in the slightest degree any lady in Buenos Ayres."

Mr. Davis paused.

"Since the passage of that law," he said solemnly, "the Florida has become quite safe; but when a beautiful woman walks in it the young men hover near her, murmuring in low and ardent tones:

"'I wish I had $50!'"

His Business.

"I was in a place yesterday that employed a bouncer with the most appropriate name in the business. It was Vine."

"How is that so appropriate?"

Undiplomatic Druggist.

South Trimble, clerk of the house of representatives, was talking about diplomacy.

"In a public post," he said, "great diplomacy is needed. The man in a public post must be diplomatic all the time; otherwise he will be treated like the druggist.

"A druggist, late one cold winter night, was awakened by the tinkle of his emergency bell. It was a boy. The druggist slipped on a dressing gown, went shivering downstairs and found the boy wanted two cents' worth of chewing gum.

"'It's like your cheek,' the druggist growled, 'to wake me up at this time of night for a paltry two cents' worth.'

"At this the boy scowled, threw down the gum and pocketed his two cents again.

"'Like my cheek, it is!' he said. 'Then I'll take my custom somewhere else. You can keep your chewing gum. I won't have it now, after your sauce.'

Cure for Snoring.

The invention of a light steel bar to be held against the upper lips by clamps to prevent persons from snoring is announced in the patent office, but many persons are convinced that a crowbar driven deftly through the cranium is the only permanent cure.

A MARVELOUS RECOVERY.

Mrs. Ray Trusner, 50 W. 3rd St., New Albany, Ind., says: "Kidney disease had rendered me a chronic invalid. I lay in bed unable to move hand or foot. My right limb was swollen to twice normal size. I looked the picture of death and my case puzzled the doctors. Kidney secretions were highly colored and scalded terribly. Marked improvement followed the use of Doan's Kidney Pills and in six weeks I was a well woman. My friends and relatives marvel at my recovery."

Milky Way Causes Glaciers.

Another suggested cause of glacial periods is that they have been due to the shifting of the milky way, such as is known to have occurred. Assuming that much of the earth's heat comes from the stars, Dr. Rudolf Spitaler finds that the change of position in relation to the milky way might have given a different distribution of temperature from that existing at the present time. The stars are not only crowded in the region of the milky way, but many of them are of the hottest type.

SYNOPSIS

Dan Blair, the 22-year-old son of the fifty million dollar copper king of Blair town, Mont., is a guest at the English home of Lady Galorey. Dan's father had been courteous to Lord Galorey during his visit to the United States and the courtesy is now being returned to the young man. The youth has an ideal girl in his mind. He meets Lily, Duchess of Breakwater, a beautiful widow who is attracted by his immense fortune and takes a liking to her. When Dan was a boy a girl sang a solo at a church, and he had never forgotten her. The Galoreys, Lily and Dan attend a London theater where one Letty Lane is the star. Dan recognizes her as the girl from his town and going behind the scenes introduces himself and she remembers him. He learns that Prince Poniatowsky is suitor and escort to Letty. Lord Galorey and a friend named Ruggles determine to protect the westerner from Lily and other fortune hunters. Young Blair goes to see Lily, he can talk of nothing but Letty and this angers the Duchess. The westerner finds Letty ill from hard work, but she recovers and Ruggles and Dan invite her to supper. She asks Dan to build a home for disappointed theatrical people. Dan visits Lily, for the time forgetting Letty, and later announces his engagement to the duchess. Letty refuses to sing for an entertainment given by Lily. Galorey tells Dan that all Lily cares for is his money.

"How can it hurt her, my dear man, to tell her you are poor?"

"It's a lie. I'm not up to lying to her. I don't care to. And you mean to think that if I told her I was busted she would throw me over?"

"You haven't a very good opinion of women," Blair threw out with as near a sneer as his fine young face could express.

"No, not very," agreed the pool player, who had continued his shots with more or less sangfroid. When Galorey had run off his string of balls he said, looking up from the table: "But I've got a very good opinion of that 'nice girl' you told me of when you first came, and I wish to Heaven she had kept you in the [illegible]."

[illegible]

"You're [illegible]," said Galorey, "like the rest of Americans, [illegible] all ideal and no [illegible]. You want to make a [illegible] of your life. You haven't the grit to get out of a bad job."

He spurred himself on and his weak face grew strong as he felt he was compelling the boy's attention. "If you only had half the character your father had you wouldn't make a mistake like this, you wouldn't run blind into such a deal as this."

Blair was impressed by his host. Galorey was so deadly in earnest and so honest, and as Dan's face grew set and hardened, his companion prayed for wisdom. "If I can only win through this without touching Lily hard," he thought, and as he waited Blair said:

"You haven't hesitated to call me names, Gordon. You're not my build or my age, and I can't thrash you."

And his host said cheerfully: "Oh, yes, you can, come on and try," and, metaphorically speaking, Dan struck his first blow.

"They say, people have said to me—that you once cared for Lily yourself."

The Englishman's heavy eyelids did not flicker. "It's quite true."

Taken back by this frank response, Blair stammered: "Well, I guess that explains everything. It's not surprising that you should feel as you do. If you are jealous I can forgive it a little bit, but it is low down to call a woman a fortune hunter."

Now Gordon Galorey's face changed and grew slightly white. "Don't make me angry, my dear chap," he said in a low tone. "I have said what I wanted to say. Now go to the devil if you like and as soon as you like."

And the boy said hotly, stammering in his excitement:

"Not yet—not yet—not before I tell you what I think."

Gordon, with wonderful control of his own anger, met the boy's eyes and said with great patience:

"No, don't, Dan, don't go on. There are many things in this affair that we can't touch upon. Let it drop. The right woman would make a happier man of you [illegible]" [illegible] back of [illegible] and I'm going to find out what it is, and I'm going to take my own way to find out. I [illegible] give a rap for [illegible] to me through a trick [illegible], and I wouldn't know how to go to her with a cock and bull story. I shall act as I feel and go ahead being just as I am, and perhaps she won't want me after all, even if I have got the rocks!"

[illegible]

And Galorey said heartily: "I wish there was a chance of it."

When later Gordon thought of Dan it was with a glow. "What a chip of the old block he is," he said, "what a good bit of character, even at twenty-two years." He was divided between feeling that he had made a mess of things between Dan and himself, and feeling sure that some of his advice had gone home. After a moment's silence, Dan Blair's son said:

"I'm going up to London tomorrow."

"For long?"

"Don't know."

Then returning with boyish simplicity to their subject, which Galorey thought had been dropped, Dan said:

"There may be something true in what you say, Gordon. Perhaps she does want my money. I'm not a titled man and I'll never be known for anything except my income. At any rate I was rich when I asked her to marry me, and I'm going to fix up that old place of hers, and I'm glad I've got the coin to do it."

When later, for they had been interrupted in their conversation by the entrance of the lady herself, Gordon, as Ruggles had done, mentally thought of the flowing tide of life and how it flowed over what he himself had called "rotten ground." Perhaps old Blair was right, he mused, after all. What does it matter if the source is pure at the head water? It's awfully hard to force it at the start, at least.

CHAPTER XVI

The Musicale Program.

The duchess and Dan made plans, set the pace, and they were very much in evidence during the season. The young American, good-natured and generous, the duchess beautiful and knowing, were the observed of London, and those of her friends who would have tolerated Dan on account of his money, ended by sincerely liking him. The wedding day had not been fixed as yet, and Dan was so violently carried away that he could not wait to be married. Meanwhile Gordon Galorey thanked God for the delay and hoped for a miracle to break the spell over his friend's son before it should be too late. In early May the question came up regarding the musicale. The duchess made her list and arranged the Sunday afternoon and her performers to suit her taste, and the week before lounged in her boudoir when Dan and Galorey appeared for a late morning call.

"There, Dan," she said, holding out a bit of paper, "look at the list and the program, will you?"

Besides being an artistic event, she intended that the concert should serve to present Dan to her special set. She now lit a cigarette and gave one to each of her friends, lighting the Englishman's herself.

"The best names in London," Lord Galorey said. "You see, Dan, we shall trot you out in a royal way. I hope you fully appreciate how swagger this is to be."

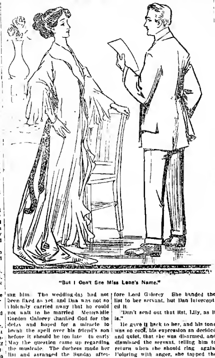
"Why should you?" the Duchess answered sharply.



"But I Can't See Miss Lane's Name."

"Why, we planned all along that she was to sing," he returned.

She gave a long puff to her cigarette.

"We did rather speak of it. But we shall do very well as we are. The program is full up and it's perfectly ripping as it stands."

"Yes, there's only just one thing the matter with it," the boy smiled good-naturedly, "and it's easy enough to run her in. I guess Miss Lane could be run in most anywhere on any program and not clear the house."

Lord Galorey, who knew nothing about the subject under discussion, said tactfully: "Why, of course, Letty Lane is perfectly charming, but you couldn't get her, my dear chap."

"I think we will let the thing stand as it is," said the duchess, going back to her desk and stirring her paper about. "It's really too late now, you know, Dan."

Unruffled, but with a determination which Lord Galorey and the lady were far from guessing, Blair resumed tranquilly:

"Oh, I guess she'll come in all right, late as it is. We'll send word to her and fix it up."

The duchess turned to him annoyed: "Oh, don't be a beastly bore, dear—you are not really serious."

Dan still smiled at her sweetly. "You bet your life I am, though, Lily."

She rang a bell at the side of her desk, and when the footman came in gave him the sheet of paper. "See that this is taken at once to the stationer's."

"Better wait, Lily"—her fiance extended his hand—"until the program is filled out the way it is going to stand." And Blair fixed his handsome eyes on his future wife. "Why, we got this shindig up," he noted irreverently, "just so Miss Lane could sing at it."

"Nonsense," she cried, angry and powerless, "you ridiculous creature! Fancy me getting up a musicale for Letty Lane! Do tell Dan to stop bothering and fussing, Gordon. He's too ridiculous!"

"And Lord Galorey said, "What is the row anyway?"

"Why, I want Miss Lane to sing here on Sunday," Dan explained.

"And I don't want her," finished the Duchess of Breakwater, who was evidently unwilling to face a scene before Lord Galorey. She handed the list to her servant, but Dan intercepted it.

"Don't send out that list, Lily, as it is."

He gave it back to her, and his tone was so cool, his expression so decided and quiet, that she was disarmed, and dismissed the servant, telling him to return when she should ring again. Coloring with anger, she tapped the envelope against her brilliantly polished nails.

If she had been married to Blair she would have burst into a violent rage. If he had been poorer than he was she would have put him in his place. Lord Galorey understood the contraction of her brows and lips as Dan reminded: "You promised me that you would have her, you know, Lily."

"Give in, Lily," Galorey advised, rising from the chair where he was lounging. "Give in gracefully."

And she turned on Galorey the anger which she dared not show the other man. But Dan interrupted her, explaining simply:

"I knew the girl when she was a kid; she is from my old home, and I want Lily to ask her here to sing for us, and I'm to see if we can't do something to get her out of the state she is in."

How Paper Came to Be

A Wasp in a Garden Was Inspiration to a Nipponese Who Could Grasp Opportunity.

Long years ago a Japanese walked through his pretty garden to his home. His hands were clasped behind his back and he was thinking as he crossed the bridge to pluck a fresh wisteria blossom that hung just over his head. This little gentleman had a great many parcels to send out from his shop every week, and he had always wrapped them in silk, but this was expensive material and he needed something cheaper for his purpose. All at once a wasp came flitting toward him, but he thrust it away that it might not nip his nose, and lo! there at his hand was a wasp's nest! It was made of thin wood pulp, softened into a thin paste by the jaws of the insect, then formed and left to dry.

"Why can't I do that same thing?" thought the Japanese merchant. "Get certain wood, form it into a pulp by means of water from the river and make something like this wasp's nest in consistency to wrap about my packages." So this was the way paper was first discovered. A wasp flew across the path of a man who walked one day in a vine-clad garden of old Japan.—Ram's Horn.

At Your Peril.

An accident insurance company has placed in the elevators of several office buildings the following notice: "This elevator is limited to fourteen persons. All over that number riding on this car do so at their own risk."—New York Sun.

They Saved His Life.

Does it pay to stop your motor car after an accident and go back to see what has happened? Two young motorists on the South side believe it does.

With a green chauffeur these two boys were trying out a new model touring car. They were sitting in the back seat when the greenhorn at the steering wheel gave it a twist and came within an ace of hitting an old man at a crossing. The victim was so shocked that he fell to the pavement, and a crowd gathered in an instant.

Looking back, the motorists decided that things looked bad, but that they had better go back and see whether the old party was killed. Finding him all right, but winded, they took him for a nice ride around the parks. So pleasant did they make it for him that when they took him home to his wife he introduced them as "The two young men who saved my life."

They are now thinking of applying for Carnegie medals.

Oh, Learned Judge.

A California judge decided that there is no judicial authority to keep a man from making love to his wife, although it could stop his beating her. The remarkable cause of this remarkable decision was that a woman in Los Angeles had applied for an injunction to restrain her husband from insisting on being attentive to her. This judge was not a Solomon, but he realized that only a Solomon could be trusted to rule upon the whims and inconsistencies of womankind.

All He Wanted Was Just Plain Eggs

A youth entered one of the "hamand row" cafes on Grand avenue and ordered eggs. "Up or over?" asked the man behind the counter. "I just want eggs," replied the prospective diner. "But do you want them up or over?" repeated the waiter, and again the guest asserted that he desired "only eggs." The third time the party of the second part insisted on his query, whereupon the patron, with a sigh of despair, said "I guess I'll take a steak."—Kansas City Star.

Trouble.

"That man seems to be greatly depressed about something."

"Yes. He must live in some town whose baseball team is at the tail end."

SHE WAS WISE.

Mr. Tellit Wright—Are you fond of fiction, dearest?

Miss Cutting Hintz—Yes; but don't tell me I'm the only girl you have ever loved.

The Largest Bells.

"Great Paul," the bell of St. Paul's Cathedral, in London, weighs nearly 17 tons and is nearly 30 feet around. The first "Big Ben" of Westminster was cast more than 50 years ago and weighed more than 14 tons. But "Big Ben" had a crack and was cast over, losing some weight, and the clapper was made smaller, now being about 600 pounds instead of a ton. The great bell, "Peter of York," cost $10,000, weighs about 13 tons and is 22 feet in diameter.

The largest hanging bell in the world is in the great Buddhist monastery near Canton. It is 18 feet in height and 40 feet in circumference, being cast of solid bronze. This is one of the eight monster bells that were cast by command of Emperor Yung Lo about A. D. 1400. It cost the lives of eight men, who were killed in the process of casting.

A Kind Hearted Man.

"Mr. Wombat!"

"Couple of suffragettes out here throwing stones at your window," bawled the policeman.

"How long have they been doing that?"

"Oh, several hours."

"Let 'em alone. It amuses the girls and I don't believe they'll hit the window."

NATION SAVED BY A SPIDER

Scotland has many legends that the sheepherders and highland peasants never get tired repeating. A long time ago King Bruce ruled over Scotland before that country became a part of England, and he learned a lesson from a spider that enabled him to succeed when otherwise he would have failed.

King Bruce had lost many battles. He was discouraged. He had made his final effort against his enemies and failed to vanquish them. Deep in despair he went to a lonely room in his castle. Reclining on the couch and thinking, he happened to notice a spider drop from the ceiling on a single silken cord. He watched the spider fascinatingly. It now began its ascent. It slipped. Time and time again it tried to mount, but each time it failed. The king watched intently, forgetful of all else. An hour passed. Finally the spider succeeded. It was an inspiration for King Bruce. Why should he get discouraged, having tried only a few times and failed? He made one last grand rally against his enemies and routed them, and from this incident came the old saying, "If at first you don't succeed try again."

Surgeon in Ancient Times.

High honorariums were paid surgeons in ancient times. When Darius, the son of Hystaspes, sprained his foot Damocedes was called in, another surgeon of renown having failed to effect a cure. Damocedes was successful, and the king took him to his harem and introduced the doctor to the ladies of the court. The ladies filled a vase of gold with money and precious pearls, which a eunuch was ordered to carry to the doctor. The eunuch let fall the vase, and the careful historian tells us that slaves gathered up the pearls.

Inhuman Fellow.

"Upon what grounds do you seek a divorce?" asked the lawyer whom she had just retained. "Non-support, cruelty or—"

"Both," she cried, tearfully. "He would not support my passionate longing for a diamond necklace, and if that isn't cruelty I'd like to know!"—Catholic Standard and Times.

If You Like a Little Quiet Fun

Ask some pompous person if Grape-Nuts Food helps build the brain.

Then sweetly play with the learned toad.

Ask him to tell you the analysis of brain material and the analysis of Grape-Nuts.

"Don't know? Why, I supposed you based your opinions on exact knowledge instead of pushing out a conclusion like you would a sneeze."

The bulky materials of brain are water and albumin, but these things cannot blend without a little worker known as Phosphate of Potash, defined as a "mineral salt."

One authority, Geohegan, shows in his analysis of brain, 5.33 per cent total of mineral salts, over one-half being Phosphoric Acid and Potash combined, (Phosphate of Potash) 2.91 per cent.

Beaunis, another authority, shows Phosphoric Acid and Potash (Phosphate of Potash) more than one-half the total mineral salts, being 73.44 per cent in a total of 101.07.

Analysis of Grape-Nuts shows Potassium and Phosphorus (which join and make Phosphate of Potash) is considerable more than one-half of all the mineral salts in the food.

Dr. Geo. W. Carey, an authority on the constituent elements of the body, says: "The gray matter of the brain is controlled entirely by the inorganic cell-salt, Potassium Phosphate (Phosphate of Potash). This salt unites with albumin and by the addition of oxygen creates nerve fluid or the gray matter of the brain. Of course, there is a trace of other salts and other organic matter in nerve fluid, but Potassium Phosphate is the chief factor, and has the power within itself to attract, by its own law of affinity, all things needed to manufacture the elixir of life."

Further on he says: "The beginning and end of the matter is to supply the lacking principle, and in molecular form exactly as nature furnishes it in vegetables, fruits and grain. To supply deficiencies—this is the only law of cure."

Brain is made of Phosphate of Potash as the principal Mineral Salt, added to albumin and water.

Grape-Nuts contains that element as more than one-half of all its mineral salts.

Every day's use of brain wears away a little.

Suppose your kind of food does not contain Phosphate of Potash.

How are you going to rebuild today the worn-out parts of yesterday?

And if you don't, why shouldn't nervous prostration and brain-fag result?

Remember, Mind does not work well on a brain that is even partly broken down from lack of nourishment.

It is true that other food besides Grape-Nuts contains varying quantities of Brain food.

Plain wheat and barley do. But in Grape-Nuts there is a certainty.

And if the elements demanded by Nature, are eaten, the life forces have the needed material to build from.

A man who sneers at "Mind" sneers at the best and least understood part of himself. That part which some folks believe links us to the Infinite.

Mind asks for a healthy brain upon which to act, and Nature has defined a way to make a healthy brain and renew it day by day as it is used up from work of the previous day.

Nature's way to rebuild is by the use of food which supplies the things required.

POSTUM CEREAL COMPANY, LIMITED, BATTLE CREEK, MICHIGAN, U. S. A.

FROM THE EDITOR.

He Forgot That He Had a Stomach

Talking of food, there is probably no professional man subjected to a greater strain [illegible] wearing mental strain than the responsible editor of a modern newspaper.

To keep his mental faculties constantly in good working order, the editor must keep his physical powers up to the highest rate of efficiency. Nothing will so quickly upset the whole system as badly selected food and a disordered stomach. It therefore follows that he should have right food, which can be readily assimilated and which furnishes true brain nourishment.

"My personal experience in the use of Grape-Nuts and Postum," writes a Philadelphia editor, "so exactly agrees with your advertised claim as to their merits that any further exposition in that direction would seem to be superfluous. They have benefited me so much, however, during the five years that I have used them that I do not feel justified in withholding my testimony.

"General 'high living,' with all that the expression implies as to a generous table, brought about indigestion, in my case, with restlessness at night and lassitude in the morning, accompanied by various pains and distressing sensations during working hours.

"The doctor diagnosed the condition as 'catarrh of the stomach,' and prescribed various medicines, which did me no good. I finally 'threw physics to the dogs,' gave up tea and coffee and heavy meat dishes, and adopted Grape-Nuts and Postum as the chief articles of my diet.

"I can conscientiously say, and I wish to say it with all the emphasis possible to the English language, that they have benefited me as medicines never did, and more than any other food that ever came on my table.

"My experience is that the Grape-Nuts food has steadied and strengthened both brain and nerves to a most positive degree. How it does it I cannot say, but I know that after breakfasting on Grape-Nuts food one actually forgets he has a stomach, let alone 'stomach trouble.' It is, in my opinion, the most beneficial as well as the most economical food on the market, and has absolutely no rival." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

By Katherine Morton

"IS THERE any simple way of a woman of fifty bettering her looks so she won't be put on the shelf before her time? I am just this age and a mother and grandmother, but I feel as young as ever I did and don't want to become fossilized as so many women do at this age. Ought I to dye my hair, and how can I improve my complexion? I was once thought a beauty and all of my dear ones are still real proud of my looks. I want to live as long as I can and look as well as I can to the end of my days.

"A CONSTANT READER."

Mother's beauty and health! Could there be a more endearing subject for discussion, one nearer to the heart of every sympathetic human being who is blessed with a mother? Then in those days of fine dress and well-preserved appearances a beauty talk for women of fifty and sixty is really necessary once in a while.

Let me begin with the hair of the elderly woman, the mother and young grandmother who wants to look her best. Dear woman or women, drop the notion of dye, for there is nothing more aging than hair artificially colored. Nature makes provision for the changes in the face by graying or blanching the hair, so when the false brown or black is used every line in the face is doubly emphasized. One of the reasons for this is that hair dye makes a uniform color and the natural coloring of the hair is made up of many shades. So dyed hair frames the face like a cap, flinging the information to the teeth of all that it is dyed. In fact it is impossible to hide the subterfuge even in the case of very young women.

Gray hair and white hair are both fashionable now, as woman herself has learned the folly and ugliness of hair dyes. But of course both gray and white hair need to be very tenderly treated to look well. In other words, not to add to the impression of age.

A stylish coiffure becoming to the face with pins matching the color of the hair is always rejuvenating to appearances, and as false pieces are worn by even the oldest ladies hair combings should be kept for these. If there are no combings for the false pieces, and the head needs more hair, always match the natural grayness as much as is possible in the bought piece. For silver-gray locks there are celluloid pins and other ornaments exactly in the same color; there are also white ones properly shaded for white hair.

The condition of the complexion has a great deal to do with general health, but at any time much benefit may be gained by sour milk washes. Take a pint of buttermilk, or sweet milk turned sour, and put a tablespoonful of peroxide in it, applying the wash to the face with a small, clean sponge after the soap and water bath. Leave the milk on the face for half an hour and then wash it off with tepid water. This wash is bleaching to the skin and it is often used for the removal of the brown discolorations commonly called "moth patches" which appear so often with middle age on the face, throat and hands. But one application of the milk and peroxide is not enough to bleach the skin, and there is no telling whether the moth patches would entirely disappear with a number of them. With any beauty formula one can only say that in the majority of cases the means advised have brought good results.

Much stress is laid on a light diet of carefully chosen foods. No rule can be laid down for general following, as constitutions differ, but everybody tells of the usefulness of milk with middle age and old age, and of the great need to cut down quantities of food when the digestion has begun to impair, as it always does. Milk, cream, eggs, cream cheese, fresh fruits, cereals and boiled fowl and boiled fish are everywhere spoken of as constituting some of the right diet for the middle-aged and old. The milk, sour and sweet, holds the lactic acid needed to fight the army of destroying germs which invade the intestines, and by boiling the meats they are made more digestible and less harmful. Meat broths are not bad when taken to tone up the stomach before other eating, but as they are not nourishing they cannot possibly take the place of other foods. Soups of all sorts are considered hard on the kidneys.

So mother must go back a little now to the food of her childhood days if she wishes to keep her health and looks. She must be much in the open air, sleep well, but not too much, drink an adequate quantity of pure water, take her warm baths, look after her digestion and, above all, see to her heart's joy and peace.

She must beware of the "tired" moment, stopping everything in time to avoid it.

She must try and dress with taste and cultivate interest in all passing events.

KATHERINE MORTON.

Social Forms and Entertainments

For Memorial Day.

I am thoroughly interested in your writing of entertainments, and would like to ask a favor of you through your columns. I would like to know what sort of a party to have for a class of high school girls and boys that are between the ages of fifteen and eighteen on Decoration day, also what refreshments to serve, and what sort of favors I might make. I prefer home-made ones.—Anxious.

It is mighty nice of you to tell me how much you like the department. I certainly want it to be of real assistance to every one who reads it. Your letter came too late to be answered sooner, and now I fear I am too late to help you much for the 30th. You can buy tiny silk flags for each one to wear in the buttonhole, and you can get paper napkins in red, white and blue, also nut or bonbon holders in shape of the United States shield. I wonder if you do not know some old soldier who would be willing to tell you war stories, say for a half hour? It would add an interesting bit to your party. I should put up large flags for decoration and perhaps you can get some red geraniums, some white carnations and some lovely blue cornflowers for the center of your table.

What Should a Young Girl Do!

At the age of sixteen what is proper for a young girl to wear to a dance? What should she say when brought home from a dance, or from a walk? Should a young girl ask a boy friend to come in after he has taken her home? A YOUNG READER.

At sixteen one should wear very simple frocks, say of dotted swiss over a colored slip, or all white, or any of the very thin wool materials are pretty, such as veilings and albatross made with sashes of ribbon, round necks and elbow sleeves. Thank your escort for a pleasant evening and for his returning you safely home. Ask him to come to see you and just be your own natural self. It is generally too late after parties to ask a boy in, but if only about nine o'clock and other members of the family are up, ask him in and have some sort of good things to eat. Here is where a chafing dish and the ability to use it comes in as a useful adjunct.

For a Course Tea.

I am planning to entertain our club ladies in May to a three-course tea. Our colors are scarlet and white. We have been studying Irving this year and Prescott's "Conquest of Mexico" and "Conquest of Peru." We want to emphasize in the menu Spanish and Mexican dishes, the club colors, and anything appropriate. Would chili con carne with wafers be suitable for the first course? That is a Mexican dish, is it not? MRS. C. H. P.

The dishes of Spain and Mexico are too closely alike to make a distinction. You will find spaghetti served with tomato sauce, Parmesan cheese and plenty of red pepper. Chili con carne is a heavy dish and hardly suitable for a first course. I would suggest chicken soup. Red and yellow for the color scheme will insure brilliancy, and you can purchase little silk Spanish and Mexican flags for favors for each one.

Accordion Plaiting Again.

The much-lamented accordion plaiting is again coming into favor, which indicates a tendency to wider skirts. Some chiffon frocks with accordion plaited skirts have been shown among the advance models for summer. The plaits are stitched flat at the upper part. Some gowns have been made by the Paris dressmakers with thin tunics under which are skirts of plaited satin.—Harper's Bazar.

Fancies and Notions.

Taffeta, satin and crepe de chine are all to be worn for evening. They lend themselves to the clinging modes of the moment. The several materials are also blended as in a satin skirt and crepe de chine bodice and tunic.

Taffeta has assumed a new face. It will not crease or wrinkle, and is supple as satin. Very pretty dresses are made of this with a brocade of roses or some other flower scattered over it. A large ruche at the hem with flowers nestling in it makes the feet look small.

Folded bands of satin at the waist would appear to have the preference over all other styles. Simplicity in color is not necessarily a feature in fashions, and bias bindings, fringes and trimmings have to be very well chosen.

The Fuchsia Colorings.

I must record the vogue that now obtains for fuchsia colorings, and also the flower itself. The fancy is already running at such a flood-tide it is wholly impossible it can last, although it certainly contrives at the moment to ring a welcome note of color. We have entire dresses of it, "habillee" afternoon or evening gowns, fashioned of purple ninon over dull cerise, restaurant and theater wraps, and toques, the latter exclusively fashioned of the pretty bell-like flowers. Furthermore charming posies are being introduced for enlivening our dull winter costumes and promise to rival the hitherto ubiquitous violets. The realism of the imitation flower is surpassing all previous records.—Bystander, London.

Untrimmed Hats.

Paris has set its seal of approval on the untrimmed hat. This novel fashion is illustrated on hats of small size or of picture dimensions, the only attempt at trimming being a narrow line of velvet which covers the joint between brim and crown. In hats of picture style, carried out in velvet or plush, the no trimming idea is very charming, the draped material, especially the plush, being sufficient trimming in itself.

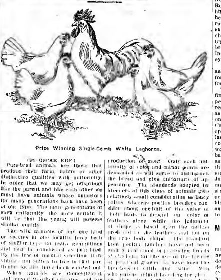
STANDARD BREED OF POULTRY MOST PROFITABLE TO FARMER

Erroneous Idea to Think That Mongrel Chickens Offer Any Advantage Over Pure-Bred Stock—Many Improvements in Laying and Meat-Producing Qualities of Birds.



Prize Winning Single Comb White Leghorns.

(By OSCAR ERF.)

Pure-bred animals are those that produce their kind, habits or other distinctive qualities with uniformity. In order that we may get offspring like the parents [illegible] we must have animals whose ancestors for many generations have been of one type [illegible] such uniformity [illegible] will be [illegible] similar qualities.

The wild animals [illegible] or species [illegible] of similar type [illegible] and may be [illegible]. By the law of natural selection individuals not suited to live in that particular locality have been weeded out.

When animals are domesticated and moved to other climates and are fed different foods, only such individuals will live and produce young as are suited to the new conditions. But another factor changes domestic animals more rapidly. Men breed only such specimens as please their fancy, and this artificial selection replaces natural selection. During the many centuries of domestication the chickens of different parts of the world have developed into different types. When these radically different types are brought together and crossed we have produced young that are very different from the parents and from each other. Nor can these young be depended upon to reproduce offspring like themselves. They are said to be cross-bred or, if the mixing is for several generations, they are known as mongrels. By selecting from cross-bred or mongrel stock such chickens as are desired, and breeding these together for many generations, new breeds may be established.

One strain of chickens may be selected for uniform color of feathers, another for a certain size and shape, another for laying large eggs of a certain color and yet another strain for being producers of many eggs. Each of these strains might be well-bred in these peculiar traits, but would be mongrels when the other considerations were taken into account. Breeders of pure-bred stock, in making their selection of breeding animals, try to consider the desirable qualities in due order of their relative importance. Thus, with trotting horses speed is given prominence above everything else, while in the case of swine or beef cattle attention has been given to the qualities of growth and fattening that make for the profitable [illegible] production of meat. Only such animals [illegible] have been [illegible] breeders of cattle and swine. Men who pursue animal breeding for [illegible] do not choose large, slow-breeding animals such as cattle, neither do animals wholly worthless from other standpoints receive such attention from breeders. But the hen, variable in form and color, inexpensive to secure, readily reared and capable of producing in brief time large numbers of offspring and yet withal capable of paying her way in food products, has rendered possible the development of the fancy or standard-bred chicken business into the most universal and important fancy or artistic breeding business in the world.

From the attention that has been given to the breeding of poultry for the show room, many people wrongly infer that standard-bred poultry is no better than mongrel stock for commercial purposes.

The mongrel chicken is a production of chance. Its ancestry represents everything available in the barnyards of the neighborhood, and its offspring will be equally varied. In the pure breeds there has been a rigid selection practiced that gives uniform appearance.

The size and shape requirements of the standard, although not based on the market demands, comes much nearer producing an ideal carcass than does chance breeding. Ability to mature for the fall and winter shows is a decidedly practical quality that the fancier breeds into his chickens. Moreover, poultry breeders while still keeping standard points in mind have also made improvements in the laying and meat producing qualities of their chickens. Considering these facts, it is an enormous idea to think that mongrel chickens offer any advantage over pure-bred stock for meat or for eggs.

MANY MISTAKES MADE AT START

Those About to Begin With Poultry Should be Advised to Begin With Good Stock or Eggs.

How often have you stopped to think how much better off you would have been and how much time you would have saved had you started in with a pair or a trio of good breeders instead of the flock of cull chickens which you purchased and which even the most experienced poultryman would have found difficult in handling?

How often have you thought about advising those about to start in with chickens to put their money in good stock or eggs at the outset instead of fretting with worthless stock for two or three seasons before realizing their mistake?

How often have you given this advice to a deaf ear, become provoked and then got in a good humor again when you thought of the fool you had been and of the time you had in making up your mind to the necessity of starting in all over again after devoting a couple of years to a flock that no one could have made to pay for its feed?

When we look back upon the many mistakes we made in getting a start we wonder how we managed to stay with it. It is then we realize why it is so many go in for chickens and fail, and begin to wonder how it happens that more did not give up at the outset.

Paralyzed Hens.

Hens that cannot stand and have no use of limbs, but seem to be otherwise healthy, are probably paralyzed. Little can be done for such birds and it is best to dispatch them quickly.

Eggs for Hatching

Eggs must be from good strong stock, fertile and fresh to hatch well. They must not be subjected to chills, jarring, impure air or too great heat.

Advantage With Ducks.

One advantage in duck raising is that there is very little loss from disease and they are not bothered by vermin.

Laying Out Gardens.

In laying out the garden plan to have the rows as long as possible. This will save time in cultivating.

RAISING CROPS FOR THE SILO

Ground Should be Selected on Which to Grow the Largest Possible Yield of Corn.

Now is the time to make arrangements for the silo. Ground should be selected on which to grow the largest possible yield of corn, and as conveniently located as possible, for it costs money to haul green corn long distances.

If the old alfalfa sod was plowed last fall for planting to corn this spring, so much the better. If not, plow as early as possible this spring and plow deeply, using a dressing of well rotted manure to plow under if it can be had. Corn is a crude feeder and will give good account of any fertilizer you may have.

It is not too much to expect twelve to fifteen tons of green corn per acre at harvesting time, so the silo can be built to accommodate the area of corn grown, but be sure and build large enough, for when once used it will grow in favor, and the chances are the area of corn planted and the number of animals fed will be increased when the practice is once established.

Keeping Farm Accounts

Farm accounts to be practical must be of the very simplest possible nature and require a minimum amount of time for their upkeep. Accounts are valuable only as they are carefully kept. The occupation of the farmer is naturally not conducive to bookkeeping habits. When one works hard in the field all day he does not, as a rule, feel like working a great deal over books. With some simple and practical system of keeping track of various items each day, in some sort of day book, one can later take time in the winter when other things are less rushing, and work up big balances. Young people, especially, should be encouraged if they show any desire to try to keep farm accounts.

FOUGHT HIS WAY TO FREEDOM

One of the most unique captives ever brought home to Rome by Julius Caesar was Caractacus of the early Britons. This great chief lost everything in fighting to drive out the Romans and was taken prisoner with his wife and children. When brought before the Roman emperor the proud ruler of the primitive people never showed the least fear. His arms were chained, and the emperor roared to try to frighten Caractacus, but the brave chief never so much as quaked. Instead he looked the monarch in the eye and said:

"You fight to gain the whole world and to make everybody your slaves. I fought to keep my own land and for freedom."

The great courage the chief showed finally touched the heart of the emperor, and the ruler of the Romans resolved to see if Caractacus would be as brave when facing warriors. On one of the great holidays in Rome Caractacus was taken to the great open-air amphitheater where the populace gathered. He was told that if he could defeat the bold knight that would be sent against him he could go back to his home. Caractacus fought as he never had before, for something sweeter than his life was at stake—that of his wife and children. Justice seemed to have tempered the metal of his weapons and when he struck the strong armor of his antagonist gave way before his fearful blows. The result was that Caractacus and his family returned to Britain and to happiness.

MRS. SELBY AND PRIZE BABY

I have always used Cuticura Soap and no other for my baby and he has never had a sore of any kind. He does not even chafe as most babies do. I feel sure that it is all owing to Cuticura Soap for he is fine and healthy, and when two months old won a prize in a baby contest. It makes my heart ache to go into so many homes and see a sweet-faced baby with the whole top of its head a solid mass of scurf, caused by poor soap. I always recommend Cuticura, and nine times out of ten the next time I see the mother she says: 'Oh! I am so glad you told me of Cuticura.'" (Signed) Mrs. G. A. Selby, Redondo Beach, California, Jan. 15, 1911.

Although Cuticura Soap and Ointment are sold everywhere a sample of each, with 32-page book, will be mailed free on application to "Cuticura, Dept. [illegible], Boston.

Time.

"How long have you been a widow, Mrs. Weed?"

"It will be a year the fourth of next month."

"Dear me! Is it as long as that? How time flies!"

"Oh, do you think so? Well, if you ever have to wait a year to look pleasant when men offer you attentions you'll give up the idea that time is much of a flyer."

NO ONE STRONGER THAN HIS STOMACH.

The celebrated Dr. Abernethy of London was firmly of the opinion that disorders of the stomach were the most prolific source of human ailments in general. A recent medical writer says: "every feeling, emotion and affection reports at the stomach (through the system of nerves) and the stomach is affected accordingly. It is the vital center of the body." "It is continued, "so we may be said to live (through) the stomach." He goes on to show that the stomach is the vital center of the body. For weak stomachs and the consequent indigestion or dyspepsia, and the multitude of various diseases which result therefrom, no medicine can be better suited as a curative agent than

Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery.

Mrs. Murray.

"Several months ago I suffered from a severe pain right under the breast-bone," writes Mrs. M. Murray, of Corona, Calif. "I had suffered from it off and on for several years. I also suffered from indigestion, and I asked what was the matter with me, but they did not know. Some said liver. I did not dare to eat as I wanted to for I suffered so. Whenever I swallowed anything it seemed to hurt so. I grew very thin and weak. I then began to take Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. I took five bottles of it, and it helped me from the first dose. I could eat a little at a time, and grew strong fast. To-day I am strong and well and can do a big day's work with ease. Can eat or drink anything and have put on flesh. I can not say enough for Dr. Pierce. He has my undying gratitude."

Before Allowing an Operation

Please Read These Two Letters.

The following letter from Mrs. Orville Rock will prove how unwise it is for women to submit to the dangers of a surgical operation when it may be avoided by taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. She was four weeks in the hospital and came home suffering worse than before. Then after [illegible] Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound restored her health.

HERE IS HER OWN STATEMENT.

Paw Paw, Mich.—"Two years ago I suffered very severely with a displacement — I could not be on my feet for a long time. My physician treated me for several months without much relief, and at last sent me to Ann Arbor for an operation. I was there four weeks and came home suffering worse than before. My mother advised me to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and I did. To-day I am well and strong and do all my own housework. I owe my health to Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and advise every woman who is suffering with any female complaint to try it."—Mrs. Orville Rock, R. R. No. 5, Paw Paw, Mich.

HERE WAS NEVER A WORSE CASE.

Rockport, Ind.—"There never was a worse case of women's ills than mine, and I cannot begin to tell you all I suffered. For over two years I was not able to do anything. I was in bed for a month and the doctor said nothing but an operation would cure me. My father suggested Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound; so to please him I took it, and I improved wonderfully, so I am able to travel, tile housework, take long walks and enjoy myself. I can never praise it enough for what it has done for me."—Mrs. Marguerite Meredith, R. F. D. No. 3, Rockport, Ind.

We will pay a handsome reward to any person who will prove to us that these letters are not genuine and truthful—or that either of the women were paid in any way for their testimonials, or that the original letter from each did not come to us entirely unsolicited.

For 30 years Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has been the standard remedy for female ills. No sick woman does justice to herself if she does not try this famous medicine, made from roots and herbs, it has restored so many suffering women to health.

Write to LYDIA E. PINKHAM MEDICINE CO. (CONFIDENTIAL) LYNN, MASS., for advice. Your letter will be opened, read and answered by a woman and held in strict confidence.

PHRASES ON HEEL AND TOE

Two Words Seem to Have Lent Themselves to Innumerable Coined Expressions.

The fact that heels and toes are the only words which signify both parts of the body and parts of its clothing is doubtless responsible for the innumerable phrases in which both words play an important part. In these unquestionably the heel is the more frequent factor—generally in its corporal as distinguished from its sartorial significance. It is amusing, for instance, to recall the time when the "mashers" of the period wore red heels to their shoes, thereby, it will be remembered, subjecting themselves to the flagellation from the pen of the spectator. Not that red heels were a novelty in Addison's time, for they were in evidence in the reign of Elizabeth. In France the height and color of the heel were a fashion set by the grand monarque.

Present day votaries of the dance might not inconceivably laugh the suggestion to scorn, but, in other respects and with due modifications, the description does not seem unrecognizably archaic. "Out at heels" has long been a proverbial phrase; Falstaff, who nowadays would possibly have declared he was "stoney broke," tells Pistol he is almost "out at heels."

We have—to take to one's heels, to kick one's heels to show a pair of heels, to turn on one's heels, to grind under heel, to cool one's heels, heels over head, the iron heel. And that we are most lofty runaways—a kindred expression to our "showing a clean pair of heels," and "taking to one's heels." And quotations might be multiplied. Nor must the familiar "two for his heels" be forgotten, the vulgarity of which alienated the genteel mind of immortal Mrs. Battle from cribbage

The Dullness of Genius.

In my last I mentioned my having spent an evening with a society of authors who seemed to be jealous and afraid of one another. My uncle was not at all surprised to hear me say that I was disappointed in their conversation "A man may be very entertaining and instructive on paper," said he, "and exceedingly dull in common discourse. I have observed that those who shine most in private company are but secondary stars in the constellation of genius. A small stock of ideas is more easily managed and sooner displayed than a great quantity crowded together. There is very seldom anything extraordinary in the appearance and address of a good writer, whereas a dull author generally distinguishes himself by some oddity of extravagance For this reason I fancy that an assembly of grubs must be very diverting"—By Tobias Smollett to Sir Watkin Phillips of Jesus college, Oxon

Their Preference.

"Now, boys," said the teacher, "I need not tell you anything further of the duty of cultivating a kindly disposition, but I will tell you a little story of two dogs. George had a nice little dog that was as gentle as a lamb. He would sit by George's side quietly for an hour at a time. He would not bark at passers-by, nor at strange dogs, and would never bite anybody or anything. Thomas' dog, on the contrary, was always fighting other dogs, and would sometimes tear them cruelly. He would also fly at the bone and cats in the neighborhood, and on several occasions had been known to seize a cow by the nostrils and throw her. He barked at all the strange men that came along, and would bite them unless somebody interfered. Now, boys, which is the dog you would like to own, George's or Thomas's?" Instantly came the answer in one eager shout: "Thomas's."

The Word Raid in Italian.

A correspondent seems to be amused because the Italians, borrowing the English word ride, in a special sense, choose to spell it phonetically in accordance with their own sound system.

But this surely is neither absurd nor unusual. In French, for example, we have rosbif, raout, bouledogue, and other words which illustrate the same principle; and in English there is breeze, from the French brise (or Spanish briza); junket, from the Italian giuncata; coracle, from the Welsh cwrwgl; reel, from the Gaelic righil, in all of which and in many other words an attempt has been made to represent the foreign sound by a more or less phonetic English spelling.

The word raid is not quite new, however, to Italian. I find it several times in an Italian newspaper of more than four years ago which I happen to have at hand, e. g., "Il raid Pekino Parigi."—From a Letter in the Spectator.

Minerals in the Human Body.

The human body contains, among other constituents, about two pounds of phosphorus, which is essential to the health of the bones and the vigor of the brain. This phosphorus, if extracted and put to another use, would make up about 4,000 packages of friction matches.

Besides phosphorus, the body contains a few ounces of sodium and half an ounce of potassium. The quantity of the latter would be sufficient for many experiments in a class of chemistry.

In addition to sodium and potassium there are a few grains of magnesium, enough to make the "silver rain" for a family's stock of rockets on a Fourth of July evening or to create a brilliant light visible at a considerable distance.—Harper's Weekly

IN GETTING AN ELECTRIC SUCTION CLEANER

DON'T BE DECEIVED and buy one with a cheap motor, a small vertical shaft which will soon wear and drop, especially when in connection with a small fan which must necessarily be run at high speed in order to get sufficient power. Such machines make a neat appearance and may do good work while new, but are SHORT LIVED.

The MAGIC is the most simple in construction, having no pumps, valves, connecting rods, gears, belts, etc., to give out.

After three years' experience with various makes, we sell the BEST the market affords.

Everybody Is Doing It

Twenty new offers to pay the expenses of a boy on the Buckeye Boys Corn Special to Washington next December were made during the past week.

The movement has made a big hit Everybody is helping boost Ohio.

We can grow the corn. Keep your eye on the boys of Ohio. They are going to "do it."

Boys, if you have not entered yet, DO IT NOW or you will be sorry.

You will also have a chance at the state wide cash offer of $335 that will be distributed among the boys. A chance to attend the Ohio State Fair this fall for six days, all expenses paid. A side trip at Washington by boat to Mt. Vernon has been arranged.

Don't be surprised if you have an attack of rheumatism this spring. Just rub the affected parts freely with Chamberlain's Liniment and it will soon disappear. Sold by all dealers.

Only Way Out of It.

Gen. Isaac Sherwood, who represents the Toledo district in the house is a veteran and a great pension getter for his constituents

A year or so ago the general had a letter from a widow living in his district asking for a pension He wrote to her to send the necessary proofs of her husband's service, death and all other essentials. He received certificates and affidavits from the doctor who saw the old soldier die, the undertaker who buried him, the minister who read the service over him, and various other people—all stating that the man was undoubtedly dead The pension was obtained A few days ago the general received a telegram from the pensioned widow reading: "My husband turned up today, alive and well! What shall I do?"

All Hail, To Our Heroes!

All Hail, noble heroes, sleep well on the breast
Of old mother earth, where your loyal feet pressed
And left there the foot-prints that never shall fade,
But shall mark the path, that in glory you made
And around and above thee, forever shall wave
The flag of the Union, you perished to save.

All Hail, noble heroes above thee we'll strew
The roses and lilies and violets blue
The colors that led to the midst of the fray,
And cheered on, to action, when faint by the way,
Cut by bullet and torn by the shell,
Wherever it gleamed you followed it well.

All Hail noble heroes, brave bands of men
Who mustered from hillside, valley and glen,
Through rivers of blood, o'er heaps of the slain,
You fought but to conquer, and ne'er to maintain
May we never forget the grave price that was paid,
Or idly think of the sacrifice made

So we'll gather the blossoms, to honor our brave,
The men who lie sleeping in many a grave,
They sleep as they fell, in the fray, one by one,
And time with fleet-footsteps is still rushing on
But time never can lessen, the honor that's due
To those heroes we hail, those heroes in blue.

ABOUT PEOPLE AND PLACES

We are still for Bryan or anybody Bryan wants.

—o—

Another "nasty" pill for the Telegraph-Republican

—o—

The man who fails to set out peach trees this year misses a golden opportunity

—o—

Lake county is progressive by about 5 to 1

—o—

Miss Jennie Forbes of Ohio Northern University is visiting her mother in Mentor

—o—

A primary always looks like a failure to the fellow who fails to get enough votes

—o—

The Telegraph-Republican was on the losing side as usual It was an awful jolt

—o—

Andy Musgrove is making extensive improvements at his new Mentor avenue residence

—o—

J. F Brown of Perry, Ohio, was in Painesville Monday and attended the La Follette meeting

—o—

Mr. Morris Saslaw, for some time past in the employ of the Up to Date Company, is no longer with that firm.

—o—

Mrs. R Rottenberg, greatly improved in health, was taken home from the Hospital Monday of this week

—o—

Now the successful republican candidates will have to put up a fight to beat the democrats. Is it worth while?

—o—

Politics is a queer game and is one that exalts or depresses the soul according as the tide of success waxes or wanes

—o—

Ex-Senator Thurston's big rally with Breworks, didn't do a bit of harm to the Roosevelt campaign Probably helped it

—o—

Mike Voyner of Fairport has started suit against the Diamond Alkali Co for damages received while in the employ of said company

—o—

If Al Bryan charged full rate for Haskell's bill board advertising, the statement to be filed with the board of elections will be interesting

—o—

All candidates for county offices have reason to congratulate themselves on the absence of personalities during the lively campaign just ended.

—o—

That was a difficult ballot for republicans to vote, but they managed to pick out the Roosevelt delegates all right

—o—

E. O. Huntington, justice of the peace, has purchased of the heirs, the Shedd block on North State street and will put it into shape for occupancy

—o—

In the midst of all this political noise and hustle, no one ever thinks to pause long enough to inquire what has become of the Prohibitionist ticket

—o—

The democrats of Lake county didn't poll a very heavy vote but the old guard kept in line with progressive ideas and voted for Bryanism in every precinct

—o—

The "influence" of the Telegraph-Republican wasn't worth much in the late campaign People seem to read the advice of the T-R and then always vote the other way

—o—

Ashtabula has more green houses, that is more gardens under glass, than any other place in the state of Ohio. Ashtabula now is ahead of Toledo in this respect

—o—

The Mixer does not like to take even a little dose of his own prescription Well, George, we will put a little more sugar-coating on the "nasty" pills hereafter

—o—

Next Sunday evening the Memorial Service under the auspices of the Grand Army of the Republic will be held in the Baptist Church Rev Mr Carmen, the pastor, will preach the sermon

—o—

Strange as it may seem, democrats, more than republicans, seemed to enjoy Senator La Follette's speech delivered in the Park Monday afternoon in fact the speech was almost as good as one of Bryan's best efforts

—o—

The work in connection with the new green houses on West Jackson street is progressing finely now that the weather has improved The walls are being built and the large steam boilers are being placed in position

—o—

The agricultural hall at the fairgrounds will make a very creditable auditorium for Painesville in case of conventions or a large gathering of any kind. It would easily seat three or four thousand people.

Harry Hammar, a Taft delegate, was defeated by Geo. Colgrove, a Roosevelt delegate in the Third Ward We always thought Hammar knew politics better than to get pinched like that.

—o—

Everybody is looking for a good healthy boom at Fairport this year. There were marked improvements in industrial conditions during the year 1911, but the year 1912 promises to witness a "forward movement" that will surpass any thing in Fairport's history.

—o—

Dr Frank Crofoot pinned a Roosevelt button on his coat every time a report came in from a Lake county precinct stating that Roosevelt had won When the count was through he had 21 buttons on his coat, having carried every precinct in the county We do not blame Frank for "feeling his oats" and he deserves to feel good in the single handed combat he waged against the Taft machine.

—o—

Captain M. S. Thompson, who is employed in the sales department of the White Automobile company, is taking a few days' vacation from his duties with that company while he takes the steamer W. B. Davock to the Soo where her regular master will meet the steamer and take charge The manager of the Davock did not have a master at hand to start the steamer up the lakes, so he prevailed upon the White company to loan Capt Thompson to him for a few days Telegraph-republican

—o—

It certainly was not a very kind move toward President Taft on the part of the Telegraph-Republican to go and publish who the Taft delegates were The readers of the T-R learning who the Taft delegates really were showed an earnest inclination to put their cross most any old place instead of along side of the Taft delegates The President done a great deal better in places where the voters made a guess about the delegates. The republican political bosses should have whispered to the editor of the T-R "The people don't know enough to govern themselves so let 'm guess at it."

—o—

The state of Ohio has passed through a most remarkable campaign the President and the only living ex-President of the greatest nation on earth have crossed and re-crossed the state, each speaking to thousands and thousands of people and each hurling the most bitter personal charges at the other Not in a single case has either of these noted men delivered a speech on the affairs of government that would do credit to the humblest citizen of Ohio The fight is over in Ohio, and as we recall the war of words we are reminded of the statement of a colored boy who said all that both Taft and Roosevelt have said and said it in one sentence, here it is: "All dem tings what you say I is, you is."

Valuable Suggestions

The demonstration given at the Up-to-Date store, by Miss Darnell Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday of this week, at which time she showed to hundreds of the ladies of Painesville and vicinity the many good points of Henderson and La Princesse corsets, was greatly appreciated by all

The good will shown by the Up-to-Date management and the entertaining talks by Miss Darnell made this event of more than the usual importance It is in fact unnecessary to say that demonstrations of this kind which have more of the educational tone, with a total absence of pecuniary advantage, go a long way in making the Up-to-Date store the popular place that it is with Painesville ladies of good taste

The Baltimore and Ohio Railroad will on Sunday, May 26th, inaugurate new fast through train service through Akron and Youngstown both East and West between Chicago and Washington, Baltimore and Philadelphia Eastbound train will leave Akron 6 20 P M, Youngstown 7 56 P M, and Westbound train leaves Youngstown 10 18 A M and Akron 12 00 noon These trains will consist of the very best B & O standard coaches, Dining cars and Pullman sleepers Consult Agents for connections with these trains, other trains will run on about present schedules

Preached While He Slept.

Very curious was the case of Simeon Watson, a hard-working, industrious Englishman, aged about 29, of athletic habits and active temperament, who, about 1826, began preaching in his sleep. His trance or sleeping fit invariably lasted as long as the ordinary nonconformist service, which he was in the habit of attending The attacks became more frequent as time went on, and he would go through the whole of the ordinary chapel service, praying, reading the bible and preaching.

MOVEMENT INAUGURATED HERE RECEIVES ATTENTION OF M. E. GENERAL CONFERENCE

Forward Movement In Interest of Country Churches Receives Approval and Support at Minneapolis

Three years ago, Rev T. F Phillips of the Methodist Episcopal church of Painesville, inaugurated a Forward Movement in the interests of the country churches in our outlying territory After two years the Plan was enlarged so as to assist all the country churches of this Cleveland District under the management of a Country Church Commission organized at a meeting held in our parsonage From this Commission a memorial was sent to General Conference in session in Minneapolis which resulted in the following action taken by the Conference Tuesday of last week

"Resolved, That the Board of Home Missions and Church Extension be hereby instructed to consider some plan for instituting and operating a Department on Rural Churches, which shall seek in every possible manner to furnish inspiration and information, methods and plans, in aid of the District Superintendents and Country Pastors of Methodism

And Further, That the Theological Seminaries, Church Periodicals, and the Methodist Federation for Social Service, be called upon to aid in restoring the standing and efficiency of the rural church as the center of the social, intellectual and spiritual life of every community"

PERRY

Mrs Ione Baker remains the same Miss Sonpell of Painesville is in charge

People that have occasion to be out on the street after dark (and when the stars are out of electricity Perry streets are the darkest of the dark) look gratefully toward Will Salkeld's home, where a carefully trimmed lamp shines out regardless of the weather This is only a little thing but several more such "little things" would make our town much pleasanter If you've wondered how you could do a great good to a great number just "let your light shine"

WICKLIFFE

The Wickliffe Charity and Study Club held its last meeting of the season Wednesday afternoon at the home of Mrs Vial on Taylor Ave. Seventeen ladies responded to roll call with quotations. The out of town guest was Mrs. Robert Young of Cleveland. Miss Marguerite Hammond gave a vocal solo and Mrs. Baises an interesting paper taking as the title "By the Roadside." Mrs. Barber read an original poem a "Prophecy of Wickliffe, and the Growth of the Club." It told of the beautiful club house to be erected when our water works system and paving was completed and appartment houses crowded one another on Euclid Ave. Mrs Stork gave two readings from Carleton which was followed with a duet by Mrs. Barber and Mrs. Bowman, Mrs. Barber playing the accompaniment on a guitar. A vote of appreciation was given the program committee who had worked so hard to make the last meeting an enjoyable affair. After the discussion of current events, the Club adjourned to meet the second Wednesday of October

Sacrilegious Cat.

The Chinese world of Philadelphia is searching for a large Maltese cat which had the temerity the other day to steal a nice chicken which had been placed before the sacred joss. There was almost a riot when the guardian of the joss discovered the loss, but this turned to dismay later, when the cat was seen crawling over the roof adjoining the joss house with a good portion of the chicken in her mouth. There was a chase, but the cat was too nimble. Now the joss must go hungry.

A Man's Affection for Woman.

In a recent case in which the question of affection was an important issue, the judge spoke wisely as a philosopher It was a bit of gold in the dross of the court life of a great wicked city "A man's affection for a woman" said the modern Solomon, "is shown by his willingness to take trouble in her behalf, to do little services for her, to do with a willing hand that which a man not in love would deem tiresome, troublesome and disquieting."

Family Close to Death.

During a recent terrific storm, at Talleywang, N S W., a miner, his wife and child had a narrow escape from death in their cabin The storm caused a gigantic tree to fall across the center of the house, but providentially the man was at one end of the building and his wife and child at the other when it fell; and although the central portion of the cabin was literally smashed to the ground, either end of the structure remained intact.

Purely Speculative.

"I have always been interested," said little Binks, "in the utilization of waste Now where do you suppose all these bursted tires go to in the end?" "I don't know," said the Genial Philosopher, "but if they go where most people consign 'em there must be a terrible smell of rubber in the hereafter."—Harper's Weekly.

Amusing Trick of Messengers.

The stamp trick is a very common one with messengers because of the amount of amusement derived from it. It consists in sticking a new stamp on a step or some prominent place, and watching the various attempts of passers-by to pick it up, which, of course, are unsuccessful.—London Mail.

GREAT CHECK TO AVIATION

Flying in America Is Injured by Sensational Experiments That Often Are Disastrous.

Aviation has been very slow in taking hold in this country. While abroad the number of machines demanded by the constantly growing corps of aviators taxes the capacity of the many manufacturing plants in France, England and Germany, there is not business enough in the United States to keep our concerns, few in number though they be, in full activity.

For this undeniable state of affairs there is a reason, and the fancy and exhibition flights of American aviators, so widely advertised, must bear a large part of the burden. Aeroplanes will never become popular for general pleasure travel until it has been demonstrated that they can be operated with comparative safety.

Far from advancing the cause of aviation, as has been often stated by those unfamiliar with the situation, such exploits, for instance, as those of Lincoln Beachey last January at Los Angeles, and previous to that at Niagara Falls tend to terrify the ordinary mind and lead it to believe that the perils thus encountered are inseparable from the aeroplane.

Then when disaster comes as it is bound to come, and another aviator is added to the death roll, the sensational press finds still further opportunity to scare off those who might otherwise be enjoying flight.

Aviation as a popular means of amusement seems now to be a certainty—some time. But sensational flying only tends to hold back this final consummation. In time this handicap can be overcome because the demand for exhibition work is growing less and less all the time and the "circus" type of aviator will be forced to turn to more lucrative fields for exploitation.

Already, however, sensible aviators realize in what direction the real future of aerolocomotion lies, and are doing their best to impress the fact on the more reckless and less intelligent of their brethren.

Today we have machines which are suitable for aerial travel in this country. Once let the fact that they can be operated without undue risk be proved, and there will be no lack of men to man them.—Boston Transcript.

What Indian Will Do for a Friend.

James Oliver Curwood, author of the novel, "Flower of the North," tells the following story in support of his claim that the unsophisticated Indian is the best friend on earth. When traveling from the Barren Lands Mr. Curwood and an Indian hunter, Mukoki, whose life he had once saved, came across the skeleton of a fine moose, the author expressed his regret that they were too heavily laden to carry the magnificent antlers back with them. Months later a package arrived for Mr. Curwood to the Detroit custom house. In it were the horns cut from the moose. Mukoki had traveled back two hundred miles into the wilderness with dogs and sledge to do this favor for a friend.—Harper's Bazar.

No Place for Him.

"William, come. I refuse to sit through another act of this show with you."

"But, my dear, it may not be——"

"No, no. It isn't fit for decent people to see. I refuse to stay here with you any longer."

"Very well, if that's the way you feel about it. Only I would like to know how the plot is finally unfolded."

"I'll get a matinee ticket and tell you."

Queer Beehives.

In the prettily-situated mountain village of Hoefel, in Silesia, there are a number of curious beehives in the shape of lifesize figures cleverly carved in wood and painted in colors. The figures were carved over a century ago by monks of the Naumburg Monastery, who were at that time in possession of a large farm in the district. There are twenty of these strange beehives, and they represent different characters, ranging from Moses to a military officer, a country girl and a night watchman with a spear. The figures are hollow with the exception of the heads, which are solid, the openings for the bees being in front in the middle of the figures.—Wide World.

Lime in Orchards.

Lime may sometimes be used to good advantage in the orchards. Where green crops have been turned under the soil is apt to become acid, too porous and plant food become unavailable. When this is the case use hydrated lime from 600 pounds to a ton per acre, according to the needs of your soil.

Knew Her Place.

Mr. Exe—What! Another new dress! Perhaps you will tell me, madam, how I shall get the money to pay for it?

Mrs. Exe—You must excuse me. I am your wife, not your financial adviser.

Friendly Advice.

Poet—A publisher I called to see this morning had the audacity to call me an ass. I'm going to see my solicitor.

Friend—I shouldn't, old chap. See a vet.—Sketch.

Wifely Precaution.

"Husband, we must begin to economize."

"I guess you're right, wife. When shall we commence?"

"Just as soon as I have picked out my winter hat."

Different Reason.

She—And you swear that you are not taking me on account of my money?

He—On the contrary, darling. I'm taking the money on account of you.—Fliegende Blaetter.

COL. ROOSEVELT AND JUDSON HARMON WIN IN BUCKEYE STATE PRIMARIES

RETURNS SHOW THAT COLONEL WILL CONTROL THE BUCKEYE STATE CONVENTION.

SECURES DELGATES-AT-LARGE

Governor Harmon Wins Fourteen Delegates to Convention and Will Get Six Delegates-at-Large—Wilson Makes Good Run.

Columbus, O.—Col. Theodore Roosevelt appears to have won a decisive victory in Ohio's presidential primaries, while Governor Harmon seems to have led Woodrow Wilson by a narrow margin on the Democratic ticket.

Of twenty-one congressional districts in this state, totals computed when fewer than half the precincts had reported indicated that Colonel Roosevelt will have 27 of the 42 Republican district delegates to the national convention and President Taft seven. The result in four congressional districts was in doubt.

The same precincts had submitted reports which seemed to show 11 delegates for Governor Harmon and ten delegates for Woodrow Wilson had been chosen. The result in nine congressional districts was in doubt.

Roosevelt Has 27 Delegates.

In the face of the returns which have been received Colonel Roosevelt has carried the Fourth, Fifth, Eighth, Ninth, Tenth, Eleventh, Twelfth, Fourteenth, Seventeenth, Eighteenth, Nineteenth, Twentieth and Twenty-first districts. In [illegible] the [illegible] two [illegible] figures [illegible] states [illegible] nation [illegible]

THEODORE ROOSEVELT.

President Taft, according to the returns, has won delegates from only the First, Second and Third districts, with one of the two delegates from the Thirteenth. These districts therefore assure the president of seven delegates from Ohio to the national convention.

The congressional districts from which the Republican returns are so meager as to prevent the making of any calculations regarding their election results are the Sixth, Seventh, Fifteenth and Sixteenth.

In the Democratic primaries Governor Harmon, so far as can be learned, has carried the First, Second, Third, Fifth, Seventh, Eleventh and Seventeenth districts. These victories insure him of 14 delegates to the Baltimore convention.

Woodrow Wilson appears to have won the delegates from the Fourth, Ninth, Fourteenth, Twentieth and Twenty-first districts. These counted ten delegates for him.

The districts from which only meager returns have been received were the Sixth, Eighth, Tenth, Twelfth, Thirteenth, Fifteenth, Sixteenth, Eighteenth and Nineteenth.

The six delegates at large from Ohio to the Chicago convention probably will be instructed for Roosevelt. This probability is based on the complexion of the state convention delegates chosen, nearly all of whom are of the Roosevelt faction.

The six to the Baltimore convention very likely will be instructed for Harmon, for the governor appeared to have a big lead over Wilson in the preference vote. In the call of the Democratic state convention it was stipulated that the primary winner should name the delegates at large.

La Follette's Vote in State.

Senator La Follette received a larger vote than the politicians predicted for him, but it was nearly all in the northern part of the state where the followers of the Wisconsin senator refused to desert his cause.

Early returns from points widely scattered showed a surprisingly small vote from the farmers and the villages. All factions in the four-sided contest in the state had addressed their best efforts to the farmers and all were surprised that the farmers failed to respond. It put an element of uncertainty in the election that made all managers worry and study.

JUDSON HARMON.

CRANE TO QUIT CONGRESS

Solon Announces He Will Not Be Candidate for Re-election to United States Senate.

Washington, D. C.—Senator W. Murray Crane of Massachusetts announced that he would not be a candidate before the primaries in his state next autumn. The statement follows in part:

"I intended to defer making a statement to this effect until after the legislature the Massachusetts legislature provides for the nomination of United States senators in a manner substantially similar to the existing law relating to the nominations of candidates for the presidency, representatives in congress and state elective offices, a much earlier campaign for this office will be necessary. I therefore make known my position at this time in order that candidates for my seat may have the fullest opportunity."

BRUTAL MURDER IS UNEARTHED

Woman's Body Found in Boston With Towel Around Neck and Mouth Stuffed Full of Cloth.

Boston, Mass.—Never before in the history of Boston police annals has such cruelty been exhibited by a murderer as was discovered when the body of beautiful Mrs. Lillian Jewar was found on the floor of one of the rooms of her apartments with several pillows on top of her face, her mouth plugged up with a large piece of her kimono, string stuffed in her nose and a bloody bath towel wrapped tightly around her throat.

Evidences of a struggle in the room in which her body was found indicated she fought against the person who took her life. At the morgue where an autopsy was performed it was found her body was a mass of bruises. Mrs. Jewar, who was an attractive brunet and was aged about 30, had the reputation of being quiet and well-to-do. Her husband is dead and a daughter lives in Connecticut.

TIGERS ARE FINED $100 EACH

Members of Detroit Baseball Club Who Struck Are Also Reinstated by the Magnates.

Philadelphia, Pa.—After a session of nearly two hours, the American league baseball magnates came to a decision on the question which arose out of the strike of the Detroit baseball club. Ty Cobb's case remains in the same state—still under indefinite suspension. The Detroit players are fined $100 each and reinstated.

The magnates adopted a resolution to the effect that they would see in the future that players on the field are suitably protected from insults by fans.

Ban Johnson, president of the league, declared that he has not received any detailed report of the occurrence in New York. He said that he wired Ty Cobb for an affidavit of the circumstances of the assault, and arranged with President Farrell of the New York club to obtain any evidence required in New York.

EAGER AVIATOR FALLS TO DEATH

Pupil at Wright Aviation School Who Had Been Forbidden to Fly Alone Disobeys Orders.

Dayton, O.—Fred J. Southard, aged 25, a member of a wealthy family of Minneapolis, was instantly killed at the Wright aviation field at Simms Station, eight miles from here, because of his irresistible ambition to fly alone.

The machine in which Southard was attempting to fly turned turtle when he was about 100 feet in the air, and dropped like a plummet. Southard had been a pupil at the Wright aviation school for several weeks, but had not finished his course. A few days ago he purchased the machine in which he was killed, but the Wright managers would not grant him permission to make a flight alone.

St. Clairsville, O.—Robbers broke into the postoffice here, blew open the safe with nitroglycerin, stole $1,200 and escaped in a rig they had stolen.

RICHESON DIES IN ELECTRIC CHAIR

FORMER CLERGYMAN PAYS PENALTY FOR THE MURDER OF AVIS LINNELL.

HIS LAST DAY ON EARTH

Confessed Slayer of Girl Who Put All Confidence in Her Lover Prays, Sings Hymns and Recites Psalms.

Born in Rose Hill, Va., in 1882.

Attended high school in Amherst Court House, Va.

Went to Carrollton, Mo., in 1898 and secured employment in hardware store.

Secured position as conductor of St. Louis street car line in 1900.

Became active leader among striking employes.

Became engaged to Miss Felts and gave her engagement ring.

Leaves college to attend Newton Theological Seminary in 1906.

Preached in Hyannis, Mass., and meets Avis Linnell.

Gives engagement ring to Miss Linnell in 1909.

Richeson's salary envelope mysteriously disappears in 1909.

Mixes poison potion two days later.

Telephones Miss Linnell on same afternoon to meet him.

October 14—Meets Miss Linnell and takes her to lunch.

October 20—Richeson is arrested.

November 2—Richeson issues statement denying guilt and resigns pastorate.

January 6, 1912—Confesses guilt.

January 9—Death sentence pronounced by Judge George A. Sanderson.

May 16—Governor Foss refuses to commute death sentence.

May 21—Richeson dies in electric chair at 12:17 a. m.

Boston, Mass.—Clarence V. T. Richeson has paid the penalty for the murder of Avis Linnell. The former clergyman was electrocuted at 12:17 on the morning of May 21 in the Charlestown state prison.

The condemned man went to the electric chair with more firmness and courage than had been expected by those who had observed him for the past week. He had spent his last hours in seeking spiritual consolation in the Bible and in conversation with his spiritual advisers.

The current was turned on at 12:10:02. Richeson was pronounced dead at 12:17.

The man who gave the poison to poor Avis Linnell in order that he might be free to wed Miss Violet Edmands, an heiress, bore himself calmly under the influence of religious guidance during the last hours of his death watch. Before, however, he had wept and prayed that Governor Foss would relent.

Early in the evening before the electrocution Chaplain Stebbins, after leaving the condemned man, said: "Richeson is wholly resigned to his fate. He has made what peace he can with his Maker."

The chaplain did not tell, however, of the nerve wracking experience he and Dr. Johnson had with the condemned man before they succeeded in having him resign himself to his fate.

Throughout all of the day before he was to die, Richeson either prayed, sang hymns or recited psalms. In the evening he swallowed some broth. At 10 o'clock the prison barber came in to shave him. Guards held Richeson while this was being done.

Richeson asked about the hour set for his execution. "When will it be, warden," was his anxious query.

"It depends entirely on yourself," he was told.

At these words tears streamed down Richeson's cheeks and in a quivering tone he said: "Don't be afraid of me. There will be no scene."

The solemn hour of midnight found Richeson praying, after which he recited the Twenty-third Psalm.

"I am ready now," he said. A moment later the warden appeared to escort him to the death chamber. Richeson did not falter and walked to the chair with firm step.

Two Titanic's Victims' Wills.

Philadelphia, Pa.—The wills of two of the Titanic's victims, George and Harry Elkins Widener, father and son, were filed for probate here.

Harry Elkins Widener gives his valuable library to Harvard university. Its entire estate, which is valued at $150,000 is left to his mother. George D. Widener's will provides that one-third of his estate shall go to his widow. The remainder of the estate, estimated to be worth $10,000,000, is placed in trust for the benefit of his children and grand children.

To Determine What Beer Is.

Washington, D. C.—A personally conducted test of the product of breweries throughout the country to determine "just what is beer" will be made by Drs. Doolittle, Mitchell and Dunlap of the pure food board.

The doctors have been working for a year on the question.

The members of the board have not yet decided just what breweries they will visit, but they have just declared when interviewed here that they would learn about all the different kinds of beer made.

Doctor Advised Resinol for Eczema

A Stubborn Case. Relief at Once. Then a Perfect Cure.

Mrs. V. A. Collins, McSherrystown, Pa., tells a story that will interest every sufferer from itching, burning skin troubles. She writes:

"We had a rather stubborn case of eczema several years ago. Acting on the advice of my physician, I immediately procured a jar of Resinol Ointment and a cake of Resinol Soap, which I found gave relief at once, and finally effected a perfect cure. Of Resinol Soap I cannot speak highly enough. I think it invaluable in the home, especially among the children."

And as if to confirmation, comes this letter from Mrs. W. A. Lucas, Montclare, S. C. "My little babe was a great sufferer from eczema of the scalp. I used Resinol Ointment regularly for about two months, and it healed her head beautifully."

Resinol Ointment stops itching instantly, and quickly heals eczema, rashes, ringworm and facial eruptions, as well as boils, carbuncles, ulcers, burns, scalds, wounds, and itching, inflamed and bleeding piles. Resinol Soap is medicated in the same way as Resinol Ointment, and is highly beneficial, used alone or in conjunction with it. Your druggist recommends and sells them (Soap, 25c. Ointment 50c and $1.00), but you can get a sample of each on application to Dept 4K, Resinol Chemical Co., Baltimore, Md.

Looking to the Inevitable.

Seventy-nine years old but with no thought of dying for years, a South Brooklyn retired windmill dealer spent his recent birthday in Cleveland, O., looking for a bargain in coffins. He said he never had cared much for show and thought he would care less when dead, so he wanted something that would be durable, not fancy. "The undertakers wanted more than $100 for good coffins," he told a friend, "none of which looked to be worth more than $50. For $25 I found I could get one that looked as if it might have cost $250 to make. You don't suppose I could get a good second hand one anywhere, do you?" The man did not invest, but decided he would wait awhile and see if the high cost of dying might not be reduced.

Caring for the Nation's Heroes

by George Morris

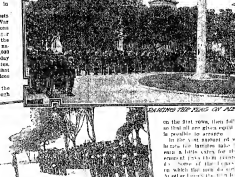
NATIONAL SOLDIERS' HOME NEAR WASHINGTON



RAISING THE FLAG ON MEMORIAL DAY

VETERANS HOLDING MEMORIAL SERVICE

IMPOSING GATEWAY TO THE SOLDIER'S HOME

On Decoration Day thousands of men, women and children throughout the length and breadth of the land will gather in the various cemeteries and lay garlands upon the vast resting places of the soldiers that have laid down their lives in defense of their country.

In practically every city hosts of veterans of the Civil War will gather and hold reunions to speak of the past, the anger and passion deadened by the lapse of time, while at ten national homes more than 20,000 men will usher in the day thankful that the United States, of all nations, is a republic that is not ungrateful for services performed under its flag.

The veterans of the various wars, notably the Civil and Spanish-American, who went through the conflicts unscathed are constantly in mind. There are the Grand Army of the Republic, Loyal Legion and Army and Navy Union, splendid organizations to which many of the officers and men who fought in the Civil War belong, while the veteran association of the Spanish-American War holds the membership of many who went through that struggle.

In the national cemeteries here and there, and in other burial grounds, are stones that mark the spots where lie the remains of those who participated in the conflicts and each succeeding Decoration Day their memory is kept alive by the floral offerings strewn upon their graves.

But what about the veterans who returned from the front, torn by shot and shell, unable to resume their places in the ranks of the workers without means of self-support and unwilling to thrust themselves upon their kith and kin?

At the close of the Civil War, when more than half a million men laid down their arms of war and in a few months were transformed from soldiers to citizens, the question of what to do with those who were incapacitated arose.

"Pensions are well enough in their way, but pensions are not sufficient," declared Congress. "We must do more," continued the members of both House and Senate. "We must establish a home for those who have no homes," and this sentiment crystallized into what is now one of the most important features with which the nation deals.

The National Home for disabled volunteer soldiers is located in the District of Columbia. There are branches of the National Home at Dayton, O.; Milwaukee, Wis.; Togus, Me.; Hampton, Va.; Leavenworth, Kan.; Santa Monica, Cal.; Marion, Ind.; Danville, Ill.; Johnson City, Tenn., and Hot Springs, S. D.

There are state homes for disabled volunteer soldiers provided by the states of California, Colorado, Connecticut, Idaho, Illinois, Indiana, Iowa, Kansas, Massachusetts, Michigan, Minnesota, Missouri, Montana, Nebraska, New Hampshire, New Jersey, New York, North Dakota, Ohio, Oregon, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, South Dakota, Vermont, Washington, Wisconsin and Wyoming.

Some idea of the extent of the properties supported by the Federal government may be had from the last report of the board of managers, in which the acreage of the homes is set down as 8,369, valued at $483,474.85. On this land are buildings aggregating a value of $18,513,648.12. To acquire this property, to maintain it and to care for the thousands of soldiers, the total outlay up to the close of 1911 has been in the neighborhood of $90,000,000.

When the first home was established, within the year, there were 810 veterans cared for. Then each succeeding year increased at the rate of almost 1,000 per year until in 1908, the greatest number, 34,919, were taken care of. At the same time the death rate among the veterans increased year by year, and from 10.95 per 1,000 in 1867 it has advanced to 85.80 per 1,000.

Yet when one takes into consideration the physical condition of soldiers when admitted to the homes and that it has been 47 years since the Civil War, the death rate is really low, for the average life of the old soldiers has been a trifle more than 70 years—a ripe age for the majority of men. Indeed, this alone is a most notable tribute to the government for its excellent care of its wards.

To visit one of these national homes is to have a treat, for nowhere will one find a more happy or contented set of men. Except for the difference in location and style of architecture of the buildings, all of the homes are similar for they are operated on the plan of giving one and all the same. Some of the homes, like the one at Hampton, Va., are situated upon the banks of a stream, but then there is one in the mountains, another in the land of continual sunshine and flowers, California, while each possesses some natural characteristic to differ it from the other.

That, however, is the immaterial side of the homes, for it is the comforts and conveniences afforded the inmates that draws the attention of visitors and sends them away filled with thoughts of kindliness and proud of being citizens of a nation that is so lavish in its care of those who have upheld the honor of the flag in the face of the enemy.

Amid parklike surroundings are the buildings, flanked with broad porches, on which are the settees where, basking in the sun, may be found those old soldiers who are more content to repose with pipe and paper than to join their comrades beneath the trees or strolling around the grounds.

First, and all important, is the military side of the home. Each inmate is always in uniform and army discipline prevails. All able-bodied men on the grounds salute their superior officers as they pass, and there are stated times for doing stated things, so that there must be absolute order.

At 5:30 in summer and 6:45 in winter the men turn out. After breakfast the men return to their barracks, make up their beds and put their things in order. Then, unless assigned to duty as room orderly or on guard mount, at which all in the barracks have to take their turns, the soldier is at liberty until tattoo at 8:30, when he must be on hand to retire when taps are sounded at 9.

While at liberty during the day the soldier may leave the grounds by applying for a pass. He may secure a pass to remain outside the grounds not only for a day but even for 30 days, if he so desires and his behavior has been good. There is but little restraint upon the men and they are practically as free as though they lived in their own homes.

For those who prefer to remain within the grounds of the home there is much with which to drive away either discontent or ennui. Besides splendid libraries where may be found not only books and magazines but daily papers from different parts of the country, there is at each home an amusement hall where there are billiard and pool tables and many small tables for cards, checkers and dominoes.

Another diversion is the band concert each afternoon. Another amusement and an important one is the theater. Each of the homes is equipped with a hall large enough to seat practically every inmate and at the end is a stage of generous size. Theatrical companies playing in nearby cities are engaged to give a "one-night stand" at the hall and the performance usually proves a great treat.

In the seating of the veterans there is system exercised, for the deaf and the dim-eyed are given the first rows, then follow those less afflicted, so that all are given equal advantages as far as it is possible to arrange.

In the vast amount of work to be done at the homes the inmates take their part and thereby earn a little extra for themselves, for the government pays them according to what they can do. Some of the homes have farms attached on which the men do considerable of the work. At other homes the men look after grounds, while at all of the homes there are those who act as guards or guides.

The money they receive for their work is all extra, for they receive their pensions just the same and they are at liberty to either spend their funds for luxuries at the commissary or send checks to their relatives. One great trouble that the commandants of the various homes have had has been the control of the soldiers who persist in patronizing the saloons that are to be found just beyond the gates, but, by vigilance the old men are kept from getting into any trouble.

When a soldier is stricken with illness he is sent to the hospital where every possible attention is given him. His diet is specially prepared to suit his needs and there is nothing too good for him. It might be added that the hospital is always well occupied, for there are many who are failing in health and strength and are patiently waiting the setting of the sun.

When the last day has come and the soldier has gone to join his comrades on the other side his body is borne to the chapel, a minister of his religion says the last rites over him and then in a casket borne upon a caisson and escorted by a squad of men under arms, accompanied by a fife and drum corps playing a dirge, he is given full military honors including the rattle of muskets over his grave.

The cemeteries by the homes are growing each year, but every stone is a monument to a brave heart who gave his best years in order that the nation might endure.

The Day of Memories

Memorial customs introduced at the close of the Civil war, in compliance with plans made by Commander-in-Chief John A. Logan, will be observed this year in thousands of cities, villages and hamlets, the surviving veterans still taking a leading part in the exercises.

It is they who have made the arrangements for the ceremonies, they will go early to the cemeteries and place blossoms upon the graves of their brother soldiers, they will constitute a pathetic and inspiring feature of the parade.

Some day they will not be here to plan and execute for Memorial day. Some day they all will have gone into camp on the plains and in the cities of the dead. Some day a grateful public will look in vain for any of them in the parade. Then, what? Will the day and its beautiful, patriotic customs that were so dear to them, cease to be remembered and observed? Were that question submitted to the people today it is certain that the votes against remembrance and observance would be too few for enumeration.

The soldiers have led the way, they have shown the people how to plan and execute for a successful observance of the day. There have been not a few but thousands of deeply interested participants. All of the patriotic societies that have grown out of the Civil war are among them and their members are numbered by the tens of thousands. Then there are the societies which have come into existence as a result of the revolutionary war, the war of 1812, the war with Mexico, the Spanish-American war and the Philippine insurrection. And these are not all. Millions of men and women who have come from the schools and other millions of boys and girls now in the schools would forbid a suspension of Memorial day observances.

Pass the word along the thinning ranks of every veteran parade in the country they served so well that the custom initiated by them and their sleeping associates shall not be abandoned, that it shall be handed on from generation to generation.

Taking Their Measure.

Do those people who moved into the flat across the hall seem to be desirable neighbors? asked the man.

"No," replied the woman. "I watched every thing that came out of the moving van. I haven't a thing that we would care to borrow."

"Long Time" is Defined

Remark of Governor of North Carolina to Governor of South Carolina Brought Into Court.

The oft-quoted remark of the Governor of North Carolina to the Governor of South Carolina has at last been brought into court, carefully construed, and found not to be so long as some other times. It is probable that it was the exceeding droughtiness of the interval which made it seem long. In a prosecution for the illegal sale of whisky in Alabama, a witness testified that he had bought a pint of liquor of the accused "a short time" before the grand jury returned the indictment against him. It was objected that this evidence did not show that the prosecution had been begun within 12 months after the sale of the whisky, the time limited by statute for beginning a prosecution. In discussing this objection the Supreme court, in Wilson versus State, 58 Southern Reporter, 114, after holding that "a short time" might be taken in the connection in which it was used to refer to a period less than 12 months, said, by way of illustration: "The expression 'a long time' would refer to a very different period of duration and have a widely different meaning in measuring time when used by an archaeologist having reference to the period of existence of the Egyptian pyramids than when used by Carolina Governors with reference to the time between drinks." The court may be right, but probably the Governor of North Carolina measured time as recommended by the poet who said: "We live * * * in feelings, not in figures on the dial."—Colliers'.

GIRL CALMLY HEARD OF DEATH

MISS CECILIA FARLEY RECEIVED INFORMATION OF ZOLLINGER'S DEATH WITH COMPOSURE.

QUIGLEY IS AGAIN ARRESTED

Young Man Who Is Closely Associated With Tragedy as Fiance of the Girl Is Placed in Custody.

Columbus.—Without a word to reveal the circumstances which caused his end, Alvin E. Zollinger, who was shot in Franklin park by Miss Cecilia Farley, according to her admission to the police, died at St. Francis hospital. He never regained consciousness from the time of the shooting and his version of the affair will never be known. At the bedside were Zollinger's wife, his son, Clayton, aged fifteen, and his father, James T. Zollinger, a rental agent, of 937 Oak street. Under the direction of Coroner Hanes a post-mortem examination of the body was held by Dr. I. B. Harris, surgeon at St. Francis hospital. Coroner Hanes will base his report in the case upon this and the mass of evidence already accumulated by the police.

Order Quigley Re-Arrested.

Chief Carter ordered the re-arrest of Jerome Quigley, who is free upon a bond of $10,000, put up by Ben Harmon, his employer at the Neil House, and others. The police rather expected Quigley's attorney would advise him to give himself up when he found Zollinger had died. When Quigley did not appear the chief and the prosecutor, after a conference, decided that the young man should be brought in at once. He was later arraigned in court on a charge of first degree murder [illegible] in the first degree [illegible].

[illegible] it was announced [illegible] affidavits charging Miss Farley and Quigley with murder in the first degree were filed. Both will have to remain locked up until the preliminary hearing, according to the announcement of Judge Osborn.

Won't Accept Bond Now.

Until after a preliminary hearing there will be no bail on the first degree murder case of Miss Farley or Quigley. Judge Osborn pointed to Section 9 of Article 1 in the constitution, which says: "All persons shall be bailable by sufficient sureties, except for capital offenses where the proof is evident or the presumption great."

"Although one can hardly say that the proof is evident here in both cases," said Judge Osborn, "the presumption is great and you can say that there will be no bond in either case at least until after the preliminary hearing."

Besides wife, children and father, Zollinger had a brother, Edmund V. Zollinger, who was here two weeks ago on a visit with his father.

Hears News Calmly.

Chief Carter personally carried the message to Miss Farley, notifying her of Zollinger's death. As he came into the emergency hospital in which the girl is confined the chief said: "I have bad news for you this morning, Miss Farley." "Is he dead?" she asked. "He died between 9 and 10 o'clock," said the chief. "I wonder why they didn't tell me then," the girl asked. She made no further comment, but after standing silent for a moment began to cry.

HUNTS ENEMIES WITH KNIFE.

Abe Clark Said That Foes Were Seeking His Life.

Columbus.—"Frank Whiting and three other men are after me to take my life. I've got to defend myself," explained Mr. Abe Clark, aged forty, colored laborer, when Officer Dennis demanded that he cease hunting about Naghten street saloons with a butcher knife. Dennis arrested Clark and sent him to the police station for investigation. Clark lives at 170 Lazelle and told Wagonmen Remmert and Hiesland that four men want to kill him but that he was going to meet them more than half way. The man is said to have been a ward at the State hospital.

$1 SELLS FOR $2,600.

Dayton.—A silver dollar of the coinage of 1804 and said to be one of 13 of its kind in existence was sold by Alben J. Fink, a curio dealer of this city, to A. T. Nygren, a coin collector of Los Angeles, for $2,600. Fink secured the coin from a Pittsburgh collector.

FEUD COSTS FARMER'S EYE.

Waverly.—While William Nicodemus was opening a drain ditch which Martin Bringer, an adjoining farmer, had closed, diverting the water upon Nicodemus' land, Bringer discharged a shot gun at him near Germany. Nicodemus' left shoulder and face were pierced and the sight of his left eye destroyed and rendering him condition critical. Bringer was arrested. Nicodemus is a member of the board of infirmary directors of Pike county.

SHOOTS WIFE, KILLS SELF.

Kenton.—Unable to live happily with his wife and unhappy because he was living without her, William Thrailkill determined that both should die. Thrailkill stepped into the rear door of the house where his wife was staying. Instinctively, the woman turned and threw her right arm up in front of her head, as if to ward off a blow. A second later the blinding flash of a revolver sent a bullet plowing into her arm. As she fell to the floor Thrailkill shot himself.

HOLDERS CONSENT TO SELL.

Stockholders of Cleveland Illuminating Co. Agree to the Transfer.

Cleveland.—The deal for the sale of the Cleveland Electric Illuminating company has been made. The Guaranty Trust company of New York issued notice that holders of over 60 per cent. of the stock of the illuminating company have agreed to the terms of sale offered by Harrison Williams, a New York capitalist. The Eastern interests are ready to put the deal through.

Stockholders who are willing to sell at $130 a share have until May 31 to make their formal acceptance. Ten days more will be allowed for the deposit of all stock at the Guaranty Trust company. By June 1 the purchasers agree to say whether or not they will exercise the option to purchase. If they do, shareholders will receive payment by June 15.

The Central States Electric company will be incorporated as a holding company to represent the [illegible] correspondents for Spencer, Trask & Co., New York bankers, aiding the underwriting of the deal, stated that they had agreed to take for their own account a substantial amount of the common and preferred stock of the Central States Electric company. They have already received subscription for the larger part of this from local shareholders of the Illuminating company, who expect to put about 40 per cent. of what they realize from the sale back into the stocks of the holding company.

The Illuminating company was formed in 1893 by consolidation of the Cleveland Electric and the Brush Electric Light companies with $6,500,000 of stock, common and preferred. James Parmelee is president and Myron T. Herrick is a large stockholder.

STATE ATTACKS ALIBI CHAIN.

Prosecution in Huffman Case Will Try to Disprove Defense.

Columbus.—The first state's witness to attack the alibi of Senator Huffman was called to the stand in the person of D. L. Matchett of Greenville, engrossing clerk of the last senate. He testified that the senate on the afternoon of April 27 adjourned before 4 o'clock, as he took the 4 o'clock Big Four train for his home. On that train he said were Harry Probasco and a number of Cincinnati men interested in the Cincinnati canal bill which had been passed by the senate that afternoon.

The defense claimed that the senate meeting adjourned sometime between 4 and 4:30, and that the committee meeting which furnishes the alibi did not begin until a half hour later and lasted until 6 o'clock. The men mentioned by Matchett are waiting to be called.

In support of the time of the alibi, the defense in the present trial has introduced considerable evidence concerning the time of a ball game, the progress of which was watched by Senator Hudson in East Broad street. This game they claim closed at 5 o'clock, but the witnesses declare that the committee meeting did not take place until after that time.

Senator Shaffer called after Matchett, testified that he attended the committee meeting on the afternoon in question and that senate meeting had adjourned at 4:30 or 4:35.

KILLED WHILE STEALING RIDE.

Columbus.—Coroner Hanes, of this city, is trying to positively identify a man run over near Powell, on the Hocking Valley railroad, and supposed to be James Fairchild, aged thirty, a Toledo glassworker. The man was stealing a ride on the train and the crew was notified of the accident by a pal, who disappeared after delivering the message. When the crew found the injured man he had the left leg cut off close at the hip, the left arm broken and his skull badly crushed. He was placed on the train and taken to the Union station and thence to St. Francis hospital. He lingered for a couple of hours and died a little after midnight. The man bore a union card of Toledo local No. 81, glassworkers' union. The man who disappeared after giving word of the accident is supposed to have been with the dead man beating his way to Columbus. Coroner Hanes will get in communication with Toledo in an effort to locate relatives and friends of the man.

ADMIT BREAKING LIQUOR LAW.

Tonneaul Detectives working in conjunction with the city authorities made a raid on speakeasies and five arrests resulted. The detectives have been gathering evidence for nearly a month. The five arrested are Nick Tollis, Sam Janos, John Apostle, Mike Polaski and James Tomlinson. Tollis and Polaski were arraigned and pleaded guilty, being fined $450 and $300.

FINDS BABY SMOTHERED.

Zanesville.—When Mrs. Arthur Dalton, of Chesterhill, went to the crib of her six months' old daughter she found the baby had been smothered by the heavy covers. The mother is prostrated.

AGED LADY DEAD.

Bellefontaine.—Mrs. [illegible], aged eighty, died after a short illness. She taught the school in Logan county.

FOOLED THE POLICE.

Lima.—Although W. H. Smith of Detroit appeared to be a penniless tramp, wore shabby clothes and presented a dejected appearance when arrested here after a struggle with an officer, $1,255 was found in his pockets.

Port Clinton.—It is thought the apple orchards, which are in full bloom, suffered from the snowstorm here. The peach blossoms have passed the danger mark.

"ONE MILLION LEAGUE" FOR MANITOBA.

The purposes of the "Million for Manitoba League" are set out in the fact that Manitoba wants more people. Today the population is less than five hundred thousand, and the determination of the representative men of the Province to devote their best energies to increasing this to a million is a worthy one. There is already a widespread interest in every municipality; committees are appointed, whose duties are to secure such a thorough knowledge of local conditions that, whether the applicant for information be a laborer for the farm, a would-be tenant, a probable homesteader, the buyer of a small improved farm or the purchaser of a large tract for colonizing farmers, the information is at hand, free.

The advantages that Manitoba possesses are many, and with the exploitation that will be given them by the birth of this new acquisition to the settlement and immigration propaganda that is being carried on by the Dominion Government, there is no doubt that the establishment of the bureau will very soon bring about the results looked for. Manitoba is practically the gateway of the great grain belt of the West. Its farm lands have demonstrated time and again that they have a yielding value that practically makes them worth over one hundred dollars per acre. Added to the yielding value of the land, there is an increased value on account of its nearness to markets, and the matter of freight rates is carefully considered by the cautious buyer. But the information more valuable to the incoming settler is that it still has an immense amount of vacant fertile land open for homesteads. This dispels the idea that free homesteads in Manitoba are about exhausted. In addition to this, the territory recently added to the Province will open up a homesteading area which when filled would fully satisfy the "Million for Manitoba League." Within the old boundaries there is an area of 47,360,000 acres less than six million acres of the 16¼ million acres occupied being under cultivation. At present there are over 20 million acres of available land capable of being put under the plough. If in every one of the 195,000 vacant quarter sections of the Province an average family of four persons were placed, there would be added a rural population of nearly 800,000. So there is room for additional hundreds of thousands on the farms of Manitoba, without any possibility of congestion. The population per mile in Iowa is 39.4, in Minnesota it is 23.5. That in Manitoba is only 7.1.

A glance at the map, copies of which will be forwarded upon application to any Canadian Government Agent, shows that Manitoba is wonderfully well supplied with railways. There are but few farms that are more than ten or twelve miles from a railway line; elevators are convenient, and markets are always good. The growing of grain, while a big feature in the inducements held out, is well reenforced by the great possibilities that exist in all portions of the Province, for the raising of stock, for dairying, for hogs and for a successful class of mixed farming, and what gives additional interest is the fact that there is so much land in the Province open for free homesteading that improved farms in almost all of the 98 municipalities can be purchased at very low figures. Many of the owners of these have made sufficient upon which to retire and are becoming residents of the cities. In addition to the export market for the produce of the farm, Manitoba has a number of large cities and towns providing a splendid local market. Truck and garden farming are highly profitable branches. Winnipeg is a city bordering on 200,000. Brandon is a splendid centre, Portage la Prairie is the hub of an excellent district, and Yorkton, Minnedosa, Dauphin, Morden, Manitou and a dozen other towns are important help as consumers.

The Dominion and Provincial immigration officials are working in strong sympathy with the "Million for Manitoba League," and in addition to the general literature sent out by the Government, the League has prepared pamphlets giving useful and concise information, which on addressing the Secretory, Million League, Winnipeg, Manitoba, will be forwarded free.

The Child, Father of the Man.

The late Thomas B. Reed, when a lad was requested to bail out a small boat that had been leaking badly, and was almost full of water.

"The constitution of the United States says," replied the future statesman, "that 'excessive bail shall not be required' of any man."—Youth's Companion.

"War" Bank Notes.

The Swiss National bank, with headquarters at Zurich has just completed printing at Geneva "war" banknotes of twenty francs each for a sum of $4,000,000 but they will not be put into circulation unless war breaks out in Europe. While the notes were being printed special police guarded the printing offices and the bank night and day. The notes are now stocked in the cellars of the bank of Zurich.

Business Excuse.

"Why did you steal this young lady's chatelaine watch?" asked the magistrate severely.

"From quite a usual motive," replied the thief. "I had been very busy and I only wanted to take a little time off."

It is just as well to remember that a woman's shoe laces are almost as easily broken as her heart strings.

SENATORIAL CONVENTION

Resolution fixing the time and place of the Convention

Resolved that the Democratic delegate convention to nominate a candidate for State Senator for the 24th and 26th State Senatorial district of Ohio be held at the Democratic Club Rooms in the Arcade Building in Akron, Ohio, July 6th, 1912, at 1:30 o'clock P. M.

Resolution determining apportionment of said convention

Resolved that the ratio of representation in the convention to be held at the Democratic Club Rooms in the Arcade Building, Akron, Ohio, on the 6th day of July, 1912, to nominate a Democratic candidate for State Senator of the 24th and 26th Senatorial District of Ohio shall be as follows:

To each of the counties composing the said 24th and 26th Senatorial District of Ohio, namely Ashtabula, Geauga, Lake, Portage and Summit, one delegate and one alternate for each five hundred votes and fraction of two hundred and fifty votes or more cast for Judson Harmon for Governor by said counties at the election held on the 8th day of November, 1910.

Resolution providing for selection of delegates

Resolved that the County central of the counties of Ashtabula, Geauga, Lake, Portage and Summit respectively be authorized and directed to determine the method of choosing the delegates from each of said counties either by direct vote at the primary or at County Conventions composed of delegates elected at the primary, to the convention to be held at the Democratic Club Rooms in the Arcade Building in Akron, Ohio, on July 6th, 1912, for the purpose of nominating a Democratic candidate for State Senator of the 24th and 26th Senatorial district of Ohio.

We the undersigned Chairman and Secretary, respectively of the 24th and 26th Senatorial Democratic Committee of said district of Ohio hereby certify that the above and foregoing are true and correct copies of the resolutions duly adopted by a unanimous vote of the said committee duly and regularly held, pursuant to call, at Kent, Ohio, on the 6th day of April 1912 at which meeting a majority of the members of said committee were present.

JUDICIAL CONVENTION

Resolution fixing the time and place of the convention

Resolved that the Democratic delegate convention to nominate a candidate for circuit judge for the seventh judicial circuit of Ohio be held at the Secor Hotel in Toledo, Ohio, on Wednesday the 5th day of June at 1:30 o'clock P. M.

Resolution determining apportionment to said convention.

Resolved that the ratio of representation in the convention to be so held at the Secor Hotel in Toledo, Ohio, on the said 5th day of June 1912, to nominate a Democratic candidate for judge of the seventh judicial circuit of Ohio shall be as follows:

To each of the counties composing the seventh judicial circuit of Ohio, namely Ashtabula, Belmont, Columbiana, Carroll, Geauga, Guernsey, Harrison, Jefferson, Lake, Mahoning, Monroe, Noble, Portage and Trumbull, one delegate and one alternate for each five hundred votes and fraction of two hundred and fifty votes or more cast for Judson Harmon for Governor by said counties at the election held on the 8th day of November, 1910.

Resolution providing for the selection of delegates

Resolved that the County Central committee of the said counties of the said judicial district respectively be authorized and directed to determine the method of choosing the delegates from each of said counties either by direct vote at the primary, or at the county conventions composed of delegates elected at the primary, to the convention to be held at the Secor Hotel at Toledo, Ohio, on the said 5th day of June 1912 for the purpose of nominating a Democratic candidate for judge of the seventh judicial circuit of Ohio.

We, the undersigned Chairman and Secretary respectively of the Democratic Circuit Judicial committee of the seventh Judicial Circuit of Ohio, hereby certify that the above and foregoing are true and correct copies of the resolution duly adopted by the committee of said judicial circuit at a meeting held by said committee at Kent, Ohio, April 6, 1912.

JUDICIAL CONVENTION

Painesville, Ohio, April 3, 1912

Be it resolved by a majority vote of the Democratic Judicial Committee of the common pleas district comprising Ashtabula, Geauga and Lake Counties that a delegate convention be and is hereby called to meet in Ashtabula, Ohio, City Hall, June 1, 1912, at 3 P. M. Central Standard time to nominate a judicial ticket for said district to be voted for at the coming November election, and each county shall be entitled to as many delegates to said convention as it is entitled to have by law in the coming state Convention, viz: Ashtabula, 6, Geauga, 2, Lake, 3, who shall be chosen according to law as the several county committees shall determine.

C A CORBIN,
Chairman.
F D MALIN,
Sec'y Judicial Committee.

Call for State Democratic Convention

Pursuant to the order of the Democratic State Central committee, notice is hereby given that the convention of the Democrats of the state of Ohio to nominate candidates for state offices to be voted for at the November election, 1912, will be held at Toledo, Ohio, on Tuesday and Wednesday, June 4-5 1912.

Each county will be entitled to one delegate and one alternate for each 500 votes cast for Judson Harmon for Governor of Ohio, at the November election, 1910, and one additional delegate and alternate for the remainder of votes exceeding 250.

The apportionment of delegates and alternates in the convention shall be as follows for Lake County:

| | |
|---|---|
| Lake | 3 |
| Total delegates | 952 |
| Necessary to choice | 477 |

The Democratic State Central Committee at a meeting held in Columbus on Tuesday afternoon, March 19, 1912, adopted the following resolution:

Resolved, that, for the purpose of ascertaining the Presidential preference of the Democratic electors of Ohio, and of selecting six delegates-at-large and six alternates-at-large, to the National Democratic Convention, called to meet at Baltimore, Md., on the 25th day of June, 1912, a state wide Presidential preference primary be held on the 21st day of May, A. D., 1912, during the same hours and at the same polling places wherein other primary elections are held on that day.

The candidate who shall receive the largest number of votes at such primary election shall select the names of six delegates-at-large, and six alternates-at-large, Democratic electors of the State of Ohio, to be by him presented to the Democratic State Convention for its ratification.

E W HANLEY,
Chairman.
JOSEPH H. HARPER,
Secretary

WHEN THIEVES FALL OUT

When thieves fall out, just men get their dues; and when Republican presidents and former presidents fall out, the people learn how they have been misgoverned.

Since President Taft and former President Roosevelt entered upon their wild scramble to obtain delegates to the next Republican convention, the people have come into the possession of the following information, which they never knew before, except as it came to them through unproven charges or unverified rumors:

That Mr. Taft, by his own admission, has been "a man of straw."

That Mr. Taft, in his advocacy of Canadian reciprocity, was not thinking, primarily, of any benefits that would come to the American farmer and wage earner, but that he believed reciprocity would make Canada an "adjunct" to the United States, which would transfer her important business to New York and Chicago. By his own confession the president was thinking of the big business interests when he was advocating reciprocity.

That George W. Perkins, organizer of the Harvester Trust and member of the board of directors of the Steel Trust was "highly pleased" with the present administration's methods of prosecuting the trusts.

That there is a close political alliance between Mr. Perkins and Theodore Roosevelt, as evidenced by the fact that Perkins, in a sworn statement to the secretary of state of New York, admits he spent $15,000 to help Roosevelt in the primary election in New York city this spring, thus revealing that the big interests would be perfectly satisfied to have either Taft or Roosevelt president.

That Mr. Taft, in the present campaign, and Mr. Roosevelt, in his campaign of 1908, made free and unrestricted use of federal office holders to obtain the nomination.

That Mr. Roosevelt, while constantly writing messages and giving out interviews, while he was president, all professing the deepest hatred of trusts and illegal corporations, secretly and clandestinely suppressed a report showing that the Harvester Trust was an illegal combination in restraint of trade, and later ordered that a contemplated suit against that trust be dropped "until he gave the word to start it," which word never came.

That Mr. Roosevelt's trip to Africa was paid for by Andrew Carnegie, the greatest beneficiary of a Republican high tariff that ever lived.

That Mr. Roosevelt was so frightened by the possibility of tariff agitation during his more than seven years of office that in all his messages and official papers he never made any mention of tariff except to say, once, that he would discuss it in a future message, which statement he withdrew from the message before it reached congress.

If the present scramble for delegates continues a while longer it may safely be said, therefore, that both Mr. Taft and Mr. Roosevelt, at the present rate, will thoroughly demonstrate that neither of them is fit to be president.

A DAY OF TRIUMPH

That was a day of triumph for William Jennings Bryan and for the Democratic party when the house by a vote of 237 to 39 passed finally the bill providing for the submission of a constitutional amendment to the states relating to the election of senators direct by the people.

This has been one of the cardinal planks in the Bryan platform and he has urged it in season and out of season. Through his influence Democratic opinion has been crystalized in favor of this great forward step toward popular rule and while many other influential members of the party had worked unremittingly in the interest of the direct election of senators, no one else had been so insistent and so widely potent in bringing about this epoch-marking result.

It is an unfortunate feature, but hardly a fatal one, that the resolution as finally adopted includes the way for federal control of elections. Southern Democrats stood out long and stubbornly against this provision, but they seem finally to have felt that it was less important than the popular election of senators itself and so they yielded under protest, possibly with the thought lurking in the back of their minds that the proposition weighted with the Bristow load will fail when it is put up to the states, three-fourths of which must ratify it before it can become a part of the organic law. Friends of the popular election of senators may well fear that more than a fourth of the states will refuse to ratify the amendment on account of the provision it contains for the federal regulation of a function which thus far has been so jealously kept beyond the reach of the central government.

However, a long step in the right direction has been taken. Little by little the people are coming into their own. Inch by inch the forces of privilege are giving way before the onward march of an independent and intelligent democracy. And those who have followed his standard so long and who have shared in the sacrifices he has made will rejoice with the great Nebraskan in this crowning victory for the people's rule.

SHEPHERD OF THE SEA

HUNGARIAN MAN OF WEALTH HAS EARNED TITLE.

Has Long Devoted Life, Fortune, Talents and Strength in Ministering to Emigrants From His Own and Other Lands.

Count Vay de Vaya, lord abbot of St. Martin's in Hungary, has earned the title of "The Shepherd of the Seas," because he spends his life and wealth, his talents and his strength, in ministering to poor emigrants seeking fairer chances for life in distant lands. A man of lowlier birth, and one bred amid scenes of squalor and suffering might so spend his life without creating wonder that he should seek to help those who are his equals and intimates.

Count de Vaya is one of the richest and one of the most influential men in Hungary. This wealth he is using to help the poor emigrants from his country and from other countries, and he has forsaken the ease and comforts that his riches would bring to sail with them on many troubled seas and teach them how to conduct themselves in the new life they are to face.

"At home," he said, "the poor are forever watched over by the parish priest, who is their spiritual father. He tells them how they shall conduct their lives and listen and obey. Then also there are the neighbors with whom the peasant hopes to stand well and to be respected. This environment helps him to lead a Christian life, to be honest, industrious and strong to resist temptation. Then he hears of brighter opportunities in a new land, and he sells all of his little possessions and sails away. Everything that has helped him in the past, the teachings of the priest, the good word of old neighbors, the traditions of his home, are swept away from him and he finds himself on the sea with nothing to do and an absolutely vacant mind, ready to be filled with anything anyone cares to pour into it.

"This is a very trying period. All his life he has been a worker. He has toiled all day and at night there were the family and friends to fill his mind. But here, upon the deep, his mind grows vagrant. It has nothing to anchor it. Like the mind of a little child, it is very receptive. If evil is poured into it, that evil may last as long as he lives and be the controlling influence of his life. But if it is good, why, then he will be a good man as long as he lives. Now, the work that I am trying to do with all of the gifts that God has given me is to meet with these poor people and to fill them with the thoughts of our creator, with the duty we all owe to one another, and with the peace that comes from good and the torment that comes from evil.

"I opened the first Hungarian church in the slums of Chicago. This was in 1905. I have visited all of the different labor centers in the United States, and I have crossed the ocean 19 times. And always I am seeking to place in the hands of the helpless the sword of righteousness, with which to fight temptation. On one ship, the Ultonia, from Fiume, I preached to 2,300 emigrants. I speak nine languages, and I preached to them, so all could understand, in Hungarian, in German and in the Slav. A more devout people I never saw. I am glad to say that I have seen something of the results of the seeds that I have sown. And if the work is continued, in a generation or two it will go far toward bettering conditions all over the world."

RANDOM THOUGHTS

By Tom, Dick and Harry

During his speech here Monday Senator La Follette gave a thought by inference, which, coming from a man of his political sagacity, should cause every citizen to think deeply. At one place he said that if organized capital encroached upon individual rights during the next ten years with the same relentless rapacity as it had in the past ten or a dozen our troubles would not be settled with ballots. An alliteration was clearly in his mind. If not by ballots then by bullets. He doubtless has good reason for the fear.

Truly it is a blessed privilege to live in a free country and the sovereign state of Ohio, when, if you happen to be a Republican you are compelled to cast your ballot as blindly as though you never heard of an election. It gives one a freeman's (?) choice—to vote for a set of men who will support a set of men who will vote for a man whom you do not want in any event, provided they do not change their minds about it. Speaking as a Republican I consider it a disgrace to be reduced by the managers of a boss-ridden party to such a condition of abject serfdom. The Republicans of Ohio did not want either Taft or Roosevelt. They wanted La Follette or some other person of his calibre. Thousands upon thousands of the best men of the party did not go to the primaries at all, for the reason that they knew they could not express their wishes, through that ballot. When election comes this fall, I predict that unless the Democrats nominate Bryan, Wilson, or some other man of their stamp, the socialists will receive unparalleled support. Then the cry will go up that we are drifting toward anarchy. We long have had contempt for the judiciary as represented by men famed not for their just interpretation of the laws, but for loyalty to their party, and now we are coming to hold in contempt the entire organization which thwarts our will.

Whose is the fault?

Reasoning Power Lacking in Apes.

Apes do not count further than four, and the Boers of the Transvaal, when they hunt these animals, hide in numbers exceeding four. Four depart in succession in such a manner as to be noticed by the apes, who then come forth and are easily captured.

MENTOR

Some of our people are declaring that the St. Louis Almanac man is hitting the weather right—after all. He promised all sorts and kinds of weather this month, with snow, hail, wind, and much rain, with dark unhappy days, and so chilly that people in the Middle States would be obliged to keep fires all through the month. The outlook was so unpleasant, that most of us determined not to believe a word he said! Those persons having his "Weather Forecast" and nerve enough to face cold weather through May, are saying that he "hits it right every time."

The word crept through the village last week quite early, that the renowned "Colonel" was to be here Saturday night and spend a day or so at "Holly Croft" as the guest of James R. Garfield; but only those who "peeked" at them as they rode past on the way home from the Depot, had any expectation of seeing Mr. Roosevelt. What was the satisfaction of the good folks who went to church on Sunday morning therefore, when Mr. Garfield and Mr. Roosevelt appeared in the meeting-house, and what was still better, that they should stay long enough after service to shake hands with everybody present. While people here were very glad to meet the Col. face to face, and hear for themselves the sound of his voice our Mentor folks were not so "set-up" as might have been the case, had we not have had a real live President once upon a time, whose home was here and whose heart was in Mentor, and with Mentor folks! Such memories make all the present day "fuss" too pale beside the genuine good feeling, that was so evident at that time, and there has never been any great amount of enthusiasm among the village folks here since President Garfield was shot down.

Mr. Arthur Pratt, a Mentor boy who went west some years ago and has prospered beyond his wildest dreams—is visiting his aunt, Mrs. Phoebe Woodford and her family at the Center, while en route for Washington D. C. where he has a daughter in school. When at home, we understand that Mr. Pratt is in Seattle.

Our genial P. M. of the main office Mr. Frank Smith, went up to the city on Saturday, where he entered Charity hospital for an operation which his friends hope will not prove to be a serious one.

The Horticultural meeting in the Methodist church building on Saturday was not a "howling success" as the boys would say, there being only about twenty people there, for the afternoon program, all of which was a minus quantity, except the music which was all right, and was furnished by Mrs. Harry King, Miss Frances Cleveland and Miss Ida Merkle. Mr. Ben Reulenik was to have had a paper, and also Mr. John Merkle, on subjects of interest to everybody, but both gentlemen were so busy at this time of the year, that it was simply impossible for them to be present, much less to prepare papers. The Association took their disappointment so pleasantly that without doubt the delayed papers will be forth-coming at some more convenient season.

Miss Agnes Pierson has been a recent guest of Mrs. Warren House on Waite Hill, we understand.

Mrs. Sarah Aldrich Selden, of Mayville, N. Y., is a guest of her sister, Mrs. John Tyler for a week or two now.

Mrs. Capt. Burridge has returned from spending the winter with her oldest daughter, Mrs. Sarah Burridge Cummings, at East Brady, Pa., and will summer with the families of her sons here, and with her daughter, Mrs. Dr. Hewloy in Painesville.

Mr. and Mrs. A. Q. Fenner have just been entertaining for a few days Mr. and Mrs. D. W. Hicks of Cleveland. Mr. Fenner is the gentleman from the city who bought the Hurst property in West Mentor a few years ago, and after wintering in the South has returned to spend the summer here.

A benefit dance was given by the K. O. T. M. on Saturday evening at the village hall, for poor Dan McCarty.

The new house that Mr. T. P. Cadle is building is in the hands of the Sandberg Brothers, than whom we have no more conscientious builders. The cellar is dug, the foundation ready for laying, and work will be rushed right along now, as fast as the peculiar weather will permit.

Two more houses we learn are for sale, one owned by Mr. and Mrs. Will Sawyer on Hart street, the other on the new street in West Mentor, and owned by C. W. Johnson. Both places are desirable, and can be bought quite reasonably.

The Kolling Mill Co. has been making some changes in the plant here, and while opening another similar one, has sent a number of the best operators from here to the new field of operations.

The immense automobile of the Samuel Mather Casket Co. of Cleveland that passed through here on its way to Fairport for the use of the friends at the funeral of Mrs. Sophronia Harrison Barden, a few days ago, was noticed and commented upon, but no one seemed to know what it was until later. This automobile seats thirty-six persons, and will be called into service, without doubt, instead of so many carriages, in case of funerals, after this.

Mrs. T. D. Morley entertained at dinner a number of friends one day last week, in honor of Mrs. Bert Woodard (formerly Miss Ruby Damon) whose home is now in Wyoming.

Mrs. Clark Bradway is in North Girard, Pa., having been called to her old home by the death of her father, Mr. McCullough, who had been ill through the winter, but who was considered much better recently, so that his sudden death was a great shock to his relatives here.

Mrs. Henry Sandberg and youngest daughter, Norma, have just gone to relatives in Iowa, where they will visit for some weeks.

Mrs. Forest White, nee Miss Ada Howard of Cleveland, is here for a few days with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Fred Howard.

Mr. Robert Cose, the young enterprising merchant and grocer of West Mentor, has been selling oranges and grape-fruit all winter that was raised down in Mt. Dora, Florida by N. W. Morley and Mr. Samuel Whiting, and has made such a success of handling their fruit that he will no doubt have it all, another year. The last of the grape-fruit was called for on Saturday, and expressions of regret were heard, that it was all gone, for nothing half so good can be bought elsewhere in the state of Ohio.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles Juckett of Cleveland, nee Miss Nancy Harris, have been recent guests of her mother Mrs. Riley Harris on Hart street.

The E. H. Cleveland place at the Center, where the house was burned to the ground last fall, has been exchanged, we understand, for some property on Jackson street in Painesville, and Mr. Cleveland together with his daughter, Mrs. James Moran and her husband, are expecting to soon move there.

The lecture given by Mr. George Crossette in the Methodist church a few evenings ago, was not as well attended as would have been the case had it been secured for an evening in winter when people had more leisure. Many bought tickets who could not be present, but those who were there have expressed themselves as having been well paid for having stopped their work long enough to go. Mr. Crossette spent three years in the Fiji Islands, and at one time was entertained at supper where he ate some most delicious "long pork" which he learned with great horror afterwards, was human flesh.

The High School Commencement here is set for Wednesday evening, May 29th, at the Village Hall. There are four who will receive their "Sheep-Skins" that evening, Miss Lucy Gallagher, Miss Hazel Sperry, Miss Agnes Swain and John Gallagher. The exercises are always enjoyable, the music in charge of Miss Cadle, is always especially good.

Mrs. Byron Heiman, nee Miss Ada Taylor, is visiting for a few days with Col. and Mrs. Spaulding and also her cousin, Mr. Fred Stovers. Mrs. Heiman is at home in Cleveland, but used to go to school with some of us over in "Root's District" in the long ago.

At the last meeting of the W. C. T. U. which was held at the hospitable home of Mrs. A. D. Carlston, it was decided to hold only monthly meetings after this, through the summer.

Mrs. Frank Millard of Kirtland spent Wednesday here with her father, Mr. E. H. Cleveland, it being his birthday.

Miss Anne Carpenter has just started for Europe with a party of friends.

Sailor Swam Fifteen Miles.

Alfred Schurman, a sailor on the British steamship Bentmore, made a remarkable record by swimming fifteen miles through the Gulf of Mexico to shore.

The Bentmore steamed from Port Arthur and was out fifteen miles in the gulf when Schurman, who was engaged at work on the railing, was pitched overboard by a lurch of the ship and was not missed by his shipmates. He struck out and after nearly seven hours in the water finally made shore.

It was a turbulent sea and Schurman was exhausted when picked up on the beach five miles from Port Arthur, and sent to a hospital.

Didn't Need It.

Redd—Do you believe in this custom of breaking a bottle of champagne over the bow of a new ship?

Greene—I certainly do. It brings good luck to the ship.

"Well, I know of one vessel where they never broke any wine over her bow and she made a very successful voyage."

"Name the vessel, please?"

"The Ark."

Belasco's Idea of Venom.

An actor, at the Players' club in New York, praised David Belasco.

"You can't make a silk purse out of a sow's ear," he said, "but Mr. Belasco, time and again, has made a skillful and fiery artist out of a cold and awkward amateur.

"Mr. Belasco has a happy way, at rehearsals, of driving home his points. Thus, one day, he wasn't satisfied with the contempt that a leading lady was putting into a certain speech.

"'More contempt!' he said, 'More spite! More venom!'

"'Oh, I can't do any better than I am,' said the lady.

"'Rubbish! Of course you can,' cried Mr. Belasco. 'Hiss the lines as you'd hiss the word "Musquash," if you saw a lady friend in a great, long, imitation sealskin coat.'"—New York Sun.

One Leg on the Ground Always.

In 1872 Gov. Leland Stanford of California had an argument, which ended in a bet, with a friend, whether a horse ever has four legs off the ground at the same moment while running.

Eadweard Maybridge, an Englishman and a photographer, had become interested and put up twenty-four cameras on the race track, so arranged that the horse would have to break the strings. The individual pictures were all of even size. He pasted these together, then used the toy known as a "zoetrope," and it was found that all four feet never leave the ground except in jumping.—By the Narrator.

MANAGER ISBELL HEARS ONE ON HIMSELF

Frank Isbell Manager of Des Moines Club

The following story is told on Frank Isbell, former major league star and present part owner of the Des Moines team. It happened recently when Izzy and his bunch were on their way to the southland.

Secretary McMullen of the Wichita club says: "I didn't pay much attention to what they were saying for quite a little bit, but after a while I heard the visitor saying things about 'that — Frank Isbell!' and then I began to listen. The fan was lining Izzy up as several kinds of a reprobate and horsethief and old Izzy was siding in with him in everything he said, even giving a little stronger [illegible] of the [illegible].

"'Most ungrateful man I ever knew anywhere,' declared the fan. 'Made all his money here in Wichita and then pulled up and went off somewhere else to spend it.'

"'Yes, I reckon that's right,' said Isbell. 'He [illegible] have [illegible] to when he [illegible]. Probably never anything in [illegible] league even if he [illegible].'

"'No, I reckon not. He probably was a mighty cheap player up here anyhow, and I suppose he blew in his money about as fast as he made it. I understand he is [illegible] gambler and rounder.'

"'Reg'lar he-[illegible],' chimed in Izzy.

"'Say, Mac,' he said, 'did you hear that guy? Well, sir, I sure did enjoy his conversation. I believe that is the most fully correct and unvarnished opinion of myself I ever did get handed out at first hand. Wish I knew who my friend was. I'd like to send him a box of cigars.'"

BALL AND BAT NOTES

The Brooklyn club has released Outfielder Coulson to the Newark club.

Hilltop patrons rather like the playing of Zinn. He handles fly balls with judgment and ease.

Chase is fielding his position as well as ever, but always has hit better than he is now doing.

The United States league has adopted a waiver rule and put the price at $750. Doesn't this smack of "slavery?"

The public is not yet in favor of the recall of umpires, but it is ready to call 'em down on the slightest provocation.

Saginaw has sold Pitcher Harry Curtis, once a Central league star, to the Hamilton team of the Canadian league.

Big Tesreau of the Giants looks as if he would have a regular turn in the box. He's got everything, including nerve.

Louden, last year's Newark infielder, has made a big hit at Detroit's third base and Hugh Jennings says he will keep him there.

If the Cincinnatis will take $5,000 for the release of the Cuban outfielder Marsans the Washington club will pay that amount in a jiffy.

Manager Chic Fraser of the Decatur Three Eye league club has announced the purchase of Outfielder Pat Flanagan from Indianapolis.

A bell on the ball that will ring just before the break of the curve might aid the batsman in getting out of the way, a contemporary suggests.

There is still hope for the Highlanders. Only a few years ago a Boston team started off the season with nine straight defeats and yet it won the championship.

Bobby Wallace is the real veteran of the American league. The manager of the Browns has been playing ball for 20 years and 11 years of his diamond career has been spent in St. Louis.

The magnates are partially convinced that the championship season begins too early, but they don't contemplate a change in view of the way the fans crowd around the box office windows.

Pitcher George Bell, formerly of Brooklyn, has notified Manager McGinnity of Newark that he will be unable to play this season on account of having had a floating cartilage removed from his knee.

Lefty George and Frank Baker, the Athletic home run hitter, will be friends again this season. They fell out last season, because Baker thought Lefty tried to hit him on the head in a game in Philadelphia.

Many competent authorities figure the Boston Nationals 25 per cent stronger than they were last season, and there are Boston fans willing to wager high hats, neckties and boxes of candy that the Braves will finish in the first division.

START OF CHARLEY O'LEARY

Was Messenger Boy of 17 When He Broke Into Fast Company—Now With Indianapolis.

The release by Detroit of Charley O'Leary, who goes to Indianapolis, recalls an interesting story of his entry into professional baseball. From a messenger boy's uniform to that of a major league club all in one afternoon was the lightning change he made.

O'Leary had played ball around the lots in Chicago all his life and had distinguished himself as the star of the Mandel Bros.' nine. One afternoon in 1901 he was sent out to the White Sox park when the South Side team was new in Chicago. It happened the shortstop, Shugart, had been injured and the club was not provided with a capable man to take his place. The Sox really were in desperate straits and hardly knew how they would fill in their line-up, until somebody who knew O'Leary spied him and said:

"There is a kid who can play the infield; give him a chance."

The manager asked O'Leary if he thought he could fill the bill and Dip, who was willing to take a chance on almost anything, replied that the job was made to order for him. They dug up a uniform for the boy, then but seventeen, and he doffed his messenger's togs.

He made good from the jump and might have finished the season with the Sox if he hadn't sustained a broken arm as a result of stopping one of "Rube" Waddell's wild ones with his person.

O'Leary went to Des Moines of the Western league the next season and played with that club for several years, going to Detroit in 1904.

The White Sox won the pennant the year O'Leary was with them and his fine playing was responsible in a large manner for this success. Comiskey's reason for letting Dip go the next season was that he had an idea the youngster would be a better ball player if given a chance to gain some minor league experience.

COLLINS IS IMPORTANT COG

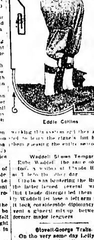
Athletic Second Baseman Signals Outfielders What Kind of Ball Pitcher Will Throw.

Eddie Collins had more to do with the success of the Athletics last year than he is generally given credit for. It was Eddie's duty to signal the Philadelphia outfielders what kind of a ball the pitcher was going to throw in order that they might shift accordingly. Eddie would get the signal from the catcher and then tell it to the outfielders with his hands, feet or body.

The other clubs knew what he was doing, but it was impossible for them to decipher his signal code. Almost every Tiger pitcher and catcher took a hand at the detective work by warming up on the edge of the outfield and behind Collins both in Philadelphia and Detroit, but they were unsuccessful.

The other clubs of the league soon got on to the fact that Collins was working this system and they all plotted to learn the signals, but he kept them guessing the entire season.



Eddie Collins

Waddell Shows Temper.

Rube Waddell, the same old Rube too, a wallop at Claude Rossman in Toledo the other day.

Claude was bantering the Rube and the latter issued several warnings, but Claude disregarded them. Finally Waddell let loose a left arm jolt and it took considerable diplomacy to prevent a general mix-up between the former major leaguers.

Stovall-George Trade.

On the very same day Lefty George was getting another disastrous bumping, it was announced at Cleveland that Hohnhorst would not do at first base and that either Davis or Lajoie would have to take up the burden. And thus did the Stovall-George trade bob up as a mockery.

DREYFUSS SEES THE PENNANT

Pirate Chief Is Certain of Victory in National League This Year—Breaks His Rule.

President Barney Dreyfuss of the Pirates is a silent man. In all the years of his baseball experience he never claimed anything in advance, at least verbally. Now he has broken the rule. He says Pittsburg will win the pennant.

"It has been my motto never to claim the flag until it has been won on the diamond," said the Pirate chief. "I believe in sawing wood and letting the other fellow do the talking.

"It is different this year. Pittsburg will take the pennant. I never felt so sure of anything as I do of that. I am absolutely certain we will show the way home this year. I can't see anything that can beat us. Good or bad luck may break our way, but we have the team, and that's what does the business."

So there goes another record. Dreyfuss never talked that way before.

Couldn't Worry Clarke.

Fred Clarke was awakened at 3 o'clock in the morning in Chicago by somebody who told him that Alex McCarthy had fallen in a fit and had been run over by an automobile and was removed to the Cook County hospital. Knowing that the little infielder is not subject to any fits excepting his fits of fine ball playing, also being sure that Mac would never be out so late at night, Clarke asked the informant what color the injured fellow's hair might be. When told it was very black the Pirate chieftain saw there had been some mistake and hung up the receiver.

How Chicago Lost McCarthy.

President Murphy of the Cubs turned down Alex McCarthy, now of the Pirates, because the scouts said Alex couldn't hit. McCarthy's hitting is now a regular feature of the Pitts[burg] [illegible] and his hits are timely, too. If the Cubs had taken McCarthy, they would not only have obtained a valuable actor, but a native son. McCarthy was born and raised near Cub park and played for years on the Chicago prairie teams without gaining any special fame.

Konetchy Is Indifferent.

"Why do the St. Louis pitchers persist in throwing to Konetchy when there is a runner on first? He doesn't even try to put the ball on the returning fugitive, but simply catches it, never looks at the runner and tosses back to the pitcher. Doesn't care to overwork himself, apparently," says a contemporary.

SYNOPSIS.

Dan Blair, the 22-year-old son of the fifty million dollar copper king of Blairtown, Mont., is a guest at the English home of Lady Galorey. Dan's father had been courteous to Lord Galorey during his visit to the United States and the courtesy is now being returned to the young man. The youth has an ideal girl in his mind. He meets Lily, Duchess of Breakwater, a beautiful widow, who is attracted by his immense fortune and takes a liking to her. When Dan was a boy a girl sang a solo at a church, and he had never forgotten her. The Galoreys, Lily and Dan attend a London theater where one Letty Lane is the star. Dan recognizes her as the girl from his town and going behind the scenes introduces himself and she remembers him. He learns that Prince Poniatowsky is suitor and escort to Letty. Lord Galorey and a friend named Ruggles determine to protect the westerner from Lily and other fortune hunters. Young Blair goes to see Letty; he can talk of nothing but Letty and this angers the Duchess. The westerner finds Letty ill from hard work, but she recovers and Ruggles and Dan invite her to supper. She asks Dan to build a home for disappointed theatrical people. Dan visits Lily for the time forgetting Letty, and later announces his engagement to the duchess. Letty refuses to sing for an entertainment given by Lily. Galorey tells Dan that all Lily cares for is his money, and it is disclosed that he and the duchess have been mutually in love for years.

CHAPTER XVI.—Continued.

Galorey repeated vaguely: "State?"

"Why, she's all run down, tired out; she's got no real friends in London."

The other man flicked the ash from his cigarette and looked at Blair's boy through his monocle.

Galorey nodded back, smiling gently. "I see, I see—a moral, spiritual lift? I see—I see." He glanced at the woman with his strange smile.

"It's none of my business what Letty Lane's reputation is. I don't care, but you must understand one thing, Dan. I'm not a reformer or a charitable institution and if she comes here it is purely professional."

He took the subject as settled and asked for a copy of the program and put it in his pocket. "I'll get the names of her songs from her and take the thing myself to Harrison's. And I'd better hustle, I guess; there's no time to lose between now and Sunday." And he went out triumphant.

Galorey remained, smoking, and the duchess continued her notes in silence, cooling down at her desk. Her companion knew her too well to speak to her until she had herself in hand, and when finally she took up her pen and turned about, she appeared conscious for the first of his presence.

"Here still!" she exclaimed.

"I thought I might do for a safety valve, Lily. You could let some of your anger out on me."

The duchess left her desk and came over to him.

"I expect you despise me thoroughly, don't you, Gordon?"

They had not been alone together since her engagement to Blair, for she had taken pains to avoid every opportunity for a tete-a-tete.

"Despise you?" he repeated gently. "It's awfully hard, isn't it, for a chap like me to despise anybody? We're none of us used to the best quality of behavior, you know, my dear girl."

"Don't talk rot, Gordon," she murmured.

"You didn't ask my advice," he continued, "but I don't hesitate to tell you that I have done everything I could to save the boy."

She accepted this philosophically. "Oh, I knew you would; I quite expected it, but—" and in the look she threw at him there was more liking than resentment—"I knew you, too, you couldn't go very far, my dear fellow."

"I think Dan Blair is excellent stuff," Gordon said.

"He is the greenest, youngest, most ridiculous infant," she exclaimed with irritation and laughed.

"His money is old enough to walk, however, isn't it, Lily?" She made an angry gesture.

"I expected you'd say something loathsome."

Her companion met her eyes directly. She left her chair and came and sat down beside him on the small sofa. As he did not move, or look at her, but regarded his cigarette with interest, she leaned close to him and whispered: "Gordon, try to be nice and decent. Try to forget yourself. Don't you see what a wonderful chance it is for me and that, as far as you and I are concerned, it can't go on?"

The face of the man by her side grew somber. The charm this woman had for him had never lessened since the day when he told her he loved her, long before his marriage and they were both too poor.

"We have always been too poor, and Edith is jealous of me every day and hour of her life. Can't you be generous?"

He rose and stood over her, looking down at her beautiful form and her somewhat softened face, but his eyes were hard and his face very pale.

"You had better go, Gordon," she said slowly; "you had better go. . ."

Then as he obeyed her and went like a flash as far as the door, she followed him and whispered softly: "If you're really only jealous, I can forgive you."

He managed to get out: "His father was my friend; he sent the boy to me and I've been a bad guardian." He made a gesture of despair. "Put yourself in my place. Let Dan Blair go, Lily; let him go."

Her eyelids flickered a little, and she said sharply: "You're out of your senses, Gordon—and what if I love him?"

With a low exclamation he caught her hand at the wrist so hard that she cried out, and he said between his teeth: "You don't love him! Take those words back!"

"Of course I do. Let me free!"

"No," he said passionately, holding her fast. "Not until you take that back."

His face, his tone, his force, dominated her, the remembrance of their past, a possible future, made her waver under his eyes, and the woman smiled at him as Blair had never seen her smile.

"Very well, then, goose," she capitulated almost tenderly, "I don't love that boy, of course. I'm marrying him for his money. Now, will you let me go?"

But he held her still more firmly and kissed her several times before he finally set her free, and went out of the house miserable—bound to her by the strongest chains—bound to his conscience and by honor to his trust to Dan's father and yet handicapped by another sense of honor which decrees that man must keep silence to the end.

CHAPTER XVII.

Letty Lane Sings.

The house of the Duchess of Breakwater in Park Lane was white with green blinds and green balconies, beautiful, distinguished and old, mellow with traditions, and the tide of fashion poured its stream into the music room to listen to the Sunday concert. Without the day was bland and beautiful, wild spring in the deep sweet air, and already the bloom lay over the park and along the turf. Piccadilly was ablaze with flowers and in the windows and in the flower-women's baskets they were so sweet as to make the heart ache and to make the senses thrill. Keen to the spring beauty, the last guest to go into the drawing room of the Duchess of Breakwater was the young American man in whom the magic of the season had stirred the blood. He seemed the youngest and the brightest guest to cross the sill of the great house whose debts he was going to pay and whose future he was going to secure with American money.

Close after him a motor car rolled up to the curb, and under the awning Letty Lane passed quickly, as though thistledown blown into the distinguished house. The actress was taken possession of by several people and shown up-stairs.

Dan spoke to his hostess, who wore, over her azure dress, a necklace given her by Dan. She said he was "too late for words," and why hadn't he come before. After greeting him she set him free, and he went eagerly to find his place next to an elderly woman [illegible] warm. She had given him twenty pounds for some of his poor. Lady Calwarn had a calm, kind face, and Dan sat down beside her, well out of the crush, and they talked amiably throughout the violin solo.

"Think of it," she said. "Letty Lane of the Gaiety is going to sing. I'd sit through a great deal for that. Let that man with the fiddle do his worst."

Blair laughed appreciatively. He thought Lady Calwarn would be a good friend for Miss Lane, better than the duchess herself. "I wish Lily could hear you talk about her violinist," he said, delighted; "she thinks he's the whole show." And tentatively, his ingenuous eyes fixed on his friend, he asked: "I wonder how you would like to meet Miss Lane. She's perfectly ripping, and she's from my state."

"Meet her!" Lady Calwarn exclaimed, but before she could finish, through the room ran the little anticipatory rustle that comes before the great, and which, when they have gone, breaks into applause. The great actress had appeared to give her number. Dan and Lady Calwarn behind the palms in a little corner of their own watched her.

A clever understanding of the world into which she was to come this day, had made the girl dress like a charm. She stood quietly by the piano, her hands folded. Among the high ladies of the English world in their splendid frocks, their jewels and feathers, she was a simple figure, her dress snow white, high to her throat, unadorned by any gay color, according to the fashion of the time. It was such a dress as Romney might have painted, and under her arms and from across her breast there fell a soft coral colored silken scarf. The costume was daring in its simplicity. She might have been Emma, Lady Hamilton, because perfectly beautiful, perfectly talented, she could risk severe simplicity, having in herself the fire and the art and the seduction. Her hair was a golden crown and her eyes like stars. She was excited, and the scarlet had run along her cheeks like wine spilled over ivory.

She looked around the room, failed to see Blair, but saw the Duchess of Breakwater in her velvet and her jewels. Letty Lane began to sing. Dan saw she had chosen Mandalay and she began with it. Her dress only was simple. All the complexity of her talent, whatever she knew of seduction and charm, she put in the rendering of her song. Even the conventional audience, most of which knew her well, were enchanted over again, and they went wild about her. She had never been so charming. The men clapped her until she began in self-defense another favorite of the moment, and ended in a perfect huzzah of applause.

She refused to sing again until, in the distance, she saw Dan standing by the column near his seat. Then indicating to the pianist what she wanted she sang The Earl of Morey, such a rendering of the old ballad as had not been heard in London, and coming, as it did, from the lips of a popular singer whose character and whose verve were not supposed to be sympathetic to a piece of music of this kind, the effect was startling. Letty Lane's face grew pale with the touching old tragedy, the scarlet faded from her cheeks, her eyes grew dark and moist, she might indeed herself have been the lady looking from the castle wall while they carried the body of her dead lover under those beautiful eyes.

Prospective Mother-in-Law Didn't Want to Lose Her Daughter, but Why the Delay?

Mrs. DeGroff drew a deep sigh when her daughter told her that she had become engaged to Mr. Robins.

"I suppose it's foolish of me to feel so bad about it," she said, wiping her eyes, "but I can't help it. I know it's a woman's destiny to be married, dear, and I have always hoped that you would marry and be happy. But a mother can never lose a daughter without feeling deeply on the subject. She can never help regarding it as an awful loss—a tragedy. She cannot give up her little girl, even to the best man that ever lived, without the deepest reluctance."

"But, mother, dear—I shall come and see you often. And you mustn't cry as if it were going to happen right away. You will have time to get used to it."

"Will I? How soon are you to be married?"

"Not for nearly a year. Bob thinks that—"

"Not for a year? What on earth does he mean by putting it off that long? I don't believe he intends to marry you at all, the smirking young snip! If he did, he'd insist on having the wedding before September. And I shall tell him so. You bring him to time, Clara. You tell him that he'll either marry you next month or never. I'll show him!"

WOMAN SICK TWELVE YEARS

Wants Other Women to Know How She Was Finally Restored to Health.

Louisiana, Mo.:—"I think a woman naturally dislikes to make her troubles known to the public, but complete restoration to health means so much to me that I cannot keep from telling mine for the sake of other suffering women.

"I had been sick about twelve years, and had eleven doctors. I had dragging down pains, pains at monthly periods, bilious spells, and was getting worse all the time. I would hardly get over one spell when I would be sick again. No tongue can tell what I suffered from cramps, and at times I could hardly walk. The doctors said I might die at one of those times, but I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and got better right away. Your valuable medicine is worth more than mountains of gold to suffering women."—Mrs. BERTHA MUFF, 503 N. 4th Street, Louisiana, Mo.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from native roots and herbs, contains no narcotic or harmful drugs, and to-day holds the record of being the most successful remedy for female ills we know of, and thousands of voluntary testimonials on file in the Pinkham laboratory at Lynn, Mass., seem to prove this fact.

If you want special advice write to Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co. (confidential) Lynn, Mass. Your letter will be opened, read and answered by a woman and held in strict confidence.

Decorations of the Daughters.

The aggregate value of the jewels worn by the Daughters of the American Revolution at a recent reception in Washington is said to have exceeded $500,000. Estimates of jewels are always liable to large deductions, but it may be said that if the fathers of the revolution could at certain periods of the struggle have had $50,000 worth of ammunition at their command they could have shortened the war by two years or more.—Boston Transcript.

Jewels in a Flower-Bed.

The recovery of a quantity of stolen jewelry from a flower bed was described at Kingston-on-Thames police court the other day, when a general servant was charged with theft from her mistress, a resident of Ivydene, Southborough road, Surbiton, London. The lady had missed a pearl pin and a pearl and diamond ring. Thinking she might have lost the jewels in the street, she issued printed notices offering a reward for their recovery. When she lost a number of other things she placed the matter in the hands of the police. The detective said that from what the prisoner told him he searched the garden, and in one of the flower-beds found some of the jewelry. The rest he found in the prisoner's bedroom.

Health & Beauty Hints

By Katherine Morton

"Please write something about treatments for disfigured finger nails. Mine are very tender and ugly from a long course of housework, but now I've got some help I want to improve my hands.

"A COUNTRY READER."

The working housekeeper's hands have many injurious influences to encounter, but the very worst of them is the constant immersion in water which dishwashing and other cleaning up involve. Rapid changes from hot to cold water, and the reverse, are very hard on the hands, the changes of temperature making the nails brittle and scoring them with the ridges so often seen on much used hands. The texture of the skin is also coarsened, while the soaps used in all forms of housework, being full of alkali, may so attack the delicate flesh about the nails as to loosen them. So a proper care of the nails certainly means a proper care of all the hands, and it is easy enough to protect them when doing some forms of coarse work. There are heavy white cotton gloves for sweeping and dusting which cost only ten cents a pair. Before putting these on, the palms and nails should be greased with olive oil or vaseline, or other ointment rubbed well into the skin and all about the nail scarf. The gloves should also be regularly washed, for when they are [illegible] useless for beautifying purposes.

With these gloves and a mop, dishes and cooking utensils may be washed without injury to the hands, or, if preferred, rubber gloves could be used for the dishwashing.

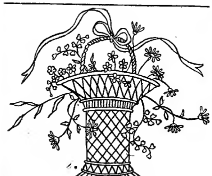
The first care of hands injured with housework begins with the cleansing bath, with soft water barely more than tepid, and the soap of a very good sort. If the water used is hard soften it with a teaspoonful of borax, and before using the soap shave it up and boil it down to a jelly. Get a cake of good old castile for the purpose, and after the soap is dissolved pour in about half a cup of benzoin, stirring it well into the jelly. Begin the bath by wetting the hands, and then rub the jelly on them, working the hands together in the usual way as when using soap. Wash off in one water and then rinse in another of the same temperature, drying the hands at once on a clean, soft towel.

Such a hand bath should be taken every night before going to bed, and when the hands are dry some unguent must be rubbed at once over and about the nails—either olive oil or vaseline, as hitherto stated.

As numerous baths, even with the best soap and softest water, are not always good for sensitive nails and delicate skin, it is wise to clean the hands several times during the day with olive oil or palm oil; if the hands are well rubbed with either of these, then dusted with talcum powder, and wiped off with a coarse and yet soft towel, the soil will be entirely removed. Coarsened nails are much improved, too, by the wearing of loose old white kid gloves, both during the day and at night, while the regular gloves worn should also be fairly loose and of a soft leather such as chamois or doeskin.

KATHERINE MORTON.

Pretty Decoration for the Handkerchief or Glove Case



A white silk glove or handkerchief case may be charmingly decorated with this little basket, worked in colors. The daisies are worked solid in white with yellow centers, the forget-me-nots in blue with yellow centers, and the leaves and ferns in green. The stems are done in the outline stitch in green. The basket is also worked in the outline stitch in a light shade of brown, and the ribbon is done in the solid satin stitch in pink, blue, lavender or green. Use filo floss for the embroidery.

Budget From "Newly Wed."

I am a very interested reader of all your good advice and suggestions to the many asking aid from you. May I, too, ask a few questions? Am just married and moved into our dear little bungalow, and look to you for advice. For which foods are finger bowls used, and does a finger bowl stand on a glass plate? When are the finger bowls placed on the table? When individual salt dishes are placed on the table with salt spoons, is the salt conveyed to the plate with small spoon? Please give me a recipe for a fruit salad containing grapefruit and one without, also a cabbage salad recipe, if not too much trouble for you. In having cards printed shall I have my husband's name on my card, such as "Mrs. H. B. Jones" (or Harry B.)? Is it good taste to have a door plate with name on our new home?—V. O. N.

Finger bowls are necessary when fruit is served or corn on the cob, and many hostesses have them brought in with the dessert service or after it. Each bowl rests on a glass plate to match or on a china plate on top of a fine finger bowl doily. The salt spoon is used by the individual to put the salt on his plate. I cannot take the limited space to write out recipes unless for some very unusual dish that will be a novelty. What you wish will be found in any up-to-date cook book. Your cards should be engraved with your husband's full name. Door plates are seldom used now.

From "N. B. D."

Will you kindly answer through the paper whether it is proper to bring a box of candy or chocolates when taking a lady to the theater? Also which side should a gentleman be on (right or left of lady) in escorting her across the ballroom floor, and on which side should he seat himself?—N. B. D.

There is nothing improper about taking a box of candy to the theater but it should be eaten during the intermission and not during the play. A man walks at the left of a lady and sits at her left, offering his right arm when occasion requires it.

MADAME MERRI.

Dress Baskets.

The bedroom that is redolent of the old fashioned scent of lavender suggests refreshment and peace. It is not enough to line the wardrobe shelves with lavender sachets though to do so is a step in the right direction.

Very pretty are the hanging "breeze" baskets which every breath of air from the outside encourages to send forth a delicious scent. The baskets are hung upon ribbon and slung upon the looking glass or upon the handle of an escritoire, out of sight maybe, but not out of mind.

The Panier.

Now that the question of spring suits for out-of-door wear has been definitely settled, our thoughts are turned toward evening modes. The most captivating models may be seen everywhere. The paniered dress is the most novel and sensational, but fashion is so versatile that almost every style which is graceful and effective may be considered in mode.

Overdress seen recently was made in soft ivory mousseline de soie gracefully draped over a handsome embroidered shell pink satin underdress, with applique of Bruges lace and at the waist was a touch of black velvet with paste ornaments. The long lace trimmed sleeve extended right on to the hand.

Handy Device.

A sleeping car apron is made of a plain breadth of linen, having a broad strip turned up at the bottom to form a pocket with three divisions. These are lined with thin white rubber and are meant to hold sponge, soap, tooth brush and other toilet necessaries, two smaller pockets above receiving rings and other small jewelry, stock collars and other accessories.

Tennis Costume.

The white serge skirt in combination with one of the many types of loose-skirted blouses is much used for tennis. With it is worn a striped coat of blue and white, orange and white, red and white, or green and white. Combinations of the various college colors are also seen.

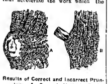
NECESSITY OF FREQUENT AND VIGOROUS PRUNING OF TREES

In Order to Preserve Symmetrical Form and to Prevent Fruit Being Borne at Extremity of the Long, Slender Branches, Careful Heading-in Is of Much Importance.

(By L. C. CORBETT.)

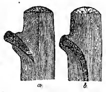
During the early years of the life of both ornamental and fruit trees a vigorous use of the pruning knife is frequently necessary. Trees normally make much longer natural growth during the first ten years of their existence than later. For this reason, in order to preserve a symmetrical form and to prevent the fruit being borne at the extremity of long, slender branches, careful heading-in is necessary. With pears and apples the main body branches left at planting time should not be more than eight inches long. At the close of the first season, when pruning time arrives, the growth of that year should again be shortened to at least one foot and each of the main body branches should be allowed to carry not to exceed three subdivisions, each of which should be eight inches long. The third year the same operation should be repeated and instead of allowing each subdivision to carry three branches the number should be reduced to two. The arrangement of these branches should in all cases be based upon the same principles as the arrangement of the branches on the main body of the tree.

It is not reasonable to expect that every tree planter will have observed all of the proper precautions in caring for his ornamental and fruit trees. It therefore frequently happens that the removal of large branches becomes a necessity. The question then arises how shall this be accomplished with as little injury to the plant as possible, in other words, how shall the cut be made? Those familiar with the propagation of plants from cuttings, as well as those who have observed the results of pruning trees, will have noticed that when branches are cut at a certain distance from their origin, the stub which is left invariably dies, decay follows, finally the rotten stub breaks off close to its origin and a cup, which catches the rain, is left. This is also an attractive spot to many birds and rodents which are fond of nesting in such places. They assist the natural decay by excavating and thus accelerate the work which the elements have begun. The result is that the branch which was removed for the purpose of lengthening the life of the tree and to improve its appearance has in reality been the direct cause of its early destruction.



Results of Correct and Incorrect Pruning. A, Correct Method, B, Incorrect Method.

The decay in the stub which breaks off near its origin does not stop at that point, but the factors which have been the cause of its decay and death continue their work upon the heart wood of the plant, until the hollow trunk of the tree only remains. On the other hand, if the branch is removed at another point the wound is rapidly covered by new growth, and in the course of two or three seasons it is practically impossible to determine where the branch formerly appeared. These results, which are so important to the life of the tree and to the success of the plantation, whether ornamental or economic, are well understood by all plant physiologists. The stub which is left when the branch is removed, if cut off at some distance above its origin, invariably decays and leaves a hollow branch, while the branch which is cut off close to its origin almost invariably heals quickly, the new growth covering the wound.



Progress of Decay Due to Improper Pruning. a, Dead Stub; b, Decay of Heart.

GOOD SANITARY HOG WALLOWS

Nothing Is Better for All Swine During Summer Months Than Reasonably Clean Water.

(BY JOHN H. DUNLAP.)

There are objections to the filthy mud holes that hogs often make to wallow in, but there is nothing better for hogs of all ages during the summer months than reasonably clean water. I find that my cement hog wallow is one of the most satisfactory improvements I have ever put on the farm. It is situated near a storage tank that is fed by a wind pump and is directly over an eight-inch drain.

The water is allowed to flow through the hog wallow and out into the tile, so it is always pure enough for the hogs to drink. I have never had any sickness among them in the last 14 years that I have used this method.

I find that the hogs get great satisfaction from lying down and wallowing, except in the winter, at which season they are content to drink from the sides. My cement wallow is ten feet long, five feet wide and twelve inches deep, inside measurements, and has a cement floor several feet wide beyond each side, so that the wallow will not get so muddy. Though the hogs manage to carry some mud to it, I find that it can be cleaned out very easily every few weeks.

A wallow of this kind is very useful in exterminating the lice on hogs; this can be done by stopping the outlet and the inlet and using any standard disinfectant or crude oil. The crude oil stays on top of the water and has the same effect as if used in a dipping tank. With the use of this disinfectant the hogs get the benefits both externally and internally.

Some authorities object to giving hogs all the water they want during the summer months, but I have never found any ill effects from allowing hogs of all ages all the water they can drink at all times.

SATISFACTORY MACHINE SHED

As the result of our reference to a machine shed W. H. Dunning sends in his plan, says the Orange Judd Farmer. Selecting a well-drained spot with a south front, the best shingles that could be procured were used for the roof of the shed and the sides are shiplap up and down, which will paint.

The front is all doors and no sill to lift over. There is only one hinge door, the hinges being set in enough so that the roller doors will pass on a track nailed onto the 2x8 plate before the roof is put on. Use as short a roller as possible, so it will not roll under the eaves.

After passing the door there is a space 16x24 feet, so that it is not necessary to move everything to get what is wanted. The heavy machinery will go through the ten-foot door and can be taken in and out with a team. This shed may be built longer and the same kind of doors used without more hinge doors.

A Garden Pond.

A garden pond is sometimes a thing of beauty and is certainly a thing of joy to the birds all summer long, but it brings the mosquitoes. A dozen gold fish placed in the water will take care of most of the mosquitoes, and they will add to the attractiveness of the pond.

A border of well selected stones near to the water and just outside of [illegible] a few aquatic plants will also help. Very often frogs are attracted to these little ponds and will help the fish take care of the mosquitoes, and sometimes they become quite tame and make their winter bed in the mud, and are ready to greet us in the spring with their songs—if you like to call them that.

What Nitrate of Soda Will Do.

It is estimated by experts who have conducted experiments with nitrate of soda that under ordinary conditions 100 pounds per acre, applied to crops named below, will produce yields as follows:

Barley, 400; corn, 280; oats, 400; rye, 300; wheat, 300; potatoes, 3,000; hay, 1,000; cotton, 500; cabbage 5,000; onions, 18,000; strawberries, 200 quarts; asparagus 100 bunches; celery, 30 per cent; sugar beets 4,000; beets, 4,000; sweet potatoes, 900.

Use Whitewash Brush.

Get busy with the whitewash brush both in the dairy barn, covering the stalls and every inch of surface inside and do not forget the chicken [illegible]. Treat the hog houses in the same way.

Western Wool.

A remarkable improvement in the condition of western wool this year is reported by buyers. A large proportion of the species are free from dirt owing to the educational methods adopted by the large wool houses.

Danger of Drilling Manure.

Never drill strong fertilizer, like sheep or poultry manure, in the rows next to the seed. Better plan to work it into the ground before planting, or in rows after the plants appear, and not close enough as it will touch.

PHYSICIAN ADVISES CUTICURA REMEDIES

"Four years ago I had pimples break out on my wrist and on my shin which would itch and burn by spells, and scratching them would not seem to give any relief. When the trouble first began, my wrist and shin itched like poison. I would scratch those places until they would bleed before I could get any relief. Afterwards the places would scale over and the flesh underneath would look red and feverish. Sometimes it would begin to itch until it would waken me from my sleep, and I would have to go through the scratching ordeal again.

"Our physician pronounced it 'dry eczema.' I used an ointment which the doctor gave me, but it did no good. Then he advised me to try the Cuticura Remedies. As this trouble has been in our family for years and is considered hereditary, I felt anxious to try to head it off. I got the Cuticura Soap, Ointment and Pills, and they seemed to be just what I needed.

"The disease was making great headway on my system until I got the Cuticura Remedies which have cleared my skin of the great pest. From the time the eczema healed four years ago, until now, I have not felt any of its pest, and I am thankful to the Cuticura Soap and Ointment which certainly cured me. I always use the Cuticura Soap for toilet, and I hope other sufferers from skin diseases will use the Cuticura Soap and Ointment." (Signed) Irven Hutchison, Three Rivers, Mich., Mar. 16, 1911. Although Cuticura Soap and Ointment are sold by druggists and dealers everywhere, a sample of each, with 32-page book, will be mailed free on application to "Cuticura," Dept. L, Boston.

His Veracity.

Jim Slocum of Montgomery county, avers the Kansas City Journal, was called as a witness to impeach the testimony of a man in that county. Jim was asked if he was acquainted with the reputation of the witness for truth and veracity. Jim said that he guessed maybe he was.

"Is it good or bad?"

"Well," said Jim, "I don't want to do the man no injustice, but I will say that if his neighbors were to see him looking as if he was dead they would want some corroboratin' evidence before they would be willing to bury him."

Looking Forward.

TREASURE TROVE IN OLD GUN

In the narrow and rusty depths of an old Arab gun which had stood for years in the shop of M. Zucconi, an art dealer of 16 Rue Victor Masse, Paris, France, huddled 241 brilliant turquoises, which came to light in a curious manner.

An amateur came into the shop searching for some sort of a decoration for his room. After looking over weapons of all styles, conditions and ages, he selected the Arab gun, which was standing in a corner, its long unused barrel plugged with a cork. The purchase was made and the amateur collector was just about to leave the shop when his curiosity to see what was inside the gun got the better of him. He pulled the cork and lowered the gun. A stream of the sparkling stones poured out, bouncing this way and that into the dust-filled corners of the shop. When the men recovered from their surprise they were both on their knees scrambling for the gems. Immediately a dispute arose as to their ownership, and this was continued for more than half an hour as the two men, both of a naturally dignified disposition, crawled about the dust and cobwebs hunting the jewels.

"They're mine!" cried the shopkeeper. "For years this gun has belonged to me; therefore its contents are mine."

"But I have bought the gun and paid for it!" was the retort from behind a stack of other firearms of past ages. "I have bought the gun, and what the gun contains is mine."

After a time the search for the turquoises was finished, but not so the argument, which was rising in temperature every moment. Finally both men agreed to turn the jewels over to the police and let the commissary decide to whom they belonged

Possibly in some desert camp some Arab chieftain sits by his lonely fire and wonders, cursing the while the white man who years ago robbed him of his fortune and the weapon with which he won his place at the head of his tribe.

Greater Things in Promise.

All the world is heavy with the promise of greater things, and a day will come—one day in the unending succession of days—when beings, beings who are now latent in our thoughts and hidden in our loins, will stand upon this earth as one stands upon a footstool, and laugh and reach out their hands amidst the stars.—H. G Wells.

Ventilate the Chicken House.

Chickens breathe 8,278 cubic feet of air in 24 hours for every 1,000 pounds of live weight, while men require only 2,833 cubic feet and cattle but 2,804. Hence for poultry ventilation is a matter of first importance.

POLICE GRAFT

Painesville Spends More Money for Police Than Any City of Its Size in the State

An Increase in Appropriations Since Saloons Were Voted Out, to Make Room for Favorites

Is the little city of Painesville the most criminal city in the state of Ohio?

Is there need for an increase in police force expenditures after the saloons of a town are voted out of existence?

You will have to answer the above questions, either in the affirmative, or you will have to admit that there is a bit of extravagance and mismanagement of the police expenditures in Painesville, for Painesville is now paying more for regular police than any other city or village of the same or lesser population in the state and there are fourteen cities of much larger size than Painesville, some of them with many saloons, that expend less money for police service than Painesville

In the following list of cities it will be noticed that the population of each is larger than that of Painesville and that the expenditures for regular police are very much less, some of them with a larger population spending less than half as much as Painesville

| City | Population | Amount |
|---|---|---|
| Painesville | 5025 | $3234.50 |
| Bowling Green | 5067 | 1920.00 |
| St Marys | 5359 | 1380.00 |
| Nelsonville | 5421 | 1436.36 |
| Canal Dover | 5422 | 1839.33 |
| Gallopolis | 5432 | 1578.93 |
| Greenville | 5501 | 2740.00 |
| Sidney | 5688 | 3060.00 |
| Washington C H | 5751 | 2146.00 |
| Wooster | 6063 | 1950.00 |
| New Philadelphia | 6213 | 2390.00 |
| Van Wert | 6422 | 2233.87 |
| Niles | 7468 | 1075.80 |
| Wellston | 8045 | 2083.39 |
| Xenia | 8096 | 2392.34 |

The Herald has taken the above figures from the comparative statistics, cities of Ohio, and they may be easily verified We do not believe that the Mayor and City Council have had these figures called to their attention before, but that to secure the present appropriation and the increase made in the appropriation a short time ago, influence was brought to bear upon them, solely for the purpose of making jobs for new applicants, regardless of the real needs in police protection

That this may reasonably be taken as the true explanation of the expenditures in this department it is only necessary to notice the scandalous conduct of certain politicians to force upon the police department an applicant who is not wanted, and whose chief recommendation for a policeman is that he is backed by an eccentric old man with a lot of money.

The old man has a right to spend his money as he pleases and indigent young lawyers have a legal right to take the money and heckle and annoy the Director of Police with technical resolutions at council meetings and temporary injunctions in the courts, even work upon the political and religious prejudices of the people, all in exchange for the old man's paltry dollars,—but the taxpayers have something to say about the expenditure of their money and have a right to demand a reduction in the appropriation for police in this city in accordance with the same expenditures for like purposes in other cities.

DEMOCRATS MEET

COUNTY CONVENTION WELL ATTENDED BY PARTY WORKERS

Delegates Elected to Attend State Judicial and Senatorial Conventions

The Democratic party held their county convention at the new City Hall, Painesville, Saturday afternoon May 25th. The party, here in Lake county, has never held a more representative convention. Many of the old time democratic workers were present and there were also a goodly number of new and enthusiastic party men ready and willing to help shape the line of battle for ensuing conflict

Hon F. D Malin, chairman of the county central committee, called the convention to order, read the call, and asked for the election of a president of the convention H T. Nolan was elected to preside, and M L. Harter was chosen as secretary, both were elected by ballots

The convention proceeded to the election of delegates and alternates to attend the State Convention, to be held at Toledo, June 4 and 5 M L. Harter, F. D. Malin, H. T. Nolan, M A. Tuttle, L Ryan, E J. Lynch, E. E Lawrence and E W. Ingersoll were placed in nomination. Motion was made and carried that the candidates receiving the highest number of votes should act as delegates and those receiving the next highest number act as alternates, respectively. The ballot resulted in the election of F. D. Malin and H. T. Nolan of Painesville and E. W. Ingersoll of Madison as delegates. By the same ballot M. L. Harter of Painesville, E. E. Lawrence of Fairport, and L. Ryan of Willoughby were chosen as alternates.

A motion was made and carried that the Alternates to the state convention act as delegates and that delegates act as their alternates to the Circuit Court Judicial Convention to be held at the Secor Hotel, Toledo June 5.

F. W. Fuller and E. W. Ingersoll of Madison and A. P. Squires of Kirtland were elected as delegates, and M. A. Tuttle of Painesville, J. F. Brown of Perry and C. A. Rush of Wickliffe, as alternates to the Common Pleas Judicial Convention to be held in City Hall, Ashtabula, June 1.

Delegates and alternates respectively to the 24th and 26th State Senatorial Convention, to be held at the Democratic Club Rooms in the Arcade Building, Akron, Ohio, July 6th, were chosen as follows: C A. Rush, E E Lawrence and J. H. Brown, B D Carroll, M L. Harter and F D Malin.

Immediately after the adjournment of the convention, the new county central committee organized by the election of F. D. Malin as chairman, and H T Nolan as Secretary

Messrs Malin, Nolan, Lawrence, Rush and Brown will constitute the county executive committee

WOMEN'S VOTES

Not Sure To Go All One Way

A special dispatch to the Cleveland Plain Dealer giving the result of an election on the question of the sale of liquor, shows that the women like men, are very apt to vote as their interests may seem to dictate. Here is the dispatch ver-batim:

Pasadena, Cal., May 25.—The women voters of Pasadena saved this city from going dry, according to final returns received today.

They flocked to the polls and cast their strength, practically, for the granting of hotel and restaurant licenses.

The reason was the report that if the city went dry Adolphus Busch, the millionaire brewer, would close his famous sunken gardens and move his winter home to Santa Monica.

ABOUT PEOPLE AND PLACES

C. A. Rush and T. E. Rice of Wickliffe were in Painesville Saturday of last week.

—o—

Judge C. H Nye has purchased the Little place on East Erie street Consideration $4000.

—o—

Painesville high school senior class of 43 members, will graduate Friday evening, June 14th.

—o—

Misses Louie and Hilde Carroll of Mentor, visited relatives in Painesville on Sunday of this week

—o—

The large brick smoke stack of the proposed Jackson street green houses is now in process of construction

—o—

Dr Charles F. House has purchased a new Firestone-Columbus automobile from the Cleveland agents

—o—

Wonder how Server E. L. House likes "government by injunction" Bet he votes for Bryan next time

—o—

That eagle on the court house cupola probably represents government by injunction in the probate and circuit courts

—o—

E. W. Ingersoll of Madison attended the democratic convention in Painesville last Saturday He was as happy as ever

—o—

Why does it require more policemen and more money to pay the policemen of Painesville after the saloons have been voted out of existence?

—o—

Ten days to injunction time for Elmer Murphy Keep your nerve Elmer, and don't be surprised when it comes Hope we don't get injoined for this

—o—

No, it is not true that Colonel Burrows John Warren or Harry Hammar addressed the republican county convention held here in Painesville last Saturday

—o—

When the saloons were voted out of Painesville we were promised a great saving in expenditures for police service, but strange as it may appear the pay roll is larger than ever before

—o—

The manner in which the courts of this county are being used to prevent Safer Murphy from performing the duties of his office makes us still more zealous in advocating the recall of judges

—o—

George Duncan, a former resident of this city, passed away in Cleveland on Friday after a lingering illness The funeral services were held at Evergreen cemetery on Sunday afternoon at 3 o'clock

—o—

There was a Democratic convention here in Painesville last Saturday and O. W. Kneale of Madison, Jesse Winchell of Concord and Victor Hungerford of Leroy were not present. What is the matter?

—o—

The Mixer is just as touchy as ever; we cannot notice any apparent, or perceptible improvement. He has been a little tender on the shin bones ever since Mr. C. T. Morley handed him one some time ago.

—o—

Tom Clifford, one of Ohio's leading Socialist orators, will speak in Painesville Saturday evening, June 1 at the corner of Main street and St Clair street The "Positive Outcome of Capitalism" will be his subject

—o—

Officer Spniler caught a chicken thief, Tuesday morning E R Tucker and E C Vesey were the losers A number of the fowls were dead when recovered The loss was a severe one as many of the birds were valuable

—o—

Lake Erie College Commencement will be held the week of June 16th Among the speakers of note will be Miss Jane Addams, the famous head of the Hull House, Chicago, who is now making a speaking tour of Wisconsin and is being greeted by large audiences

—o—

Here is the political situation in a nut-shell President Taft likes the existing order of things; Ex-President Roosevelt would be governed by his likes and dislikes; Bryan and Senator La Follette never have and never will compromise with any one who under government has an unjust advantage over his fellowmen.

—o—

It was a real fire on Liberty street Monday morning, when the house owned by E A. Pierson and occupied by A. D. Sthridge and family, burned almost to the ground before the steamer of the fire department could be brought into play. The neighbors assisted in saving most of the furniture.

—o—

John J. Lentz of Columbus, and Leonard Garber of Anderson, Ind., addressed a fair-sized audience at the Elks' hall last Friday evening in the interests of the Loyal Order of Moose Other speakers were W. H. Scheibl, Rev. B. Lee Howard and John C. Ward. Painesville is one of eight cities being considered for the site of the new Moose Home.

—o—

Judging from the warm reception given Mrs. Lulu L. Shepard of Salt Lake City, Utah, last Thursday night at the Congregational church here in Painesville, when she spoke to a large crowd in behalf of equal suffrage, there is little doubt but what Lake county voters will give that feature of the proposed new constitution a good majority.

—o—

Mr C L Barnes, formerly in business here in Painesville, and now located in Conneaut, Ohio, is calling on old friends here this week Mr Barnes has been to southern Texas and made investments there He is very enthusiastic over the future of that great country, and when business affairs at Conneaut will permit he is representing the South Texas Land Co

—o—

One reason that Painesville is a dead town is that we pay out more for policemen then we pay for a city council, the clerk, the mayor, the auditor, the treasurer, the solicitor, superintendent of streets, the directors of safety and service, and their clerks, elections, legal advertising and stationery, all combined To pay the policemen of Painesville requires a per capita tax of about 60 cents And all the officers and expenditures enumerated above require a per capita tax of less than 60 cents How would it do to have fewer policemen and better paid city officials?

REPUBLICANS

HOLD CONVENTION LAST SATURDAY AND SELECT DELEGATES

Taft Men Surrender and Everybody Loves a Cheerful Loser

The Republican county convention met at the court house Saturday afternoon Hon S D Shankland of Willoughby was chosen chairman and he voiced the sentiments of the Taft men in the following words

"I represent the losing end in this fight, and I think we ought to retire gracefully for the good of the Republican party in Lake county."

The proceedings taken altogether shows very plainly the willingness of the average Republican to let nothing in line of principle stand in the way of his getting next to the pie counter

The committee on resolutions provided for harmony by making everybody present subscribe to the following:

Resolved: That this convention heartily endorse the candidacy of that sterling American, Theodore Roosevelt, and that the delegates and alternates to the state convention be known as Roosevelt men and instructed to use all honorable efforts to secure the selection of six delegates and six alternates at large to the national convention loyal and true to the candidacy of Theodore Roosevelt to the end that the will of Ohio Republicans as expressed at the primary election be fully carried out

Carl Kimball was elected chairman V. E Wyman, secretary, and James Hutchinson, treasurer of the county central committee

Don't be surprised if you have an attack of rheumatism this spring. Just rub the affected parts freely with Chamberlain's Liniment and it will soon disappear. Sold by all dealers.

THE BRYAN POSSIBILITY

[From the Washington Correspondence of the Boston Advertiser.]

The sentiment held in such localities as Boston that Col. Bryan will be nominated by the Baltimore convention if Roosevelt is nominated at Chicago and that Bryan will win has long been entertained in Washington and with growing force. It is believed in by many republicans in Congress and is especially asserted in the press galleries, where there is apt to be some shrewd summing up of probabilities in political happenings

It is believed that Roosevelt's nomination must be followed up by that of Bryan Clark against Roosevelt would not do at all, although perhaps he would be better than Underwood and Harmon. The Nebraska colonel would not have to be introduced to the people for one thing, and could start right at once slamming the New York colonel, and Bryan is a wonderful campaigner Besides, he could show how many of the planks Roosevelt has stolen from him Bryan could make the third issue very compelling Roosevelt could not dodge this, because Bryan would not let him.

Then Bryan always had a tremendous hold on the democratic vote One reason the Roosevelt people urge in advocacy of his nomination is that he is strong with the democrats This however, is true only when the democrats nominate such a man as Alton B Parker Bryan can hold the radical vote in his party and being more conservative than Roosevelt, and certainly more respectable in his utterances, he would receive that enormous vote in the republican party which it is believed would find it impossible to support Col Roosevelt by reason of the third term issue and his other extraordinary views Then it is regarded that fate should so arrange it that the republican party's only actual third term candidate and in fact the country's only third-term candidate, should be laid low in defeat by the democrat two republican presidents have defeated, McKinley and Taft Fate loves to be ironical

An odd feature of the thought is that whereas Bryan would be strong and a winner against Roosevelt he would be weak and a loser against Taft The country generally decides for the more conservative candidate in the presidential race If Taft is nominated the democrats will have to find a stronger man than Bryan

COST A PILE OF MONEY

Ohio Mix-up One of the Most Expensive on Record

Columbus Cor Philadelphia Record.

The leaders of both the Taft and Roosevelt factions admit that the contest was "very expensive." The Taft people estimate that the Roosevelt managers "used $3 for every $1 paid out by the president's supporters," and the Taft people do not deny that they were compelled to spend "more than $100,000" to offset the raid made by the colonel on the president's preserves

Charles P. Taft, brother of the president, is credited with having provided a good big percentage of the money spent to promote the cause of the president

The source of some of the $300,000 which the Roosevelt forces dumped into Ohio is credited to Dan R Hanna George W. Perkins, Garford, a wealthy automobile maker, and some financiers of Cleveland

The most diligent inquiry failed to discover that any of the Ohio party leaders or followers contributed a cent to the Roosevelt campaign fund Hanna and Garford are known to have put up some of it, but the greater part of the $300,000 which the Roosevelt people are estimated to have spent came from sources outside the state

Most of the financing of the colonel's fight was undertaken through Washington At any rate no appeal was made to the country and precinct leaders for funds There is the assurance of one of the most important workers in the Roosevelt cause that "every demand made by the leaders who were with the colonel was met promptly and without hesitation We had all the money we had use for Where did it come from? You can search me But it came all right

Senator La Follette had little if any financial backing

The Harmon campaign cost about $10,000 and there is seemingly as much mystery as to the origin of it as regarding that of Roosevelt

WAR

Not Roosevelt's Fault That It Didn't Go Around

Under date of May 24 the Associated Press carried the following in regard to Roosevelt's speeches in New Jersey

"In his other speeches Colonel Roosevelt mixed politics with various other things, some of which bore no relation to the issues of the campaign. He was in a rollicking mood, and laughed and chaffed with his audiences. He told stories of his experiences in the "cow country" and during the Spanish war.

"IT WASN'T MUCH OF A WAR," HE SAID, "BUT IT WAS ALL THE WAR THERE WAS AND IT WAS NOT MY FAULT THAT THERE WAS NOT ENOUGH TO GO AROUND."

HABIT OF READING IN BED

Now Said Not to Be Injurious to the Eyes if a Few Simple Rules Are Observed.

To those addicted to the practice of reading in bed the remarks of Dr. Carl Seiler will be of interest. He states that there is no valid reason to be urged against using the eyes in a proper manner in a recumbent position—such use is the least tiresome and can be persisted in for longer periods with damage than any other position.

We all know that grave damage is often done by reading in a recumbent posture, but therein possibly some oculists are at fault. Had it been the universal practice during the last 20 or 30 years to give careful directions how to read lying down instead of saying to one and all, "You must not read lying down," there would be less near sight and better eyes in the community than now exist.

Three easily avoided errors cause all the harm possible from reading lying down, the first often leading to the other two. They are insufficient or wrongly directed light, short reading distance, and tipping the book out of a plane at right angles to the line of vision.

If, however, every one reading lying down will so arrange his lounge or bed that the light comes over the head without striking the eyes and falls well upon the page; if he will hold his book at a long reading distance and take care that the line of letters shall be at right angles to the line of vision he can be sure of doing his eyes no more harm than if he were sitting up.

More than this, there is much positively in favor of reading lying down. Dr. Seiler concludes. "The recumbent posture allows more rest of the bodily structures than the sitting posture, and there is greater possibility of resting and repair in that position."

Plays Written for the Study.

Whenever "Macbeth" is put upon the stage, very nearly a fourth of it has to be omitted, for, although it is the shortest of the tragedies, it would take fully three hours to read it out loud without gabbling. "Hamlet," thus read would take nearly two hours more, and this seems to bear out the contention of Swinburne, among others, that much of the play, and indeed of other tragedies, was written by Shakespeare for the study and not for the stage. A six or seven hours' performance must have been too much even for an audience of Elizabeth's spacious times.—London Chronicle.

American Dentists in India.

American dentists desire to know what opportunities exist for them in India. A leading Canadian dentist practicing in Madras, who is a graduate of an American dental college, who was consulted, furnishes the following statement: "There are openings for dentists in India. Nearly every large city has at least one European dentist. The status of an American dentist is the same as that of the English. American university graduates have a good standing in the profession."

Fervent Pleading.

They sat in the hotel corridor.
"Gimme just one," he pleaded.
She shook her head.
Presently he emerged into the lobby.
"That fellow was pleading pretty hard for a kiss," remarked a lounger who had overheard the conversation. "Is that an engaged couple?"
"That couple?" said another lounger. "They're married. It was a dollar he was pleading for; not a kiss."

Calculation.

"Going to make garden?"

"I dunno," replied the man who always looks discouraged. "I'm busy now figuring up how many tons of lettuce I'll have to raise to pay for the spade and the rake and the rest of the outfit."

Genius.

Clerk—How shall I mark these new dress goods?

Old Tapeyard—Just figure out 50 per cent. profit and add 7 odd cents, so the women will think it's a bargain.—Puck.

Usual Way.

Friend—Do you try to make yourself a daily and an hourly necessity to your husband as I advised?

Bride—Yes, indeed. I keep everything in its place, so he can never find a thing without my help.

Answered.

Fond Relative—What will you do when you grow up?

Johnny—I s'pose I shall be at an information desk, folks are always asking me such fool questions.

Hard to Tell.

"It is easy to fool the public," remarked the cynic.

"Yes," replied the man who used to be great. "And yet it is often difficult to say whether a man has been fooling the public or whether the public has been amusing itself with him."

Lots of Time Wasted.

"Well, Hans, did you have lots of gifts on your birthday?"

Its Style.

"Did you hear what Mrs. Comeup said about their plans for the summer?"

"No; what are they?"

"She says they are going to build themselves a barcarole in the suburbs."

Same Thing.

"So you believe in the single tax theory?"

"Not at all."

"Why, I heard you yourself say you thought they ought to tax bachelors."

NO INTERVENTION, IS TAFT MESSAGE

WARSHIPS AND TROOPS BEING SENT SOUTH AS PRECAUTIONARY MEASURE.

GOMEZ ORDERS SOLDIERS OUT

President of Cuban Republic Is Making Frantic Efforts to Stamp Out the Negro Uprising on the Island.

Washington, D. C.—The United States government will not intervene in Cuba unless American lives are menaced or American interests suffer more heavily than they have up to date, in the negro uprising.

President Taft has just sent a cablegram to President Gomez, assuring him that this government has no present intention of intervening in Cuban affairs and that warships and troops are being sent merely as a precautionary measure.

President Taft telegraphed the message from Jersey City to Washington and it was officially cabled through the regular state department channel, from this city to Havana.

The message was an answer to President Gomez's cable to President Taft, assuring him that the Cuban government is able to cope with the situation there and that there is no call for interference at present.

The President's Message.

"I am sincerely gratified to learn of your government's measures to put down the disturbance and to know that you are confident of being successful.

"As was fully explained to the Cuban chargé d'affaires here, this government's motive in sending ships to Key West, just as sending the Prairie to Guantanamo naval station, was merely to be able to act promptly in case it should unfortunately become necessary to protect American life and property by rendering moral support or assistance to the Cuban government.

"As was made quite clear at the time, these ordinary measures of precaution were entirely disassociated from any question of intervention.

"WILLIAM H. TAFT."

No Quarter Shown Rebels.

Havana, May 28.—In the endeavor to save the Cuban republic from intervention by the United States, President Gomez is making frenzied efforts to put down the negro uprising before United States military forces are landed in what every Cuban believes would be the final occupation of the island by the great republic of the north.

Five thousand troops are in the field under orders to give decisive battle to the rebellious negroes at the earliest possible moment and to give no quarter.

Negroes will be treated with the greatest severity, prisoners of war will be shot as traitors.

Depredations Continue.

By government decree, all civilians are empowered to take up arms against the marauders and no act of violence against the negroes will be questioned hereafter.

From Holguin to Santiago province, it is reported that negroes attacked the village of San Arriba, north of there, burning a number of houses and carrying off a number of women.

NEW SCRIBE OF CHURCH PAPER

Dr. E. B. Searing Is Elected Editor of Northwestern Christian Advocate by Methodists.

Minneapolis, Minn.—Dr. E. B. Searing was elected editor of the Northwestern Christian Advocate on the third ballot at the Methodist general conference. Dr. Searing takes the place of Dr. Charles M. Stewart, former editor, who resigned to take the presidency of the Garrett Biblical Institute. Dr. Searing was assistant editor of the Western Advocate, published at Cincinnati. The Rev. Dan B. Brummitt of Chicago was elected editor of the Epworth Herald. Other editors elected on this ballot were:

Dr. W. V. Kelley, Methodist Review; Dr. George P. Eckman, to succeed Dr. J. M. Buckley as editor of the New York Advocate; Dr. John T. McFarland, Sunday school publications; Dr. Levi H. Gilbert, Western Advocate; Dr. Claudius B. Spencer, Central Advocate; Dr. John T. Wallace, Pittsburgh Advocate; Dr. R. E. Jones, Southwestern Advocate; Dr. H. H. Hughes, Pacific Advocate; Dr. A. J. Nast, Christliche Apologete; Dr. A. J. Bucher, Haus und Herd, and Dr. F. H. Bovard, California Advocate.

Exonerates Captain Smith.

Washington, D. C.—That Captain Smith of the ill-fated Titanic did not partake of any intoxicants at the now famous Widener dinner given on board the pride of the sea the night she sank to her doom is the substance of an affidavit which Senator William Alden Smith, chairman of the senate committee which investigated the disaster, presented to the senate as part of the committee's report. The affidavit was obtained from Mrs. George A. Widener of Philadelphia, the hostess at the dinner.

Can't Regulate Coal Rates.

Washington, D. C.—Power of the Ohio railroad commission to regulate the rates on "lake" coal shipped from Ohio mines to Cleveland and Port Huron for distribution to ports outside the state was denied by the supreme court of the United States.

The Wheeling & Lake Erie Railroad Co. complained that the state commission was seeking to regulate interstate commerce. The commission had acted upon the petition of the Pittsburgh Vein Operators' association in Ohio.

DR. WILEY AND HIS PURE FOOD EXPONENT

DR. HARVEY W. WILEY is here seen holding his eight-hour-old son, Harvey W. Wiley, Jr., who then weighed all of 9½ pounds. The first thing young Harvey did was to stick out his fists, open his eyes and yell for "pure food." The proud doctor says he is going to train young Harvey for the presidency.

SCHWAB IN HERO ROLE

RESCUES MAN FROM DROWNING IN A DEEP POOL.

Jumps Into Water and After a Struggle Manages to Get Pennsylvanian to the Bank.

South Bethlehem, Pa.—Charles M. Schwab became a candidate for a Carnegie hero medal when he rescued J. P. Kirchon from drowning in a deep pool of Martins Creek.

Mr. Schwab and Mr. Kirchon, who is general manager of the Tonopah mine extension, were trout fishing. In making a cast Mr. Kirchon's fly caught in the branches of a tree. It was a favorite fly and he shinned up the tree to rescue it, but as he climbed out on a branch he lost his balance and fell into the deep pool.

Mr. Schwab was some distance down the stream. He heard the cries of his companion and rushed to the pool where he saw the hands of Mr. Kirchon just disappearing beneath the water.

Without waiting to take off any of his clothes, even retaining his heavy fishing boots, Mr. Schwab jumped in to the pool and after a struggle managed to get Mr. Kirchon to the bank. Both men were exhausted and Mr. Kirchon had lost consciousness.

Mr. Kirchon told the story of how he had been rescued upon the return of the two men here. Mr. Schwab refused to discuss it, declaring that Kirchon was making a mountain out of a molehill.

HUFFMAN IS FOUND GUILTY

Buckeye State Senator Is Convicted of Accepting $200 From a Private Detective.

Columbus, O.—With a mighty effort at stoicism Senator Isaac E. Huffman of Oxford, Butler county, listened to the reading of a verdict in the common pleas court that pronounced him guilty of accepting a bribe, a verdict that stripped him of his official honors and civil rights. Twice he had fought the case through the court. In March, when tried first, the jury was unable to agree.

Huffman was found guilty of having gone to room 317, The Chittenden, April 29, 1911, and accepted $200 paid him by Frank Smiley, a Burns detective, for reporting out of committee the Cetone-Whittemore insurance measure. The conviction was obtained on the record made by the dictograph concealed in Smiley's room, the conversation it caught and transmitted being taken by a court stenographer in the next room. In the trial of the case the testimony of the state was that Huffman was accompanied at that time by Senator George K. Cetone of Dayton, who is under indictment.

Bar Women From Pulpit.

Louisville, Ky.—Women will not be allowed as ministers to fill the pulpits of the Presbyterian church in the United States of America. The commissioners of the general assembly so decided by a vote at the Warren Memorial Presbyterian church. In fact, they put themselves on record as being opposed even to the consideration of women as candidates for the ministry. The commissioners heard in rapid succession one overture after another, but all of them were voted down.

Procure License as "Stunt."

Pittsburgh, Pa.—After getting a marriage license in Youngstown, O., planning to surprise their friends, Miss Mary Fownes, daughter of Henry C. Fownes, the Pittsburgh golfer, and Matthew X. J. Scammel, superintendent of the Maryland Steel Co. of Sparrows Point, Md., changed their minds. They are not married. The bride-elect says they soon will be.

Mr. Fownes, according to his daughter, wasn't sore at the affair.

"It was just a foolish little stunt," said Miss Fownes.

WOMEN IN RIOT AT SUFFRAGE MEET

POLICE STOP PROCEEDINGS

Turbulent Meeting Followed Adoption of Paragraph in By-Laws Which Did Not Suit One Faction in Female Party.

Chicago, Ill.—A riot—wild—filled with hysterical women, laughing, weeping and yelling, shouting accusations at one another and declaring "You're hypocrites!" "You're thieves!" "You're robbers!" resulted in the police being called to the LaSalle hotel, where the Woman's party was having its annual meeting. Never in the history of American suffrage has there been such a demonstration.

The turbulent meeting followed many months of bitter antagonism in the Woman's party. Mrs. Charlotte Rhodus and her followers declared that Mrs. Myra Strawn Hartshorn, chairman of the organization, was arbitrarily ruling the organization and, tired of her bossism, they went to Springfield a week ago and incorporated a "Woman's Party of Cook County" with the avowed purpose of ousting Mrs. Hartshorn from the organization. Mrs. Hartshorn immediately got together three of seven members of a committee appointed by the original Woman's party to revise the by-laws. The other members of the committee were not authoritatively notified of the meeting, consequently were not present. Those present were strong supporters of Mrs. Hartshorn.

One paragraph in the by-laws made by this committee of three provided that any woman belonging to another body or corporation for suffrage purposes would be expelled and her name dropped from the rolls of the Woman's party.

When these by-laws were presented at the meeting for adoption, the fight began. Mrs. Rhodus declared the by-laws illegal, inasmuch as three members of the committee that prepared them did not constitute a quorum.

Attorney Mary Miller, Mrs. Hartshorn's staunchest follower, then shouted, for she couldn't be heard unless she did: "I am going to read these by-laws and we are going to vote upon them."

Mrs. Hartshorn upheld her and the reading began. Following the reading, which could not be heard three feet away, the chairman called for a standing vote.

As announced by her, the vote stood: Yes, 27; no, 23. Then the fur flew.

Wall Paper Men Set Free.

Cleveland, O.—Eight wall paper manufacturers and jobbers, on trial in federal court for the last two weeks, charged by the government with restraint of trade in violation of the Sherman anti-trust law, were declared not guilty after the jury had wrestled with their case a little over three hours.

Despite the acquittal and that a criminal conviction under the Sherman law has never been obtained, attorneys for the defense claimed that their victory strengthens the act.

Name Three More Bishops.

Minneapolis, Minn.—Three more bishops were elected by the general conference, thus completing the eight required. Dr. Frederick Deland Leete, pastor of the Central Methodist church of Detroit; the Rev. Joseph Cooke of Philadelphia and Dr. W. P. Thirkield of Washington were the additional bishops elected.

Rev. J. W. Robinson was elected by 486 votes as a missionary bishop for southern Asia. On the first ballot for a missionary bishop for southeastern Asia, no election occurred.

BEAT UP AND TAR WOMAN AT NIGHT

THUGS, CLAIMING OFFICIAL PROTECTION, SHOWER BLOWS AND KICKS ON FEMALE'S BODY.

ASSAULT IS MOST BRUTAL

Victim, Who Claims Defamatory Gossip Was Cause of Outrage, Says She Recognized Three Men Who Attacked Her.

Ocean City, Md.—Never has Worcester county been more stirred than it is now over the action of a gang of thugs, who, claiming official protection, dragged Mary Holzman, an unprotected woman, from her home in Ocean City, showered blows and kicks upon her face and limbs and concluded their brutal performance by dipping her into a vat of tar in the presence of her 11-year-old son, who struggled to prevent the outrage. Terrorized by her experience, the woman has quit the town. One of the most startling features of the incident is the fact that the town lights were out when the assault was committed. Mrs. Holzman says the switch was turned through the connivance of town officials. However this may be, the men guilty of the outrage boasted while they were subjecting her to the indignities that their act had the sanction of the town council.

Sheriff Harrison, acting under instructions from States Attorney Johnson, visited Mary Holzman and it was arranged that she should be taken to Snow Hill, the county seat of Worcester. She demanded an inquiry and the incidents leading up to the assault, claiming she has been the victim of defamatory gossip as well as of an assault so brutal that it seems almost incredible to believe that any group of human beings could have been guilty of it.

"It was 10 o'clock at night," she said, "when I was awakened by the smashing of glass in the room where I slept. I was frightened, of course. Hardly had I time to put on a few clothes when the door was broken in. The crowd numbered about ten men. Three I recognized. The others I did not know. When I screamed they struck me and sometimes kicked me. Every tooth I have is loose and the condition of my face you can see for yourself. My back and limbs are black and blue from the blows and kicks they gave me.

"Some of them grabbed me around the neck and others by the arms. They also caught my feet and, holding me in this way, they started from the house. My son screamed when I was first struck. They boxed his face and threatened him. One man waved a big pocket knife, the kind sailors carry. He threatened to run it through me if I did not keep quiet. Another had an oar. He said he would knock out my brains. They rushed with me from the house to a barrel of tar into which I was thrown. They forced me down into it until my whole body was covered. Some of it still clings to me."

"The lights were out," she went on, "and they continued out for half an hour. When the men finished their work the whole town was lighted as usual. After I had been in the tar barrel for perhaps ten minutes they dragged me out, threw me on a drying board close by and walked slowly away, evidently satisfied that nothing would be done about it.

"I was too frightened to do anything, but the cries of my son attracted the attention of Elmer Jones, son of Captain Jones of the Isle of Wright life saving station. He told me to come to his father's house. A gallon of coal oil must have been used in getting the tar off and still some of it sticks."

BISHOPS ARE CONSECRATED

Imposing and Solemn Service at Methodist Church Conference in Minneapolis.

Minneapolis, Minn.—In the presence of a great audience, hundreds having been turned away, the newly elected Methodist bishops were consecrated to their high offices in an imposing and solemn service.

Each of the new bishops was consecrated by two bishops and each in turn was presented for consecration by two ministers of their respective conferences. The following bishops were consecrated:

Slays Man and Wife.

San Diego, Cal.—C. H. Tolliver of San Francisco, dirigible air ship inventor and builder, and his wife were murdered here about 11 o'clock at night by Bert H. Lewis, former secretary to Tolliver. Lewis was arrested at midnight and confessed to the crime.

The bodies of the Tollivers were found in their little bungalow at Twenty-eighth and B streets, about half a mile inside the city limits, by H. A. McFadden, a neighbor, who was attracted to the place by shots.

Many Hurt While Priest Prays.

New York City.—With hands raised as he blessed the foundations of the new St. Clement's Catholic church in West Fortieth street, Monsignor Lavelle, vicar general of the diocese of New York, prevented a serious panic by continuing his prayer as a platform collapsed behind him, plunging 50 women and children to the ground of the basement, 15 feet below. When the victims of the crash had been extricated seven were found to be suffering from painful injuries while more than 20 were bruised.

BIRDS THAT LIVE CENTURIES

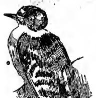
Average Life of Australian Cockatoo Said to Be Hundred Years.

Melbourne, Australia.—Among the wild birds of tropical countries whose average life is said to be close to one hundred years are said to be the cockatoos of Australia, a handsome bird belonging to the same family as the parrot, and a species of bird which is readily tamed and taught to do tricks which many domesticated birds and animals are unable to accomplish.

The cockatoo, particularly the yellow-crested bird, is one of the most intelligent of the birds of the world, and while it may seem strange to some, it is a fact that by kindness and excellent treatment a cockatoo can be taught to accomplish almost any act that its owner wishes.



Australian Cockatoo.

The birds are naturally fond of play and to combine play with instruction is said by Edward Montague, an old New Englander, to be the best method of training. Montague's ancestry dates back in 1668, when Richard Montague settled in Hadley, Mass., and all of his descendants, of whom there are more than five hundred in the United States, take pride in displaying the Montague coat-of-arms.

In addition to being proud of his ancestry, Edward Montague is extremely proud of his flock of trained cockatoos and some of his birds, doubtless because of his training, display almost human intelligence.

The cockatoo is found in immense flocks in the wild regions three hundred miles west of Melbourne, Australia, and there they are easily caught in traps. There are several species, but those with the yellow crest are the most beautiful as well as the most intelligent.

It is a strange feature of the breeding of the cockatoo that the mother bird hatches her young in a particularly torrid climate and then immediately flies away to some colder clime, where the young bird quickly attains its growth. Another feature of the bird is that the crest is a barometer of feeling.

When incensed, the crest is perceptibly raised while when the bird sulks the crest is correspondingly lowered. Naturally the bird is of a vicious nature and one pick from the sharp bill is sufficient to sever the end of a finger.

Training of the birds is an interesting vocation and usually extends over a period of two years. The individual bird must first be taught to perform and then similar instruction has to be given to the flock. The birds can be taught to dance, engage in chariot races, do stunts on the horizontal bars, perform on revolving balls and lastly to talk and swear. The birds strangely pick up profane words much more quickly than words of any other type, and some cockatoos know more profanity than anything else.

They live to be more than one hundred years old, and some birds are in captivity which have exceeded the century mark. They do not require any more treatment to sustain life than a human being, and if they are fed regularly and kept out of draughts they contract no illness. But they dislike extreme hot weather, and those in captivity always grow restless when the hot sun shines upon them.

Tried to Return Marriage License.

Vincennes, Ind.—After Herbert Smith had pestered Miss Mamie Nolan to marry him for three years past, she finally consented, and they obtained a license. She balked before the ceremony took place, however, and the couple tried to have the license returned. She says she does not love him and never will.

Deepest Hole in the World.

Slaughters Creek, W. Va.—What will be the deepest hole in the world is being drilled by W. E. Edwards on his oil fields. Its purpose is to determine the geological character of the earth. The depth now is 5,230 feet. The world's record depth is 6,001 feet, attained in a South American well.

Need 7,000 Steel Workers.

Pittsburgh, Pa.—Seven thousand men are needed at the various steel mills here. There are unfilled orders for about 25,000 steel cars. Canvassers are on the streets looking for workmen, and wages have advanced 50 cents a day.

Guilty Man Pleads for Son.

Brockton, Mass.—When sentenced to seven years in prison for counterfeiting, Patrick J. McGrath pleaded with the court to spare his son, who is to be tried. He said the boy acted only under his orders.

Paint Figures in Divorce.

Pittsburgh, Pa.—Because he had his automobile painted red without consulting her, Charles H. Bonting's wife deserted him, according to the story told by the husband in resisting her appeal for divorce.

Schoolgirl Selects Pall Bearers.

East Sparta, O.—After selecting six schoolgirl friends, to act as pall bearers at her funeral, Eva Teeple, aged seventeen, shot and killed herself.

THE QUIET HOUR

Real Mother of Evil

By DR. FRANK CRANE

BY A curious twist of the morbid nature of man the sunny gospel of Jesus Christ has often been construed into a shadow of gloom. No one had a firmer hold on life, a sounder taste of its pleasure, a richer appreciation of the higher possibilities for joy concealed in existence than Jesus.

Unfortunately, he was an oriental, and, by some strange will of destiny his cult first spread among occidentals. All his picturesque imagery, his poetry, his delicate, piercing shafts of intuitional perception, were hardened into doctrines of syllogisms, and his social truth intended to permeate "like a lump of leaven," became a rigid organization.

We may have gained something—who shall say?—but we certainly have lost much. When you pluck your lily to pieces, scatter its odorous petals on the ground, and transect with a sharp knife its swelling seed sac, you may have added to your knowledge of systematic botany, but you have lost your lily, its grace, color, fragrance, and fruitfulness—and the flower was created for these.

And we may be sure there was some charm of life, some fullness of deep joy, that played like a felt radiance about his eyes and smile, that so drew to him the "multitudes," for the common people follow only what smacks of life. Most of all does our age lack in the realization of his warm humanity.

Joy the Cure for Sin.

He came, he said, that our joy might be full. There is the cure of sin. It remained for Nietzsche, the declared enemy of our faith, to see it most clearly. "It is not joy, but the lack of joy, that is the mother of evil."

There never was a mortal sin that did not spring from an empty heart. What are all blasphemies but brutish, twisted prayers for inward peace? What are drunkenness and all fleshly naughtiness but the struggling of souls to fill themselves at the swine's trough of sensuality? What are cruelties and injustice and oppression but the attempt to stay the appetite for joy with poison and bitter passions? And, taking the whole range of human wickedness, murder, envy, hate, lust, theft, unkindness, and money-madness, do they not seem to be the cries and grimaces and wild gestures of starving gods locked out of the banquet hall of truth, beating with bruised hands against the door?

Whoever, therefore, plants one pure pleasure in the garden of man, and teaches us how to eat thereof and not sicken, has helped to stay the open wound of human sin. We are beginning, these last days, to perceive that the way to make the world as good as possible is to make it as happy as possible, and not as miserable as possible.

Economists are commencing to understand that what makes slums is dark, wretched lives, what makes drunkenness and the social evil is emptiness.

Old and True Gospel.

Our new gospel is unconsciously the old one and the true one. We are trying to make the people's joy full, to save the people from vice and death. So in Jesus' name we may not be building lofty cathedrals, as they did in another age, but we are laying out parks, setting apart playgrounds for children, rearing a mighty public school system to shatter ignorance, promoting science to woo the truth, building hospitals for the sick, and asylums for the insane and blind, and deaf and dumb, and feeble minded, transforming prison hells into sane reformatories.

We are extending art and learning and music and the drama and all civilized pleasures more and more toward the common man, establishing libraries and making the best literature cheap and popular—all in the name of the Son of Man, to shunt the vast river of human joy that for centuries ran only into the pools of the elect, into the broad lowlands of the people.

To this end all philanthropists, labor unions, socialist movements, democracies, scientists and schools work along different roads.

Law, repression, punishment, didactic warnings, and prohibitions, these do not cure crime; they do but "heal the hurt of the daughter of my people slightly, crying, Peace, peace, when there is no peace." Whoever will cure us, let him "come that our joy may be full."

Adversity and Happiness.

Because God loves us is it a sure inference that he will therefore always minister to our comfort, content, and peace of mind? That he will give us unclouded days and an even path? That, in short, he will always have our present happiness in view? If he loves us he will rather want to make our natures as large and opulent as possible, to bring us to the highest perfection of being, to the fullest development of strength and courage, to the greatest capacity of thought and feeling, to the strongest measure of self-control and self-direction. For these ends storm, stress, struggle, and disappointment are quite as essential as their opposites. They are helpful in forming that larger life that God most desires for us and is his greatest gift to us, and in the possession of which we shall find all other things added. We may, therefore, regard the adversities of life as the instrument through which God is shaping for us a nobler future, and be content.

Great may be he who can command and rule with just and tender sway;
Yet is diviner wisdom taught
Better by him who can obey.

CARIBOU MIGRATION IN NEW FOUNDLAND

CARIBOU ON MIGRATION

ONCE more I found myself in Newfoundland watching from my blind for the elusive caribou. The day before yesterday, while paddling up the river, I saw several small lots of caribou; and this morning, while cooking my solitary breakfast, a herd of fifteen swam across the river and landed on the bank directly opposite my camp; so it looks as though the migration, for which I have long waited, has really begun, writes A. Radclyffe Dugmore in Country Life. Yesterday I repaired the blinds, which I have used each year, and built a couple of new ones on very promising leads, so I feel that I am ready for my friends when they come. My blind, or gaze, as the Newfoundlanders call it, is a simple affair composed of about a dozen small fir trees stuck securely into the bog, arranged in a circle, open at the southern end. On the north side facing the leads the branches are cut away, leaving an opening through which the camera protrudes. The selection of a desirable site for the blind is of the greatest importance. It should control as many leads as possible, the prevailing direction of the wind must be considered, the sun must be from the back, the background should compose well, and there should be no obstructions in the foreground. Inside the blind everything should be arranged so that no dry twigs will rub against one's clothing, for the slightest noise may cause the loss of a picture. A number of well-worn leads or paths pass on [illegible] some only a few feet away, others two or three hundred feet. All the conditions are such that if the caribou come I should be almost certain to get pictures.

The day wears on, but not a caribou comes. I have been doing some sketching, but the cold wind makes the work very trying. The afternoon is particularly dark and unpleasant, and as it is nearly four o'clock I will head for camp without having used a single plate. On my way down the river two small herds crossed far ahead of me.

In a New Blind.

Another day. Since eight o'clock this morning I have been in the same blind, but without accomplishing anything. In the distance I have heard the splashing of animals crossing the river; why it is none comes along these fine leads is difficult to understand. Before returning to my camp I shall examine the banks and find out what leads are being used. Yesterday's search showed that the caribou are using the leads below my camp, quite a number having crossed the river during the past few days; so this morning finds me in a new blind on the south side of the river. Unfortunately, the wind is blowing so hard that it is impossible to hear any animals entering the water. Therefore it is all the more necessary that I keep my eyes opened. For two hours I have been waiting and my hands and feet are becoming numb, so I must get up and start the blood circulating; but wait! there is a caribou. It proved to be only a doe and her fawn, a beautiful pair, almost entirely clothed in their winter coat of silvery white. They came along at a quick walk heading directly toward me, closer and closer until within forty feet or so. Owing to the lack of light it was impossible to make a picture of them walking, so that, as soon as everything was ready I gave a sudden shout. They stopped immediately, and as they looked about with a surprised expression the shutter clicked with a noise that revealed my position and off the pair went at full gallop. This little excitement helped to warm me up, but the cold is getting more and more intense and the sky becomes still more heavily obscured with cold, lead-colored clouds. Bad weather is coming, without doubt. If only it would snow there would be no lack of caribou. Even while I am writing occasional snowflakes fly past, stinging my face. Further writing is impossible today. At intervals during the night flurries of hard snow blew against my tent, yet all together there was scarcely enough to whiten the ground.

Good Chance With Camera.

The day broke dull and grey, but before nine o'clock the sun came out. Now if the caribou would only come. The light is good and there is little wind, so that any animals crossing the river can be easily heard. Suddenly the stillness of the morning was broken by repeated sounds of splashing in the river. Caribou had crossed and landed close to where my canoe was hidden. Fortunately, they kept clear of my trail. It was only a small herd, but they came within range and I made two exposures. Scarcely had I reloaded the camera than another and larger herd came into view. What a superb sight they presented as they walked with quick steps along the lead which would give me the best chance with the camera. So quiet was the morning that the curious clicking of their feet sounded unusually clear. Here was the chance for which I had been waiting six long years, the combination that I knew was bound to come some time—good light and a large enough herd of absolutely unsuspicious caribou. It was really worth waiting for, and my heart beat so hard with excitement that it seemed as though the approaching animals must hear it. With almost feverish haste each part of the camera was carefully examined to see that the shutter was set correctly, the proper diaphragm in place, the slide drawn and so forth. All of this occupied but a second or two. However, the animals were almost in range by the time I had made sure that everything was in readiness. If only a stag had been leading; but that seldom happens. In fact, only three times have I seen it. First came a doe and her fawn, then three young stags and another doe, followed by a fair stag, but the largest one was, of course, the last of the line. That is the rule, and that is why it is so very difficult to photograph them. On they came, and I watched them closely as they grew larger and larger on the ground glass of the camera, but at the moment when they almost covered the entire plate I pressed the shutter release, the picture was made, and the herd had gone before another plate could be put into position.

VOODOO DOCTOR AT WORK

Chanting of Magic Words Supposed to Reveal the Cause of Illness.

When [illegible] the girl was brought out of the hut and laid on the ground in front of him. Then he asked for a white chicken. After considerable search one was found and brought to him. They are not common here. He killed it and caught the blood in a gourd. All the members of the family were seated on the ground in a circle. The gourd cup was passed from one to another, and each one drank some of the blood. It is very important that no member of the family be missing. If any one becomes a Christian that breaks the circle and greatly interferes with the "fetish."

Next, the doctor rummaged in his medicine basket and selected such things as might have some effect on the "spirits" which were plaguing the girl. Bits of filthy cloth, scraps of the skins of animals, shells, pieces of bone and horn, pebbles and sticks were spread out on the ground. Finally, some goat horns were found in the collection. These were laid in a line ready for use. The girl had complained of pains in her arms. The cause of these must be found and removed, then she would get well. So the "divining" began. Magic words were chanted and mumbled over and over again by the doctor, while he swayed back and forth and made mystic motions with his head and hands. All the time he was intently watched by the circle of relatives on the ground and the lookers-on from the village, who stood around them. At last it was revealed to the diviner that the cause of the pains was "caterpillars crawling under the skin of the arms" of the girl. With a knife he then made cuts in her arms, and over each one placed one of the goat horns and drew blood into it. By this "cupping" process considerable blood was drawn, and the girl was made much weaker. She was now taken back into the hut, the doctor packed up his medicine basket with great deliberation and impressiveness, took his pay and departed.

But the girl did not improve.—The Christian Herald.

The Admiral and the Kitten.

When Admiral Kwang Ching of the Chinese navy visited the Brooklyn yard recently it was said that none of the big guns nor the bigger battleships attracted his attention so much as a tiny blue-eyed Persian kitten. Cats are prized highly in China and so delighted was the admiral with this little white-haired midget that he later expressed the desire to obtain one as near like it as possible. Efforts in finding one were unavailing until the cruiser Hai Chi was about to depart, when a fluffy Persian kitten was presented to the admiral. He was much pleased and will carry the kitten back to his daughter at home as the best present a father can take to his little girl from across the sea.—Our Dumb Animals.

"Tantalize the Flowers."

Coming home the other day in a rush of excitement, Dora rushed to her mother and said:

"Oh, mamma, guess what we are going to do?"

"I don't know, dear, but I hope it is nothing dreadful."

"We're going to study botany, and next Saturday we are going out to the woods to tantalize the flowers."

A Mean Conclusion.

"At least, Miss Kitty, whom you talk so much about, is consistent."

"Then if she is, when she wears the willow for the rich young man she's after, she ought to wear a pussy willow, for she's such a cat."

KARB DEFIES THE CITY COUNCIL

STILL INSISTS UPON PROBE

Letter Reiterated the Claim That the Probe Committee Was Not Investigating the Civil Service Commission, But Enforcement.

Columbus.—Mayor Karb sent a letter to council in which he denied the right of the council to require him to file charges, "if any be due," against the civil service commission with council. The sections on which council has based its resolution relative to charges against the commission, a week ago, provides that charges shall be filed with the proper authority and the mayor contends that council is not the proper authority.

The letter covered several typewritten pages and discussed the several sections of the code bearing on the subject which he interprets to mean, that the mayor has the right to investigate the enforcement of civil service in the city departments and file charges, if any result, with the proper authority, in this case, with the board that appoints the civil service commissioners. "If this board should fail to do its duty, then the mayor should file charges against it with council."

Intent of Probe.

The letter reiterated the claim that the probe committee was not investigating the civil service commission, but the enforcement of civil service in the departments.

"As I understand the matter I have no power to remove members of the civil service commission. Neither is that power given to council. Removal of the members of this commission is vested in the appointing board, composed of the presidents of the city council, of the board of education and of the sinking fund commission, as provided in Section 4478.

"Council is without power of authority to investigate the civil service commission and its administration of affairs. Only the mayor or his appointed representatives have this power. The report of such investigation shall, under Sections 4262 and 4263, be filed with the 'proper authority,' or 'the department having power to remove such one,' which in this case is the appointing board defined in the above paragraph.

"If the appointing board then fails to act on such report in harmony with the intent and purpose of the law, the mayor might then file charges against it with 'the proper authority,' as declared in Section 4262, or 'the department' as stated in Section 4263."

The letter was received with little comment by council and was placed on file.

CHRISTIAN MEET OPENS

Canton.—Nearly 1,000 delegates arrived to attend the state convention of Christian churches in session in the First Christian church. The convention of the woman's missionary societies opened with a fellowship hour conducted by Mary A. Lyons. Several addresses were delivered by Dr. Alice Butler of Cleveland, Mrs. S. H. Bartlett, state president; Mrs. Anna R. Atwater of Indianapolis, national president, and A. C. Smithers of St. Louis, managing editor of Christian publications. The sessions for women and brotherhood sessions will be held soon. Speakers are A. C. Smithers, Mrs. S. H. Bartlett, Mary Kelly of Nanking, China; C. C. King, national secretary of negro work, Mrs. M. E. Baker; Laura S. Goodhue, state superintendent of young people's work, Miss Ora Haight, Bilaspur, Ind., Dr. Lou Escott, Chagrin Falls, and John Ray Ewers of Pittsburgh.

SEARCH FOR BODY AND MONEY.

Cleveland.—Relatives of Henry Stark, aged seventy-three years, are dragging Lake Erie for his body and a roll of bills amounting to $3,400. Stark drew $3,400 from a bank. Later his coat and hat and a note bidding goodby to the world were found on a dock. The money, however, was not left and it is supposed to be on the body.

TIRED OF LIFE; A SUICIDE.

Toledo.—John Stalb, aged sixty-eight years, committed suicide in the Maumee river after leaving a note that he was tired of life. His body was found by former co-workers at a foundry on the river bank.

TWO WOMEN TRY SUICIDE.

Columbus.—Mrs. Grace Smith, aged twenty, wife of Frank Smith, 32 Sterling street, drank carbolic acid in an effort at suicide because of domestic troubles. The woman was taken to St. Francis hospital by the police and is expected to recover. She drank the poison in the presence of several neighbors, who were the guests of herself and husband. Mrs. Sadie Marlow, aged twenty-six, colored, wife of William Marlow, also attempted suicide by hanging.

BURGLAR CAUSES A FIRE.

Youngstown.—A burglar who was interrupted while robbing the residence of Mrs. Daniel Madden departed in such a hurry that he dropped a match into a lace curtain, which set fire to a mattress. The neighbors heard screams and notified the police, who came in an auto patrol so quickly that they were able to put out the flames in the house before the fire department was called. Nothing of any value was taken from the house, not much damage was done by fire.

HOGAN IS VIRULENT.

"Don't Believe Senator Huffman Ever Will Testify Falsely Again."

Columbus.—"Truth is falsehood, day is night and heaven is hell, if Detective Smiley did not get his advice concerning Huffman from Senator Cetone," said Attorney General Hogan in summing up the evidence to the jury in the Huffman bribery trial. Mr. Hogan opened for the state after Judge Rathmell had given the jury special instructions as to the right of the defense to set up an alibi.

Spectators and court attaches were unanimous in the statement that Attorney General Hogan made the greatest argument to the jury that he has made in any of the bribery trials. He talked for an hour and 40 minutes.

The epithet of "self-confessed crook," which the defense has applied to Detective Smiley, was handed back to them by Mr. Hogan in the person of Senator Huffman.

"I send the epithet back home to them, and I don't believe Senator Huffman ever will testify falsely to a jury again," declared the attorney general.

Both Senators Huffman and Cetone were declared by Mr. Hogan to be the "worst bribe-takers and perjurers that ever disgraced the courthouse."

That the state is of the opinion that other senators may have had a hand in soliciting and accepting bribes for their action on legislative measures was shown by a statement of the attorney general, in which he declared senators who helped to build up the alibi for Senator Huffman were attempting to elicit public sympathy, not only for the accused solons, but also for themselves, whom, he said, "had their dirty fingers in the pie also."

THE CENTENNIAL PAGEANT.

Columbus.—The centennial commission has recently awarded to Van Horn & Son, Philadelphia, the contract for the big historical pageant, "The Story of the State," which is to be seen several times during the coming centennial. The contract calls for a Columbus-built pageant, by Columbus workmen and of Columbus material.

Rollin W. Van Horn, one of the best informed technical experts in the country on costuming of all periods represented the firm before the commission. He will immediately open offices somewhere in Columbus, and procure a suitable building in which the pageant may be built and housed. He commenced giving orders for material Tuesday. He will be in immediate charge of the construction of the pageant, and will make Columbus his headquarters until after the centennial.

The commission also contracted with Langrock Bros., New York, for pennants, watch fobs and stickpins, bearing the seal of the state and the Columbus seal, which will be sold, to add to the centennial fund.

COLUMBUS DELEGATES.

Vote in Capital City Show The Roosevelt Lead.

Columbus.—Primary returns from all over the Thirteenth and Fifteenth wards show the following Republican totals for delegates to national convention—John H. Arnold, (La Follette), 1382; John S. Hysell, (La Follette), 1551; Ezra W. Purrett, (Taft), 3109; Albert F. Sartain, (Taft), 4009; King G. Thompson, (Roosevelt), 6144; Karl T. Webber, (Roosevelt), 6742.

For Congress—Thomas H. Clark, 4394; Hugh Huntington, 1373; Edward L. Taylor, jr., 5080.

BREAKS LEG IN CHURCH PEW

Ashtabula.—As Miss Elizabeth Goodwin, aged seventy-three years, started to leave her seat in the Methodist church here after a funeral service, she slipped and fell back into the seat. She was taken to her home and a doctor called. It was found that she had broken her right leg.

KILLS BOY ON FIRST TRIP.

Dayton.—Victor Huthmas, aged eleven years, who was run down by an automobile near his farm home died subsequently from his injuries. L. F. Baptist, a traveling salesman, had purchased the auto at Middletown and the machine was on its maiden trip when it ran down and killed the boy.

WHARTON FIRE THREATENED

Upper Sandusky.—Fire at Wharton destroyed the business blocks of E. E. Ebar and Albert Kime and the residence of Mrs. Rebecca Rummell. For a while the entire town was threatened and the Carey fire department was hurried on a special train to the scene.

FINDS BABY SMOTHERED

Zanesville.—When Mrs. Arthur Dalton of Chesterhill went to the cot of her six-months-old daughter she found the baby had been smothered in the heavy covers. The mother is prostrated.

KILLED BY FALL OF SLATE

Zanesville.—E. F. Kalter, aged fifty, a coal miner, was killed in the Bellie Valley company's mine by a fall of slate.

WILL BUILD NEW COURTHOUSE.

Kenton.—By a big majority it was decided at a special election to issue $275,000 for the purpose of erecting a new courthouse in Hardin county. The present building several days ago was condemned by the state fire marshal.

Coshocton.—Because they did not think the mules in the colliery were properly treated, 75 men quit work at the Morgan Run colliery near this place.

HOW MATHEWSON FANNED MIKE MITCHELL

Captain Mitchell, Crack Outfielder of Cincinnati.

"Dode" Paskert tells an interesting yarn on Matty and his headwork. The Reds were playing the Giants and Mike Mitchell was clouting Matty's shoots to all corners of the lot, while Dick Hoblitzel had fanned three successive times.

The Reds had a man on second and a man on third, with two out in the ninth inning, and the Giants had a one-run lead. A single would have won the game and Hobby was the hitter. The fans were giving up hope when Matty deliberately passed Hob by to take a chance on Mitchell, who had made two triples and a double in his three trips to the plate.

The fans shouted and laughed. They thought it was all off with Matty. Mitchell had been clouting Matty's fast ball and Mike expected to see the fadeaway or Matty's curve come up to the plate. Matty cut loose a fast one straight over the center of the plate. Mitchell was dumfounded and did not even swing.

Then he stepped up closer to the plate because he was positive that the next would be a curve ball. Zip. Another fast one shot straight across the plate. Once again Mike, in his surprise, allowed it to pass. Then he was dead sure he had Matty and that "Big Six" would waste a curve ball. Once again the ball went over the center of the plate. Mitchell was dumfounded and did not even swing.

Matty had deliberately given him three fast balls without a shoot on them and all of them were right across the center of the plate and where Mitchell would ordinarily have killed them.

CONNIE MACK IS SARCASTIC

Supposedly of Easy-Going Disposition, Manager of Athletics Is Stern Disciplinarian.

Connie Mack at times is the most sarcastic manager in baseball. On the face he has an easy-going disposition, yet he is one of the sternest disciplinarians in the game, although he is never apparently stern.

During the early days of the American league Mack had as first baseman the veteran Charley Carr, manager of the Kansas City team of the American association.

This was in 1901, and Mack was having a struggle to keep above water. He had a raw-boned youth named Plank on the mound one day. The Athletics played wretchedly, Plank's pitching being as bad as the Mack men's fielding.

Carr was a particularly bad performer. After the giant first baseman dropped his third thrown ball, Mack became wild, but in a quiet way. He waited for Carr as he was walking to the bench. Taking a dime from his pocket, he handed it to Carr.

"Why, what's that for?" said Carr in surprise.

"It's carfare home," replied Mack coldly, "and take Plank with you."

Mack meant what he said and didn't permit either Carr or Plank to play any more that day.

Foxy Joe McGinnity.

Manager Joe McGinnity of Newark was offered back Joe Agler by the Cubs, but declined to take him since he is sure Harry Swacina will fill all requirements. Agler and Smith went to the Cubs in a deal by which McGinnity was to get players or cash. Bob Fisher was sent to Newark and a list of others, including Agler, submitted to McGinnity. None of them looked good to him and he demanded cash instead, to the amount of $3,000. President Murphy sent him a check for the amount and Agler went to Jersey City. The deal McGinnity made was a good one, for Fisher bids fair to be worth as much as both Smith and Agler, and Joe has the $3,000 bonus besides.

Lafitte Released to Providence.

Edward Lafitte, a member of the Detroit American league pitching staff, has been released to the Providence club of the International league. Lafitte went to Detroit after making a great record in the old Eastern league in 1910.

DIAMOND GOSSIP

Bobby Vaughn reported to Joe McGinnity's Newarks at the eleventh hour.

Pittsburg has sent infielder Ray Jansen to Wheeling of the Central league.

Mr. Jackson of Boston is not living up to the family name as well as he did last year.

Dave Shean, Cub infielder farmed to Louisville, has been suspended for failure to report to the Colonels.

Charles Severoid, first baseman on the Rockford team for three seasons, will be turned over to the Superior club.

The Pirates have a valuable man in young McKechnie. He can play any of the infield positions and play them well.

With Luderus, Knabe, Schultz, Paskert, etc., in the lineup, the Phillies look more like a German band than a ball team.

Utica has released Bert Noblett, for several years before going to New York the crack second baseman of the Central league.

Daniel J. Hays, aged fifty-four, and known in his playing days as "Manzy" Hayes, died recently at his home in Brockton, Mass.

The veteran Joe Keenan, last year manager of the London team, has signed with the Hamilton team of the Canadian league.

Johnny Shovelin, who went fast in the Ohio-Pennsylvania league last season, has signed with Newark in the Ohio State league.

Hans Lobert has joined the list of playing scribes. The Phillies' third sacker is writing stories of how he broke into the major leagues.

Two Mack cast-offs—Hogan of St. Louis and Rath of Chicago—are playing good ball. Rath of the Sox is hitting the ball hard and fielding in excellent style.

Dan Moeller of Washington is one player who can prove that he can come back. On his second trial in fast company he is playing good ball for Washington.

Manager Davis of Cleveland is evidently going to take a leaf out of his former manager's book. He has already signed Captain Nash of the Brown University team.

Cleveland has sent Dick Talbot, product of the Ohio city's sand lots, to Toledo. He was a catcher and made over into an outfielder and will go to the outer garden for Hartzel.

There is a pitcher on the St. Louis Browns who will delight in beating Washington. He is Elmer Brown, who had a trial under Griffith at Cincinnati and was declared no good.

It was a big blow to Wolverton when Harry Wolter was injured. Wolter was playing good ball all around. His hitting and base running was the feature of the team's work up to the time he was put out of the game.

Oscar Vitt, the youngster pick-up by Jennings last fall for the infield, is versatile. He has never played anywhere but in the infield, but Jennings sent him to the outfield on account of his great hitting, and he is proving a sensation.

WOMEN SHOULD BE PROTECTED

Against So Many Surgical Operations. How Mrs. Bethune and Mrs. Moore Escaped.

Sikeston, Mo.—"For seven years I suffered everything. I was in bed for four or five days at a time every month, and so weak I could hardly walk. I cramped and had backache and headache, and was so nervous and weak that I dreaded to see anyone or have anyone move in the room. The doctors gave me medicine to ease me at those times, and said that I ought to have an operation. I would not listen to that, and when a friend of my husband told him about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and what it had done for his wife, I was willing to take it. Now I look the picture of health and feel like it, too. I can do my own housework, hoe my garden, and milk a cow. I can entertain company and enjoy them. I can visit when I choose, and walk as far as any ordinary woman, any day in the month. I wish I could talk to every suffering woman and girl." Mrs. DEMA BETHUNE, Sikeston, Mo.

Murrayville, Ill.—"I have taken Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound for a very bad case of female trouble and it made me a well woman. My health was all broken down, the doctors said I must have an operation, and I was ready to go to the hospital, but dreaded it so that I began taking your Compound. I got along so well that I gave up the doctors and was saved from the operation." — Mrs. CHARLES MOORE, R. R. No. 3, Murrayville, Ill.

Can La Follette come to the support of Roosevelt in the event of the latter's success at Chicago? Many doubt it. At San Francisco, in rapping the third termer, the Wisconsin senator said:

Roosevelt pretends to hate the trusts and is a great coiner of words and phrases in which to anathematize them, but words and phrases do not lower the cost of living nor lift from the backs of the people the burdens they carry. Should he again be elected president for eight years—if he is elected for four years we will have to take him for eight years—I can guarantee you the finest assortment of new words to describe these trusts that anybody ever heard, but I can guarantee you nothing else.

Can Senator La Follette and the 60,000 California Republicans who voted for him in the primaries bring themselves to contribute to this result? Will they not feel bound as a matter of plain duty to exert all their strength and all their influence to avert so serious a disaster as the words portend? Is it possible to believe that they would not feel it a sacred obligation to administer that "good drubbing" which Senator Cullom of Illinois says is due to his party?

---

The Roosevelt policies will receive no setback in the defeat of Mr Roosevelt himself. He is not in the least necessary to their future. Those policies are an essential feature of the great progressive movement, and in that movement the Democratic party under the leadership of Bryan, Wilson, Clark, Foss, Kern, Marshall and their kind goes forward conquering and to conquer. Real progressives in the Republican party who have cast in their lot with Mr. Roosevelt in the effort to overthrow the forces of reaction represented by Taft, Penrose, Lodge, Smoot, Lorimer and the like will have no occasion to feel orphaned in the event that a reactionary triumph is scored at Chicago. The progressive movement led by a Wilson or a Foss or a Clark will be waiting to receive them and carry them forward to the goal at which they are aiming.

BRYAN'S CANDIDACY

We know that Mr. Bryan is not a candidate for the Democratic nomination; that the party would have to force him to enter a fight for the Presidency again; but if Theodore Roosevelt is nominated at Chicago the Democratic party has but one logical course to pursue, if the party, that is the rank and file, is to be held together; and that is, to make William J. Bryan the standard bearer. Bryan is the only Democrat today that has a grip on the hearts and consciences of the great mass of the people to an extent sufficient to overcome the hypnotic influence and spell which Theodore Roosevelt seems to have cast over the nation.—New Haven (Conn.) ### Why a Tailor's Thimble.

If you have ever noticed a tailor's thimble you must have observed that it is not like the one your mother or your sisters use, because it has no top. As there is a reason for everything, there is a reason for this.

The stuff your mother sews on is usually very light and the needle is easily pushed through by pressing the top of the thimble against the needle. But tailors often have to sew very coarse and heavy material and they cannot get enough pressure on the top of the thimble, so they use the side and therefore they have no use for a top.

Not Like Canute.

"He always had a pun ready," she said, smiling pensively. "I remember meeting him once in Broad street station. I was on the way to Florida at the time, and I said:

"'Will it be very wrong, bishop, for me to bathe on Sunday in the Atlantic off Palm Beach?'

"'The Atlantic off Palm Beach?' said he. 'That, I fear, is a see over which I have no jurisdiction.'"

The Average.

"Which of these clocks is right?" "I don't know. We've five clocks. When we want to know the time we add 'em together and divide by five, and even then we're not certain."—Punch.

RANDOM THOUGHTS

By Tom, Dick and Harry.

One hundred years ago or more, when some leader of organized society perpetrated a wrong, the perpetrator shifted the responsibility by saying "It is the will of the Lord." Now notice the difference: Today when an officer of government wishes to prevent an act of simple justice, or wishes to do an injustice, it is always the "Constitution" that helps him out. It seems to be a very easy matter to defeat justice with the constitution. It is very fortunate for the people of this country that the men who talk about "Constitutional Liberty" don't have the making of constitutions. If they can make it out now to mean an instrument of torture, what would it be if they had the making of it?

So called big men often say very foolish things, there is no excuse for this. Men who do, or have, held office, often delegate to themselves superior ability and knowledge. It seems to be a very easy matter for a man elected to serve the people in some official position to forget at once that he was one of the people only a short time before, and so he goes about preaching against the people having much to say about their government. This kind of a man will admit that the people are qualified to select someone to govern, but he sees great danger of the people losing their "constitutional rights" if they attempt to govern directly. In other words his argument is, that the people know enough to pick good and wise men from fools and knaves at first sight, but can not be trusted to act upon second thought, that is to correct an error that may have been made. And so when a man sets up an hypothesis that will not stand analysis, he is very apt to say some very foolish things.

Now we want to give an example of this line of argument: Ex-Senator Thurston of Nebraska comes to Painesville and delivers a speech. He aims to show how much better one man's judgment is than the judgment of many men, and here is one of the things he said:

> "Fellow citizens, the recall of judicial decisions is old, almost as old as history. The first instance was when a Roman king declared the Christ innocent of any wrong doing. Then the people recalled his decision by taking the Saviour out and crucifying Him."

It is possible that Thurston has been attending to corporation's legal business before appointed U. S. judges too exclusively to read his Bible closely. We quote St John 19th Chapter and verses 2, 6 and 19: "And the soldiers platted a crown of thorns, and put it on his head, and they put on him a purple robe." "When the chief priests therefore and officers saw him, they cried out, saying, crucify him, crucify him. Pilate saith unto them, take ye him and crucify him, for I find no fault in him." "And Pilate wrote a title, and put it on the cross. And the writing was, Jesus of Nazareth the King of the Jews."

It seems quite plain that Pilate wanted to be in a position to shift the responsibility of Christ's death upon others, and that the matters of "recalling" his decision was in the hands of the soldiers, officers and chief priests. It would indeed be very strange if there were not in those days of Kings, as in our modern times, some "good faithful public servants" (like Ballinger for instance) who could understand the wishes of Pilate.

The writer commends to those who heard ex-Senator Thurston's speech the reading of St Luke, chapter 22, verse 2: "And the chief priests and scribes sought how they might kill him; for they feared the people."

And it is much the same today: those who think that they alone are competent to rule, look with small favor upon all teachers or leaders of any reform movement, and of course they fear the people. The foolish part of the whole matter is that they say by implication: Let us govern you and you are safe, govern yourselves and you lose your liberty."

To the Christian, who knows his Bible, and who sees in the life and death of Christ the fulfillment of a Divine Law, the matter of referring to the Crucifixion in a political argument is considered very poor taste. Many there were in ex-Senator Thurston's audience who remembered what Christ said to Pilot: "Thou couldest have no power at all against me, except it were given thee from above."

S[illegible] Jewels Are Recovered.

Over £10,000 worth of precious stones which were stolen from the effigy of the Virgin at Czenstochowa, Poland, two years ago, have been discovered in the shop of a jeweler named Adler, in Lublin, Poland, whose premises were being searched for Nihilist correspondence. Clues were also found which led to the discovery of another £5,000 worth of these jewels in a house near Lemberg.

Aristocratic Potatoes.

Potatoes are pretty high, but nothing like in Auchtermuchty, where some fine ones sold for $5 apiece. But the flesh of these fine ones when cooked is almost as white as Hungarian flour. And then these potatoes are not to be eaten, but are saved for seed, single ones being picked out from hundreds of thousands.—New York Press.

TAKES RIGHTFUL PLACE

JAPANESE MERCHANT RAISED IN SOCIAL SCALE.

Heretofore Only the Soldier Has Been Looked Upon as Following a Worthy Calling—Emperor Has Changed This Idea.

Japanese business methods have been widely criticised, especially in the last few years, as lacking those standards of commercial honor which prevail among Occidental nations. A writer in the Atlantic says that the question most frequently put to him since his return from the Orient has been:

"Why is it that the Japanese are so dishonest that they cannot even trust themselves, and have to employ Chinamen at the head of all their great business concerns?"

He explains this almost universal impression by saying that the average tourist usually has business relations only with the branches of the three great banks established in the treaty ports. When he cashes his letter of credit he observes the singular fact that the money is being handled by a Chinaman instead of by a native.

"The simple truth," says the writer, "is that these three banks—all of them, by the way, foreign concerns—are the only business houses in the entire empire so conducted. When Japan was opened and these foreign corporations in China sent their branches into the new field, they sent their Chinese compradores with them.

"Yes, while all this can be said, and should be said, in the interest of simple justice, it is nevertheless undeniable that in Japan the ideals of commercial honor and the methods adopted in the conduct of business are not what they are in the west, and there is much of which the Occidental may justly complain.

"There is a historical reason for this. The fact that in the olden days in Japan the merchant was placed at the bottom of the social scale and the soldier at the top, while in China exactly the reverse was the case, fully explains why Japan has produced a splendid soldiery, and has woefully suffered in her mercantile life, while the army in China has been the sport of the nations though her merchants have attained a high place in the world of business credit.

"But even though the 'cake of custom' is the hardest to break, its power of resistance has been already materially weakened by the wise policy of the emperor; and the merchant is no longer the pariah of the realm. Prominent among those who by the emperor's favor have risen from the social dust into places of highest honor is a family whose history is significant.

"The Mitsui family of Japan have been called the Rothschilds of the east; but while the fame of the latter has gone abroad over the world the Mitsuis have remained practically unknown except to a few western merchants who have had extensive dealings with the Orient. The European family owes its great renown to the fact that for a century there has been no slightest stain upon its commercial honor.

"But its career, it should be remembered, has been passed in a world where business itself has been held in honor; while the Mitsuis, engaged in a pursuit utterly contemned by public sentiment, for three centuries, in spite of the demoralizing influence of the social ban, have been trusted by government and people alike, and have kept the honor of their name unstained. Now, thanks to the new spirit animating the nation, they no longer stand so conspicuously alone."

Model Sermon.

A correspondent, a churchman, somewhat moved by a paragraph regarding sleeping in church, wrote that he has no particular objection to the congregation going to sleep, when it has an excuse for doing so. "But," he writes, "I want to ask you what you think of this: I attend a church where the assistant sleeps during the sermon, and a few Sundays ago he had the 'nerve' to tell the rector it was the finest sermon he had ever heard him (the rector) preach, when he had been sleeping through it!" This is certainly very shocking. We submit, however, that if the assistant slept calmly through the sermon he could do no less than compliment it.

Wise Woman.

"Now for $2," announced the star gazer. "I will furnish you with a philter which will make your husband love you to the exclusion of all others."

"I don't think I'll invest," decided the practical housewife. "But if you have a philter which will make him bring home some of his salary on payday I'll allow you a percentage on all sums realized."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

As to Hubby.

Inquiring Friend—I should like to know your husband's attitude on the question of woman suffrage. I suppose, though, when it comes to that, he's up in the air, as the saying is.

In the Cause of Freedom.

"I told the lawyer I wanted an absolute divorce," said Mrs. Flimgilt.

"And what did he say?"

"He told me he was an old friend of my husband and as a favor to him he would take the case."

No Wonder.

Says one of the Georgia philosophers: "So long as I'm a-livin' and have groceries, and firewood, and warm clothes, and tax money, and good health, any weather the Lord sends is the right weather for me."—Exchange.

All Guided by the Will.

The will of each man or woman is like the compass of a ship—where it points, the ship goes. If the needle directs it to the rocks, there is wreck and disaster—if to the open sea, there is clear sailing.—Marie Corelli.

WILL BE DEADLY FOE

GERMAN CLAIMS HE CAN MAKE AIRSHIP INVISIBLE.

Proposed Terror Is to Be as Large as the Steamer Olympic and Able to Defy the Telescope at the Distance of a Mile.

The invisible airship has already been patented by its inventor Baron Roenne. Baron Roenne is well known in England as an airship and naval engineer, so more respect must be paid to his ideas than to those who try inventing without any technical knowledge.

Baron Roenne has submitted his idea to the officials at the Greenwich Royal Observatory, and they declare that it is based on scientific principles, and most certainly practicable. The way this remarkable airship is made invisible is as follows:

Take a white wall and paste a white sheet of paper on it. At a distance of a few feet you may be able to detect where the paper leaves off and the wall begins. At a hundred yards the wall looks all wall. You would never suspect the paper of being there if you did not know already. That is Baron Roenne's idea.

The outside covering of his airship is made of metal, the composition of which is a secret. It is almost as strong as steel, yet it only weighs one-fourth as much. No hydrogen can leak from a vessel made of it, so the danger of an airship exploding from that cause disappears.

It is due to the discovery of chromium, in fact, that the invisible airship is possible. The most important thing about the metal, as far as Baron Roenne is concerned, is that it possesses a very highly polished surface.

This is covered over with a thin coating of transparent varnish. The whole surface of the dirigible, in fact, acts as a mirror, and reflects the same color as its surroundings. If the sky is dull, so is the airship. If the sky is blue, so is the airship.

The sides of the keel of this new airship are also reflecting mirrors, and by an ingenious arrangement of them the darker shade reflected from the earth is made lighter. The keel will taper to a point, and thus there will be no shadow on the bottom of the airship. In fact, it will be like the chameleon, and always like the color of its surroundings. In other words, it will be invisible.

Baron Roenne's new terror of the skies will be as large as the Olympic. The Olympic, if it could float in the skies, would easily be detected at a height of four or five miles, yet Roenne's dirigible will be absolutely invisible, even to telescopes, at a distance of less than a mile!

It is designed to carry 400 passengers, or their equivalent in cargo, and it will be fitted with 15 motors, developing nearly 2,000 horse power. Patents have already been taken out in England.

What this "new sky scraper" will mean in time of war can hardly be realized. It could carry enough ammunition to utterly wreck any city, or blow the world's biggest navy to pieces.—Pearson's Weekly.

Easily Answered.

Wife—"The doctor has advised me to go south for a month's rest. The question now is, where to go." Husband—"Go to another doctor."—Fliegende Blaetter.

Nos. 73, 74, 75, 76 for $500 00 each, payable April 1, 1925

All of said bonds, together with interest coupons, are issued for the purpose of improving highways leading into said Township and are issued under authority of the General Laws of the State of Ohio, particularly Sections 3295, 3939, 3940, 3941 and 3942 of the General Code of Ohio, and in accordance with a resolution duly adopted by the Trustees of said Township at their regular meeting on the 27th day of May, 1912, entitled "To issue bonds for the purpose of improving highways leading into the Township of Willoughby, Lake County, Ohio."

All of said bonds to draw interest from the date of sale at the rate of 4 1-2 per cent per annum, payable semi-annually on the 1st days of April and of October of each year on and after the 1st day of October, 1912. Said bonds and interest thereon shall be payable at the Willoughby Branch of The Cleveland Trust Company, at Willoughby, Ohio. Said bonds will be sold to the highest bidder for not less than par and accrued interest. All of said bonds shall be delivered to the highest and best bidder at the office of said Trustees in the Village of Willoughby, Ohio. All of the above described bonds shall be dated the day of sale, and, together with interest coupons, shall be issued and signed according to law. Said interest coupons shall have the signature of the Clerk lithographed thereon.

All bids must state the number of bonds bid for, and the gross amount of the bid and accrued interest to date of delivery. All bids to be accompanied by a certified check on some solvent bank located in Lake County other than the one making the bid, payable to the Treasurer of said Township for 10 per cent of the amount of the bonds bid for, upon the condition that if the bid is accepted the bidder will receive and pay for such bonds within ten days from and after the time of the award, said check to be retained by said Township if such condition is not fulfilled.

Said bids will be opened and publicly read and sale of said bonds will be made at the regular meeting of the Trustees of said Township held on the 6th day of July, 1912, at 2 30 o'clock P. M., at the usual place of meeting at the Town Hall in the Village of Willoughby, Ohio.

By C. C. JENKINS, Clerk.

IN GETTING AN ELECTRIC SUCTION CLEANER

DON'T BE DECEIVED and buy one with a cheap motor, a small vertical shaft which will soon wear and drop, especially when in connection with a small fan which must necessarily be run at high speed in order to get sufficient power. Such machines make a neat appearance and may do good work while new, but are SHORT LIVED.

The MAGIC is the most simple in construction, having no pumps, valves, connecting rods, gears, belts, etc., to give out.

After three years' experience with various makes, we sell the BEST the market affords.

MENTOR

The weather this past week has been perfectly fine, most of the time; and even when the mercury went up to ninety in the shade, not a person was heard to complain! The nearest to it—was when a neighbor said she wished it had come a month or two sooner!

Everybody is now rushed to death getting things planted, and watering the things that got put into the ground last month, and even then we notice that many small shrubs and trees are dying of thirst. Not every person seems to understand the planting of trees! They seem to think that if they get out into the ground right side up that is enough; but really, there should always be a good big pail of water put around the roots of every tree after being put into place and before the soil has all been drawn around the roots. In weather at all dry, another pail of water should be put around, at least once a day, for some time, often for weeks together! So really, it is a job to get trees set out right and persuaded to live and grow up into useful and beautiful things, as their Maker intended them to!

Word has just come to some of the Mentor friends of Oscar Humphrey, of Willoughby, of his sickness, death and burial; and they are much surprised and distressed at the news. If there ever was a man who was ready to do a kindness to any one in time of need, that man was Mr. Humphrey! And what is more, he never was known to do a contemptible, under-handed, mean, trick in his life. Would that there were more just like him!

Mrs. Henry Merkle, nee Miss Gertrude Mynderse, and small son of Cleveland, were in our village last week, as guests of the C. Merkle family.

Mrs. George Hicks, nee Miss Jenny King, of Adrian, Mich., is spending a few days at present with her sisters here.

Mr and Mrs Samuel Lytle have just returned from their trip to California, but have not been interviewed yet, as to their impressions of that great and wonderful state.

Mrs. Prof Knight of Akron, was a guest of her friend, Mrs. Ed Sawyer, a portion of last week. Mrs Knight's husband is one of the professors of Buchtel College.

Mrs Sarah Taft of Painesville was out here a few days recently with Mrs John Tyler at the Center.

For the first time since the shooting of Dan McCarty, the hospital doctors give some hope of his surviving the dreadful ordeal, though even yet, no hope is held out that he will ever have any health again. Some of the church people are up every week to see him, for we understand that he is a member of the Methodist church here, and also of the choir, being a beautiful singer.

Mr. and Mrs James Moran have moved into the "Card" place on Jackson street and are expecting to make a home there, having exchanged the E. H. Cleveland property here for that place, much to the regret of their friends.

The closing exercises of the township schools was held in the Mentor Village Hall on Friday last, when the following scholars graduated with good standings: Walter Keary, Emma Garstow, Florence McKain, Joseph Ginelly, Elijah Roberts, Joseph Lennon. It seems a little strange that there were twice as many boys as girls, usually it is just the other way.

The ticket office of the C. P. & E. has been moved from the Robert Case store, over to the new post office where the new Electric Package depot will also be kept.

Mrs. Church has completed her visit here with the family of her son and has returned to her Lorain home for the summer.

Word has come from Miss Bertha Morley, that she has changed her plans in regard to coming home this summer, and has agreed to remain in the school in Constantinople where she has been teaching for a year, and after that will probably teach somewhere else, as she very much likes Turkey, is in excellent health, and enjoying herself, spending her vacations of course, with her sister Mrs. Dr. Marsden, nee Miss Lucy Morley.

The Memorial Day services were held in the M. E. church on yesterday, they being union as has been the custom for several years. The sermon, we understand, was preached by Mr Clarke, pastor of the Disciple church here.

Mrs. Charles Hammond and her sister, Miss Delilah Hammond were recent guests of their cousins in Painesville for a day or so.

So far, word has come that our Mr Frank Smith is doing very well at the hospital in Cleveland, has gotten through with one operation, but has to face another before long.

Mrs D. E. Spindle is again on the sick list, and her oldest daughter, Miss Bottie, has been called home from the Sidney Wilson store in Willoughby, in order to help care for her.

Mrs. Jean Munson Hanson and small daughter, Elizabeth, has been visiting her husband's relatives down in Hudson this past week.

The new automobile owned by Mr J. C. Jackson, is often seen on our village streets just loaded down with friends who are not fortunate enough to own a machine, and are therefore invited to take a ride. So far as known, this is the only auto which does not have most of its seats vacant, for the other machine owners seem to take for granted that no one cares for a ride, except themselves, and so, they run around the village, and never ask anyone to take a ride! Queer!

Mr. and Mrs. Claude Case of Chardon were recent guests of their cousins, Mr. and Mrs Robert Case at the Center.

Miss Inez Baker is caring for a lady in Perry just now, who is very ill indeed, having been poisoned by eating canned pears (so we hear).

Dr. J. W. Lowe has not been as well since returning from the sunny South—has had much rheumatism come back unwelcomed upon him—thinks the Ohio weather to blame, and is looking forward to a much earlier return to Eustis another fall.

The members of the Roman Catholic Society here have been making some fine sheds near their church building, and otherwise improving the property.

Mr and Mrs. Horace Andrews have returned from wintering in New York City, and with their family and retinue of servants are again at home in their country house here "Primrose Hill" for another happy summer.

Mr and Mrs Frank Case are still making improvements in and around their pleasant country home, which they have named "Locust Grange" and have a very desirable property there. For the benefit of old friends now living away from home, permit us to say that this farm is the old Seymour Rexford farm, and the beautiful views of mountain, hill and plain, are still there.

Speaking of Little Mountain, we have heard considerable indignation expressed by people who used to live in Lake county who have moved away and only got back here for a visit now and then—because the old "Mountain" was not bought up by the township and kept as a summer resort and picnic park. It certainly is very aggravating not to be able to ever drive up there any more! Is it not possible that it might be bought back—even now?

Miss Luella Kerr is still about the same, her aunt Mrs Smith has just returned home to Massillon. No one of the neighbors or friends can go in to see her, and the suffering still continues, though the patience and the hope of the dear girl, is something marvellous.

Mr Robert Case is dealing this summer in floor coverings made especially for porches, of which he has quite an assortment and all at reasonable prices.

Mr. Frank Higgins is very much under the weather we understand, having to again give up his position in the city, and fearing tuberculosis. His brother, Dr. Higgins, strongly advises a change of climate, and that at once.

Mr. and Mrs. Arthur Fenner were guests of Waite Hill friends on Sunday.

The Young People's Branch of the Temperance Union, has grown to about thirty members, and shows considerable enthusiasm. Just recently, they have taken upon themselves to see to it that the pulpits of the Disciple and Methodist churches are supplied with flowers every Sunday morning.

The graduation exercises of the Eighth Grade were conducted in the Village Hall on Tuesday evening and were very much enjoyed by every one present, no criticism being heard except the lateness of the hour before the program began. Miss Goff had dramatized "The Old Fashioned Girl" written some years ago by Louisa Alcott, and all the parts were well taken. Those that were exceptionally good, were "Polly" who was none other than Miss Helen Hart, "Tom" who responds to the every-day name of Vernon Clapp, and "Maud" who was Martha Grecht. Years ago we used to have a fine "Thespian Society" and there is talent enough here now, among the school children, to warrant cultivating it, and thereby keeping them out of some real mischief. The music under the direction of Miss Cadle was fine, as it always is. The Primary children sang better than usual, and their "Rainbow" song was just lovely. Although the Hall was crowded, most everybody expressed the determination to come again on Wednesday evening, when the four will graduate from our High School and the music will be still better.

Mr. Frank E. Higgins died at four o'clock yesterday, and the funeral services will be held at 2 o'clock at his residence on Wednesday, and the body laid away in the Conneaut cemetery by his mother and other relatives.

What's in a Name?

Mayor Brand Whitlock, of Toledo, was talking about a certain trust magnate. "He's got a bad name," said the mayor-novelist. "Hence he can't get a square deal. He's got as bad a name for a lawsuit as Dodgin had for a manager. Dodgin was the new manager of a biscuit concern. There was a workman at the concern who liked to sneak off to a shed at about three o'clock in the afternoon and smoke a pipe and look over the afternoon paper for half an hour or so. Well, one day, as the workman sat reading and smoking in the shed, Dodgin appeared. 'Who are you?' Dodgin asked sternly, frowning at the idle workman. The workman frowned back. 'Huh, who are you?' said he. 'I'm Dodgin, the new manager,' was the reply. At this the workman smiled. 'So am I,' he said, heartily. 'Come in and have a smoke.'"

His Notion of Home.

A New York surveyor had an assignment that took him into the depth of the wilderness ten miles from camp. The camp was a hundred miles from the nearest railroad station. To his surprise, he heard the sound of an ax. He followed the sound and found a busy woodsman at work. He had cleared the timber away for a few rods about, and on that space had put up a snug log cabin. All the rest, on every side, was the profound, almost untrodden wilderness. The man stopped his work and greeted the surveyor pleasantly. "And where did you come from?" he asked. "From New York," answered the surveyor. "Live there?" said he. "Yes." The man gazed at him as if amazed, and by and by said: "Well, well! Gosh! I don't see how you can bear to live so far away!"

The PLAYGROUND of HOLLAND

AN ANCIENT HOLLANDER

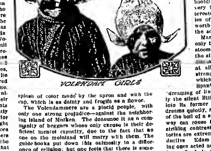
A YOUNG HOLLANDER

IN some ways "the playground of Holland" is quite a good name for the islands of the Zuider Zee. The stiff, shining trees, the black and white cows, the natty and vividly-painted wooden houses, might all have trooped out of some very new and splendid nursery Noah's Ark. The people are dressed in a more gay and unpractical fashion than elsewhere, and their vocation in life, like a child's, is to make a pretty and pleasing impression on their observers. The cheese-making and fishing at which they make believe to toil are, or anyhow appear to be, as unimportant to the general weal as the productions of a child's cooking stove. What they have to do is to look, dress and behave so that they appeal to artists wanting models and Americans wanting excursions. Two-thirds of the tourists and half the guide-books actually seem to imagine that this mode of life has left them quite guileless and childlike. Of course, they are really becoming, thanks to the tourist, the most canny and long-sighted people in Holland, just as the remote and pagan Breton is getting hideously like the rest of the world as regards the itching palm. No, the folk of the Zuider Zee are emphatically not children, but they are not the less interesting because they must be taken as vastly engaging, ingenious and conscious frauds.

MILL AND STREAM

FISHING VESSELS

OBJECTS TO AN UITLANDER'S CAMERA



VOLENDAM GIRLS

An exception must be made in the case of Volendam, a village which, although artist-ridden all the year round, lives a quite simple and unpretentious life. Its fishing fleet proves its prowess in the North Sea, and its women are blushing and bashful. The wooden houses are really homes, and whatever treasures and heirlooms may lie within are not shown to the stranger or bartered for his gold. The costume strikes one as genuine. At any rate, the spirited little boys who are always swarming about the jetty prove by their romps and gymnastics that their faded magenta garments and round black caps are eminently practicable to play in. At first, one has fears for the costume. The coats are so breathlessly tight—an economy which, perhaps, counterbalances the absurd superfluity of material in the trousers—and the caps would be at the bottom of the Zuider Zee twenty times a day were it not that they have the tenacity of limpets. The men remain faithful to this artistic costume both when stalwart, serious fishermen—of which stage the visitor sees little of them—and when their working life is done and all that remains is to spend the day leaning up against the jetty wall, smoking and musing. Old age is very kind to the Dutch fisherman. His fine wrinkles, twinkling eyes, scant hair—his whole smoke-dried and sun-dried old face—have a shrewd, distinguished quizzical look, which is very attractive and is not seen elsewhere in Holland.

The women, too, improve with age. In youth they are stout and buxom lasses, with sunburnt cheeks, bright but shallow eyes, and hair tucked away, all too neatly, under their light and graceful winged caps. In age they grow twinkling and thoughtful, and some of them, save the costume, are Cinderella's godmother to the life. Their gowns have not the gaiety of the men's habits, being generally a useful black, blue or purple, broadly checked or striped, and made in a tight and awkward fashion. Beauty comes with the splash of color made by the apron and with the cap, which is as dainty and fragile as a flower.

The Volendammers are a placid people, with only one strong prejudice—against the neighboring island of Marken. They denounce it as a community of beggars whose only excuse is their deficient mental capacity, due to the fact that no one on the mainland will marry with them. The guide-books put down this animosity to a difference of religion, but one feels that there is something in the Volendammer's contention when one finds that the Markener standpoint can only be ascertained by the application of hard cash. On that mainland-despised but tourist-beloved isle even conversation is chargeable. The children shriek plaintive and inopportune good-byes in exchange for a shower of copper, and the most casual photographer has willy-nilly to pay a fee to every unmannerly urchin who chooses to dispose herself in front of his camera.

Really, the costume of the Markeners is not to be taken seriously. To begin with, the women's dress is largely made up of printed stuffs, a kind of shoddy substitute for embroidery which has surely not been so very long in the world. The dress itself is dark enough, but over it is worn an overall of the most gaudy and flaunting hues, the cap is chiefly print, and the fair hair is worn in long ringlets with a straight, bushy fringe across the forehead. Mr. E. V. Lucas, in his "Wanderer in Holland," calls these worthy dames "fine, upstanding creatures." One would like them better if they were less confiding and attentive. As it is, one is positively dragged into their dwellings, introduced to all the household goods, especially—if one is an American or an amateur antiquarian—to some decrepit old clock or cradle, from which the owner vows never to part. But she yields so readily to persuasion that perhaps one does not wrong her in thinking that she solaces herself for the loss with a little expedition to Amsterdam in search of a substitute.

The Marken fishing fleet makes a brave show, but one feels that a really prosperous concern would not spend so much time in harbor. However, on weekdays the men certainly disappear somewhere, perhaps only to make their rare appearance the more impressive. As is the case all over Holland, man has the monopoly of all the quaintest devices in dress. The Markener is said to do his fishing in his extravagant breeches and ceremonious hat. If this is a fact, the Havenstoombootdienst of Amsterdam, which has a very tender and not altogether disinterested affection in these "buried cities of the Zuider Zee," would find it worth while to run an excursion to the scene of his labors.

Marken and Volendam are not the only buried cities in which the Havenstoombootdienst is eager to introduce the stranger. In fact, as far as one can discover, these places are not cities at all. But Monnikendam, on the strength of having fitted out a ship which did good service against the Spaniards at Hoorn, is described as "dreaming of its greatness in the past." Certainly the silent little town shows no desire to emulate its former achievements. If it dreams it dreams quietly, and not even the boisterous clang of the bell of a seemingly quite unnecessary tramway can rouse it from its reveries. It forms a striking contrast with Edam, whose cheese factories are extremely hustling but strangely unproductive. Edam has a huge church, which, having once acted as a shelter for men and cattle during a flood, is now afflicted with the cowdamp. The town also prides itself on its cleanliness, a fact that makes it horribly unsympathetic.

The Zuider Zee, which lives in the art of Anton Mauve, is off the beaten track of the tourist. His own town of Laren is visited only by artists, although it is a pretty place and the environs are, for Holland, thickly wooded. Zaandam, the place where Peter the Great worked at ship building, pleases by its bright green houses and staid old windmills. In these last places the visitor feels inclined to stay, but for Marken and its fellows the few hours provided by the Havenstoombootdienst are quite sufficient.

CURED.

"Does your wife often grieve because she threw over a wealthy man in order to marry you?"

"She started to once, but I cured her of it the first rattle out of the box."

"I wish you would tell me how."

"I started right in to grieving with her. And I grieved harder and longer than she did."

WHAT SHOULD WOMAN SPEND?

Question Resolves Itself Into One of Income and Proper Regard for Appearances.

The other day a woman writer was condemning feminine vanities, especially the one of dress. To some extent she is right in her judgment on feminine vanities, especially when she condemns the woman who spends all her days and too much of her money on clothes. But the average woman does neither; in fact, who are the women who pay the enormous prices the dressmakers ask for their dresses?

Numbers of women want to know where to buy their dresses and when they know how much they will have to pay at the big dressmakers they buy them elsewhere. These are women who dress well. They will not spend more than they can afford on dress, and everyone will agree they are quite right.

As to the time spent on dress, it is difficult to pass an opinion on such a matter, but one thing is certain, and that is that some women do not spend enough. One woman, high up in the educational world, realized not so very long ago that dress was of importance, because she noticed that many of the cleverest students missed the best posts in after life because they paid no attention either to dress or carriage. She herself had no taste for clothes either, but she was wise enough to acknowledge it, and she persuaded a friend to undertake the care of her wardrobe.

So now, twice a year, she is thoroughly turned out with new toilettes, the result being that she has gained in influence and has not lost any of her serious character. She has even lectured to her students on the subject, and made them see how important it is for a woman to have a pleasing appearance, even though she may have all the learning of the ages.

Then there is another plea for women who spend time and money on their clothes. They keep endless industries alive by what appear to many people to be extravagance, and the only thing with which to reproach them is that they so often accept hideous fashions from the dressmakers when their sense of the fitness of things should make them refuse to look at anything which does not express beauty and usefulness combined.

Was Not Taking Chances

A Friend's Experience Causes a Young Man to Cancel His Engagement.

Two young men were walking back to the office after luncheon. "That's a pretty fur coat," remarked the more cheerful one, pointing to a girl a few steps ahead. "Yes, it is," agreed his companion, with a grave face. "It's a baby pony skin, and it cost someone just about $140."

"That's considerable money," said the first young man. "And a moleskin coat like that would cost $600 or $700," continued the expert, with a deepening expression of gloom, "and a mink about $1,200 or $1,500."

"Great guns!" cried the other. "Women's duds come high! How did you get all the dope?"

"Listen," said his unsmiling friend. "I've bought three fur coats for my wife in the last five years." There was a moment of deep silence. "Come in here," said the former optimist, leading the way into a drug store.

"May I speak with Miss Cotillion?" he asked, when he had his telephone number. "Hello, Gwendolyn. . . . Sorry, but I don't believe I can go to your dance tonight. . . . Not exactly ill, but I've just sprained my wrist, and the doctor says I can't go out evenings any more for six months. Yes, I'll have to cancel all my engagements. . . . Good-by."

"There," he said, turning to his friend as he hung up the receiver, "I'm not going to take any more foolish chances." "Right-o," agreed the grouch.

Concentration of Power.

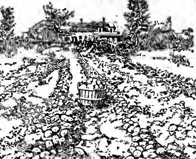
"Every woman ought to have a vote."

"Yes," replied Mr. Meekton; "but in a vast number of cases a woman will get two; her own and her husband's."

EXCELLENT METHODS GIVEN FOR IMPROVING YIELD OF POTATOES

Farmer Should Carefully Go Over Patch and Select Those Hills That Have Tubers of Good Size—Treat Seed by Themselves and Plant in Separate Patch for Best Results.



This Field of Potatoes Yielded at Rate of 375 Bushels Per Acre.

(By PROF. L. R. WALDRON, North Dakota.)

It is a common belief that if we purchase a variety of potatoes from a seedsman that we have secured just one variety. This is true in a measure. If the seedsman is reliable, he will send potatoes that are uniform in color, depth of eyes, earliness of maturing, and other qualities. But unless these particular potatoes have been pedigreed, then we have not received one thing but many.

The farmer can demonstrate this fact to his own satisfaction. At digging time let him lay off a portion of a row containing 100 hills. In order to show this, each hill must have come from only one piece of seed.

The 100 hills are dug and the tubers of each hill are kept by themselves [illegible] hill. The products of the 100 hills are now ready to be studied.

At first glance the hills may appear to run very uniformly. A little closer view will reveal the fact that about the only thing that is uniform is that they are all potatoes. The first hill has one large one, two medium-sized ones and half a dozen small ones. The next hill has one medium-sized one and several small ones. Perhaps the next hill has three or four good-sized ones. Another hill has a solitary tuber but of good size. Perhaps another hill has nothing but little runts. Thus it goes through the 100 hills. The ordinary farmer will pick up the tubers from all of the hills and put them all together. He does this complacently and with satisfaction. His fathers did it before him and all of his neighbors do it. Why should not he?

Late in winter, when he begins to read the seed catalogs, he wonders why on earth, or under it, he cannot raise such splendid crops of potatoes as he sees pictured. Now, that is the point I am getting at; our variety is not a unit.

In our 100 hills that we have dug, close study might reveal the presence of at least ten strains or varieties, instead of the one that we thought we had.

The hill that bore the little runts has the runt character as a habit. It is going to persist for years, and every time we plant seed of that strain we will know to a certainty that we will harvest little potatoes.

The hill that produces one or two large and several small ones, is a common feature of potato fields.

The hill that bore three or four good-sized tubers is the one to fasten our eyes on. That is the hill that has ability and the one that we should get next to.

We will assume that we have three tubers to every hill and that the total weight of the three tubers is one and one-half pounds. There is nothing absurd in this, for often an individual tuber will weigh more.

We will further assume that our rows are three and one-half feet apart and that our hills are two feet apart in the row. This is open planting, probably more open than is commonly practiced.

At this rate of planting there will be 6,200 hills per acre, assuming nearly a perfect stand. With one and one-half pounds per hill, we would have a field of 155 bushels per acre, a yield worth striving for by the majority of farmers.

Now it may be that the hill with the three or four good tubers will not breed true, but the chances are that it will. The offspring of the hill is almost certain to produce a certain percentage of small tubers, but we may count upon it that it will produce a lesser percentage of small tubers than the average hill.

What a farmer should do at potato-digging time is to dig a fair-sized patch, leaving each hill by itself. After the patch is dug he should carefully go over the patch and select out those hills that have few tubers of good size.

The tubers from those hills should be sacked by themselves and laid away for seed for the year following. If he is particular he may not be able to find more than ten hills to his liking.

In the springtime these should be treated by themselves and planted in a separate patch. The second year's product from the ten hills will be sufficient to plant quite a piece of ground, perhaps as much as the farmer desires.

If the farmer wants to follow a method even better and more accurate than this, he should plant each of the ten hills in a little plat by itself.

This requires that each hill will be sacked separately at planting time. If the ten plants show up of about equal value and all good, it is not necessary to keep them longer separate, but the product of the ten plats may be sacked together and saved to plant the main patch the year following.

If two or three of the ten plats are off, these should be discarded and the good plats saved.

If an occasional farmer follows the method here laid out, he will soon find that his neighbors will be after him for seed and they will be willing to pay him a bonus for them.

BETTER HOMES FOR THE FARMS

The Department of Agriculture Establishes a Branch for Information on Household Topics.

Secretary Wilson of the department of agriculture has always recognized the influence for good farming which flows from an attractive farm house, and has developed a branch of the department which, through its correspondence and its publications, has become a bureau of information on household topics. Bulletins on subjects relating to food and to home-making have been prepared which have had a circulation of more than 10,000,000 copies. One of these, The Economic Use of Meat in the Home, reached an edition of a million and a half copies. At the same time this branch of the department has given special attention to agricultural education, assisting states to plan and organize schools, to secure teachers, and to prepare courses.

Keep Best Lambs.

Do not allow any dealer to sort out the best lambs, leaving you the culls. It would be better to sell all of them at once, at a figure that will be fair for you and the dealer, too.

Sheep Remove Bushes.

Is the farm growing up to brush in the pastures? Invest in a few sheep. They can cut the bushes cheaper than you can do it, and will make the land richer wherever they go.

WATER REQUIRED BY DAIRY COW

Should Be Pure and Fresh and Easy of Access to Animal in Pasture and in Barnyard.

Inasmuch as it has been proven by actual experiments that the average cow will drink 1,600 pounds of water a month, great care should be exercised to provide her with water. That is true enough, but there are two other points that need to be also included.

1. This water should be pure. Impure water is just as hurtful to the health and vigor of a cow as it is to a human being. It produces disease just the same. It reduces the amount of milk the cow would naturally give.

2. The water should be easy of access for the cow, both in the pasture and the barnyard. With a large herd of cows, say [illegible], it is a good plan to have two or three watering tanks in the yard where the cows are watered out of doors. It is worth while also to have a man remain in the yard while they are drinking, to drive the master cows away from the tanks as soon as they have drunk their fill. In turning cows out to drink, it is a good plan to first turn out the underlings and the most timid ones, giving them plenty of time to get what water they want undisturbed. Lots of money can be lost with a herd of cows by being indifferent or careless on this water question.

Eradicate Weeds.

Troublesome weeds or grass of almost any kind may be gotten rid of by scattering rock salt plentifully on it. The stock will eat it off close every time it comes up, and tramp it out.

Cause of Cheesy Taste.

The cheesy taste of butter is due to lack of thoroughness in washing and removing the buttermilk. Butter will not keep well if any of the buttermilk remains.

CANADA'S PROSPERITY.

The New York Times of March 28, 1912, in an article dealing with Canada's progress, says:

"At the present moment eight shiploads of European immigrants are afloat for Canada, while there are signs that the outward movement which is customary with us during labor troubles will be marked this year. There is no such startling record of our loss to Canada. Our citizens quietly slip over the border in groups or trainloads, but their going is not advertised.

"There is no mystery why Canada is the 'good thing' the United States used to be. It is because Canada is following in its neighbor's footsteps that it is repeating the fortunate experience [illegible]ing, even while deliberately turning its back on the teachings of the past. A fortnight ago the Dominion budget speech reported the unprecedented surplus of $39,000,000, and on Thursday the Government passed through the Committee on Supply credits of $38,000,000 for railways and canals. With this assistance the railways themselves are both enabled and compelled to increase their facilities. Accordingly we find a single road allotting ten millions for work of its own. Naturally the Canadian newspapers contain announcements calling for fifty thousand men for construction work. This influx is apart from those Americans who go with money in their pockets obtained by cashing in their high-priced American lands.

"A St. Paul dispatch says that within a fortnight two thousand carloads of farm animals and machinery have passed toward Canada, the property of men who expect to pay for their farms with the first crop."

JUST HIS LUCK.

"What's his latest grievance?"

"He found a five-dollar bill this morning and is grumbling because a man to whom he owed $1 saw him pick it up."

BABY'S ECZEMA AND BOILS

"My son was about three weeks old when I noticed a breaking-out on his cheeks, from which a watery substance oozed. A short time after, his arms, shoulders and breast broke out also, and in a few days became a solid scab. I became alarmed, and called our family physician who at once pronounced the disease eczema. The little fellow was under treatment for about three months. By the end of that time, he seemed no better. I became discouraged. I dropped the doctor's treatment, and commenced the use of Cuticura Soap and Ointment, and in a few days noticed a marked change. The eruption on his cheeks was almost healed, and his shoulders, arms and breast were decidedly better. When he was about seven months old, all trace of the eczema was gone.

"During his teething period, his head and face were broken out in boils which I cured with Cuticura Soap and Ointment. Surely he must have been a great sufferer. During the time of teething and from the time I dropped the doctor's treatment, I used the Cuticura Soap and Cuticura Ointment, nothing else, and when two years old he was the picture of health. His complexion was soft and beautiful, and his head a mass of silky curls. I had been afraid that he would never be well, and I feel that I owe a great deal to the Cuticura Remedies." (Signed) Mrs. Mary W. Ramsey, 224 E. Jackson St., Colorado Springs, Col., Sept. 24, 1910. Although Cuticura Soap and Ointment are sold by druggists and dealers everywhere, a sample of each, with 32-page book, will be mailed free on application to "Cuticura," Dept. L, Boston.

Best Business Creator.

As a business creator, what is there better than advertising? Have you ever asked that question of yourself? The millions that advertising has made for merchants are uncountable, yet there are business men who even now don't believe in advertising, just as there are people who still think it is safer and more convenient to travel in a prairie schooner behind a pair of slow oxen than in a Pullman palace car. Yet this type of business man is seldom rated in commercial rating books.—Exchange.

The Suffragette's Answer.

"And where, my fellow citizens," appealed the political speaker, "can we find an instrument so fit, so delicate, so adjustable, and at the same time so unassuming and popular that it will unlock every department of state for the benefit of its readers?"

The Paxton Toilet Co. of Boston, Mass., will send a large trial box of Paxtine Antiseptic, a delightful cleansing and germicidal toilet preparation, to any woman, free, upon request.

Paw Knows Everything.

Willie—Paw, what is a family circle?

Paw—A wedding ring, my son.

London is the healthiest capital of Europe.

SYNOPSIS.

Dan Blair, the 22-year-old son of the fifty-million-dollar copper king of Blairtown, Mont., is a guest at the English home of Lady Galorey. Dan's father had been courteous to Lord Galorey during his visit to the United States and the courtesy is now being returned to the young man. The youth has an ideal girl in his mind. He meets Lily, Duchess of Breakwater, a beautiful widow, who is attracted by his immense fortune and takes a liking to her. When Dan was a boy, a girl sang a solo at a church, and he had never forgotten her. The Galoreys, Lily and Dan attend a London theater where one Letty Lane is the star. Dan recognizes her as the girl from his town, and going behind the scenes introduces himself and she remembers him. He learns that Prince Poniatowsky is suitor and escort to Letty. Lord Galorey and a friend named Ruggles determine to protect the westerner from Lily and other fortune hunters. Young Blair goes to see Lily; he can talk of nothing but Letty and this angers the Duchess. The westerner finds Letty ill from hard work, but she recovers and Ruggles and Dan invite her to supper. She asks Dan to build a home for disappointed theatrical people. Dan visits Lily, for the time forgetting Letty, and later announces his engagement to the duchess. Letty refuses to sing for an entertainment given by Lily. Galorey tells Dan that all Lily cares for is his money, and it is disclosed that he and the duchess have been mutually in love for years. Letty sings at an aristocratic function.

CHAPTER XVII.—Continued.

Dan felt his heart grow cold. If she had awakened him when he was a little boy, she thrilled him now; he could have wept. Lady Galorey did wipe tears away. When the last note of the accompaniment had ended, Dan's friend at his side said: "How utterly ravishing! What a beautiful lovely creature; how charming and how frail!"

He scarcely answered. He was making his way to Letty Lane and he wrung her hand, murmuring, "Oh, you're great; you're great!" And the pleasure on his face repaid her over and over again. "Come, I want you to meet the Duchess of Breakwater, and some other friends of mine."

As he let her little cold hand fall and turned about, the room as by magic had cleared. The prime minister had arrived late and was in the other room. The refreshments were also being served. There was no one to meet Letty Lane, except for several young men who came up eagerly and asked to be presented, Gordon Galorey among them.

"Where's Lily?" Dan asked him; "I want her to meet Miss Lane."

"In the conservatory with the prime minister," and Galorey looked meaningly at Dan, as much as to say, "Now don't be an utter fool."

But Letty Lane herself saved the situation. She shook hands with the utmost cordiality and sweetness with the men who had been presented to her, and asked Dan to take her to her motor. He waited for her at the door and she came down wrapped around as usual in her filmy scarf.

"Are you better?" he asked eagerly. "You look awfully stunning and I don't think I can ever thank you enough."

She assured him that she was "all right," and that she had a "lovely new role to learn and that it was coming on next month." He helped her in and she seemed to fill the motor like a basket of fresh white flowers. Again he repeated, as he held the door open:

"I can't thank you enough; you were a great success."

She smiled wickedly, and couldn't resist:

"Especially with the women."

Dan's face flushed; he was already deeply hurt for her, and her words showed him that the insult had gone home.

"Where are you going now?"

"Right to the Savoy."

Without another word, heiless as he was, he got into the motor and closed the door.

"I'm going to take you home," he informed her quietly, "and there's no use in looking at me like that either! When I'm set on a thing I get it!"

They rolled away in the bland sunset; passed the park, down Piccadilly, where the flowers in the streets were so sweet that they made the heart ache, and the air through the window was so sweet that it made the senses swim!

CHAPTER XVIII.

A Woman's Way.

When the duchess thought of looking for Blair later in the afternoon he was not to be found. Galorey told her finally he had gone off in the motor with Letty Lane, bareheaded. The duchess was bidding good-by to the last guest; she motioned Galorey to wait and he did so, and they found themselves alone in the room where the flowers still fresh, offered their silent company, the draggets strewn with leaves of smilax, the open piano with its scattered music the dark rosewood that had served for a rest for Letty Lane's white hand. Galorey and the duchess turned their backs on the music-room, and went into a small conservatory looking out over the park.

"He's nothing but a cowboy," the lady exclaimed. "He must be quite mad, going off bareheaded through London with an actress."

"He's spoiled," Lord Galorey said peacefully.

She carried a bunch of orchids Dan had given her, and regarded them absently. "I've made him angry, and he's taking this way of exhibiting his spleen."

Looking up from the contemplation of her flowers to her friend, the duchess murmured with a charming smile: "I don't hit it off very well, with Americans, Gordon."

His color rising, Galorey returned: "I think you'll have to let Dan go, Lily!"

For a second she thought so herself; and they both started when the voice of the young man himself was heard in the next room.

"Good-by, I'll let you make your peace, Lily," and Gordon passed Dan in the drawing-room in leaving, and thought the boy's face was a study.

The duchess held out her hand to Dan as he came across the room.

"Come here," she called agreeably. "Every one has gone, thank heaven! I've been waiting for you for an age. Let's talk it all over."

"Just what I've come back to do."

There had been royalty at the musicale, and the hostess spoke of her guests and their approval, mentioning one by one the names of the great. It might have impressed the ear of a man more snob than was the Montana copper king's son. "I did so want you to meet the Bishop of London," she said. "But nobody could find you. You look most awfully well, Dan," and with the orchids she held, she touched his hand.

He was so direct, so incapable of anything but the honest truth, that Dan didn't know deceit when he saw it and his lady spoke so naturally that he thought for a moment her rudeness had been unintentional. Perhaps she hadn't really meant— Everybody in her set was rude, great and rude, but she could be deliciously gracious, and was so now.

"Don't you think it went off well?"

Dan said that it had been ripping and no mistake.

"I like Lady Calware; she's bully, and I liked the king. He spoke to me as if he had known me for a year."

She began to be a little more at her ease.

"I didn't care much for the fiddling, but Letty Lane made up for all the rest," said Dan. "Wasn't she great?"

"Rather!" The duchess' tone was so warm that he asked frankly: "Well, why didn't you speak to her, Lily?" And the directness caught her unprepared. The insult to the actress by which she had planned to teach him a lesson failed to give her the bravado she found she needed to meet Dan's question. Her part of the transaction, deliberate, unkind, seemed worse and more serious through his headlong act, when he had driven off, braving her in the motor of an actress. She didn't dare to be jealous.

"Wasn't it too dreadful?" she murmured. "Do you think she noticed it too awfully? I was just about to go up and speak to her when the prime minister—"

Dan interrupted the duchess. He blushed for her.

"Never mind, Lily." His tone had in it something of benevolence. "If you really didn't mean to be mean—"

She was enchanted by her easy victory. "It was abominable."

"Yes," he accepted. "It was just that! I was mortified. You wouldn't treat a beggar so. But she's got too much sense to care."

Eager to do the duchess justice, even though he was little by little being emancipated, he was all the more determined to be fair to her.

"It was too sweet of her not to mind. I dare say her check helped to soothe her feelings," the woman said.

The duchess exclaimed in horror: "Then she did mind."

And he turned slowly: "She's eaten and drunk with kings, and if the king hadn't gone so early you can bet he would have set the fashion differently. Let's drop the question. She sent you back your check, and I guess you're quits."

With a sharp note in her voice she said: "I hope it won't be in the papers that you drove bareheaded back to the hotel with her. Don't forget that we are dining with the Galorey's, and it's past seven."

After Dan had left her, the duchess glanced over the dismantled room which the servants were already restoring to order. She was not at ease and not at peace, but there was something else besides her tiff with Dan that absorbed her, and that was Galorey. She couldn't quite shake him off. He was beginning to be imperious in his demands on her; and, in spite of her cupidity and her debts, in spite of the precarious position in which she found herself with Dan, she could not break with Galorey yet. She went upstairs humming under her breath the ballad Letty Lane had sung in the music room:

castle wall."

CHAPTER XIX.

Dan Awakes.

The next night Dan, magnetically drawn down the Strand to the Gaiety, arrived just before the close of the last act, slipped in, and sat far back watching Letty Lane close her part. After hearing her sing as she had the afternoon before in the worldly group, it was curious to see her before the public in her flashing dress and to realize how much she was a thing of the people. Tonight she was a completely personal element to Dan. He could never think of her again as he had hitherto. The sharp drive through the town that afternoon in her motor had made a change in his feelings. He had been hurt for her, with anger at the duchess of Breakwater's rudeness, and from the first he had always known that there was in him a hot championship for the actress. Tonight, whenever the man who sang with her put his arms around her, danced with her, held her, it was an offense to Dan Blair. It had angered him before but tonight it did more. One by one everything faded out of his foreground but the brilliant little figure with her golden hair, her lovely face, her beautiful graceful body, and in her last gesture on the stage before the curtain went down, she seemed to defy to call him and distinctly to make an appeal to him:

"You might rest your weary feet
If you came to Mandalay."

Well, there was nothing weary about the young, live, vigorous American, as, standing there in his dark edge of the theater, his hands in his pockets, his bright face fixed toward the stage, he watched the slow falling of the curtain on the musical drama. Dan realized how full of vigor he was; he felt strong and capable, indeed a feeling of power often came to him delightfully, but it had never been needful for him to exert his forces, he had never had need to show his mettle. Now he felt at those words, how, with all his heart, he longed that the dancer should rest those lovely tired little feet of hers, far away from any call of the public, far away on some lovely shore which the hymn tune called the coral strand. As he gazed at her mobile, sensitive face, whose eyes had seen the world, and whose lips— Dan's thoughts changed here with a great pang, and the close of all his meditations was, "Gosh, she ought to rest!"

"You might rest your weary feet"

Such Boorishness!

Another American lady, returning to her beloved country, forgets to declare her gold cigarette case, her gold porte-monnaie and a few cloth-of-gold frocks, and is required to "explain what ought to have been evident to any customs inspector worth his salt. Can ladies be expected to charge their minds with a lot of such trifles! How can a lady remember how much paraphernalia of lovely womanhood—costly, as a matter of course—she has acquired! Must a lady take stock of all her personal belongings to oblige a few politicians in New York!—New York Evening Sun.

The Last Word.

"What's the first word in the dictionary?" asked the student.

"The article 'a' of course," replied Mr. Growcher.

"And what's the last word?"

"Ask my wife. She's an expert on the subject."—Washington Star.

Health & Beauty Hints

By Katherine Morton

To begin with, if your hair is dry, harsh, given to letting unlovely wisps of uneven lengths stick out round your face, and at the nape of your neck, do not shampoo too frequently. Instead, shake equal parts of powdered orris root and cornmeal into it once a week, and then, with a soft, fine infants' brush, take it all out again. Some women use merely dry starch and are satisfied when they see the powder that went in so white coming out a dark gray. They know that their hair has been cleansed. This process over, dip the finger tips in olive oil or rub them along a piece of cocoa butter. Carefully and gently massage the scalp till every part has benefited by the emollient. Then take another soft baby's brush (not the one that cleansed your hair), and brush each of the six strands into which you have divided your tresses many, many times.

The irregularities of length always found when weak or neglected hair is beginning to be strengthened by care can only be dealt with, almost hour by hour, after the following fashion. Have innumerable tiny hairpins matching your hair. If that is dark, fine black pins will do. If it is extremely blond, you should purchase the tiny silvered invisible pins—they can be procured. If your tresses are any of the various shades of brown, use bronze or gold invisible hairpins. Curl the recalcitrant locks and then skewer them to the longer and more solid masses with these pins.

Of course, if you have to make a hasty toilet curling irons must be resorted to. But a soft piece of old muslin, or a kid curler—these are of various qualities, and the more expensive are many times worth the difference in price—will produce a more natural curl and one that stays in longer. Some people are able to keep these straying wisps in pretty curls merely by steaming them. Others dampen their fingers just before they begin to dress in the morning and twist their little bits of hair round and round the dampened fingers, leaving them thus twisted for half an hour. This produces the most natural and lasting curl of all.

| | |
|---|---|
| Bay rum | 4 ounces |
| Spirits of ether | 4 drachms |
| Glycerine | 1 drachm |
| Salycilic acid | 4 ounces |
| Alcohol | 4 ounces |

If this is massaged into the scalp for a few minutes every night the hair will lose its hay-like appearance and become glossy and healthy looking.

One pint witch hazel, one pint good whiskey, 5 cents' worth tincture quinine and 5 cents' worth tincture of cantharides.

All a few drops of clarified lemon juice, shake and bottle.

Social Forms and Entertainments

Announcing an Engagement.

Will you kindly suggest an original way of announcing an engagement at an informal card party?—M. A.

This may not be an original way, for I find nearly every scheme has been tried by some one, but it is a very pretty manner in which to make the glad tidings known. When refreshments are served have the cakes heart shaped. Put two on each plate, one frosted with pink and the man's initial or last name on it in white, and the other in white with the girl's last initial in pink. The guests will soon "catch on" and congratulations follow.

From "Sweet Sixteen."

I am always interested in your columns and find them a great help. I am in doubt about a few questions that bother me. A boy friend of mine is about to leave town and has asked me to keep corresponding with him and not to go with anyone else. Should I keep this promise if I see someone I like better? Is it proper to kiss a boy good bye at the train, whom I've gone with for over a year? What would be nice for a gift to give a boy who is going away? Most girls at the age of sixteen do these things. Is it proper? I want to know the right thing. SWEET SIXTEEN.

I do not think a girl as young as you are should make such a promise to any boy, and do not kiss him good-bye at the train. It would make you conspicuous and you might regret it some time. I know it is hard for all you young people to look ahead, but you will see things like I do some day. Give the boy a silver pencil or a desk set, something that he will find convenient. Most boys like practical cushions for their couches.

A Variety of Questions.

Do you think it is proper for a young man and a lady to have pictures taken together? Do you think it is all right to have a young boy take you to a party at night? My mother never objects to me talking to a boy and all the other girls talk to them and I do, too. I hope to have my answers in the paper soon.

H. A.

I hope I am not too late with your answers. The correspondence is large and the space small, so only a few letters can appear each week. There is no harm in having pictures taken together, especially of the postcard variety, which are usually "just for fun," and I suppose that is what you mean. There is certainly no impropriety in accepting a boy's escort to a party or in talking to boys. They are not dragons and I hope I never object to anything reasonable.

MADAME MERRI.

Ghost Talk.

Aunt Caroline came running into the dining room, her kinky hair on end.

"Missee," she gasped, "I done met a ghost out dar by de well."

"You must have been mistaken, Caroline," said the lady of the house. "There aren't any such things as ghosts."

Aunt Caroline drew herself up haughtily.

"Dey ain't, ain't dey? Well, what would you say if I tole you this 'un done spoke to me? Yes-sum, I heerd him."

"Why, what did he say?"

"Say," sniffed the dusky mistress of the meals, "h'ow you specs I know? I neber learned dese hern dald langwiches."

Genuine Maple Sugar.

There are few people outside the maple sugar making districts, says a writer in the Country Gentleman, who really know what the genuine article tastes like. The superior flavor thus spoken of is probably due in a degree to the same causes that make strawberries eaten off the vine and cherries consumed on the tree so delectable. The writer quoted, however, puts some of the blame for the poor flavor of commercial maple sugar on the "wily wholesale dealer and mixer."

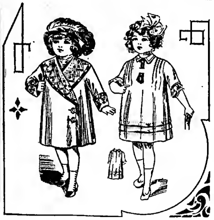
Two Simple Costumes for the Small Rulers of the Household



Coat for girl of four to six years. This is a little one-piece pattern that makes up well in cloth of some pretty light color. The collar and cuffs are bound with silk of a darker shade than the cloth and have embroidered muslin collar and cuffs worn over them.

Dress for girl of four to six years. Cream delaine is used for this simple little dress. There are three small tucks on each shoulder and two inch-wide tucks above the hem on skirt. The sleeves are finished with lace ruffles.

Material required: 1⅝ yard 44 inches wide.

Marriage Forced On Lucky Widow

The foreman of a Marseilles warehouse who has won the prize of $200,000 in the big French lottery has been pestered, as the winners of these big prizes always are pestered in France. The first $200,000 ever offered was won by a cantiniere, Mme. Hoff, a widow, who afterwards wrote a book on her adventures. The poor woman was literally chased from place to place for weeks by people who wanted to beg of her or merely to see her. Her principal tormentors were the men who wanted to marry her. There were 497 of them! Her suitors were so many and so pressing that eventually she married one of them.

His Face Entirely Filled With Pimples

And Blackheads. Was Ashamed. Used Resinol, Skin Clear.

A Jersey City man, Thomas Bruno, 170½ Brunswick St., writes: Mar. 29, 1912—"About four months ago a pimple broke out on my forehead which pained me very much. I began scratching it and within two weeks my face was entirely filled with pimples and blackheads. They were not only disgusting, but also painful. I was ashamed to walk on the streets and soon became discouraged. I tried many remedies, such as salves, cold cream, etc., but all were a failure.

"I read of the Resinol Soap and Resinol Ointment in the papers, and soon sent for samples which I used. They proved to be excellent, and after using two cakes of Resinol Soap and a jar of Resinol Ointment, it removed every pimple and blackhead in sight. This treatment lasted about three weeks, and now my skin is clear and healthy. I gave some Resinol Ointment to a friend and it cured him of sycosis (or barber's itch). My family use Resinol Soap for the toilet and shampoo; it stops dandruff and falling hair. I recommend Resinol Soap and Ointment for all skin troubles."

Resinol Soap and Ointment stop itching instantly, and quickly heal eczema and other skin and scalp eruptions, as well as sores, burns, and bleeding piles. Your druggist sells them (Soap, 25c; Ointment 50c and $1). For a sample of each write to Dept. 6-K, Resinol Chemical Co., Baltimore, Md.

Damages for Spoiled Beauty.

A curious judgment was given in a German court the other day. A little girl of three who was placed in a nursing institution had been bitten by the yard dog, the bite leaving a scar on the cheek. The little one's guardian put in a claim, not in respect of the pain caused, but because the scar had lessened her chances of securing a husband when she became old enough to marry. The court upheld the guardian's claim, and placed the damages at $500.

Some Mosquitoes Don't Sting.

It is the female mosquito that does all the biting. Those that have the feathery, plume-like antennae are the males and they are harmless.

Ingenious Palindrome.

The palindrome, or sentence which reads alike forward or backward, has exercised the ingenuity of many minds since Adam said to Eve: "Madam, I'm Adam." One, which an exchange attributes to Boito, the composer, is a characterization of two of Shakespeare's heroes, in Italian: "Ebro è Otel, ma Amleto è orbe" (Drunken is Othello, but Hamlet is mad).

"Interests" in 1836.

A power has risen up in the government greater than the people themselves, consisting of many and various and powerful interests, combined into one mass, and held together by the cohesive power of the vast surplus in the banks.—John C. Calhoun.

POLICE RAID

RESULT IN ARREST OF WOMAN AND TWO MEN

Action Has Moral Support of Everybody Who Wants Painesville to be a Clean City.

The complaint of a respectable father and mother that there was in the very heart of this city a place where the most evil influences that could possibly exist for the downfall of young and inexperienced and possible wayward girls, was enough to lead the police officers to action.

A raid was made late last Friday evening and resulted in the arrest of two men and one woman against whom serious charges were made. One of the men arrested was James Henry a man of questionable reputation, who has of late been attempting to hold the position of policeman or night watchman at the L. S. depot, against the protest of Director of Public Safety Murphy. This would be officer was relieved at once of his police property and as no one seemed to care to have him linger here longer, he tumbled (after a time) to the chance that was open to him to get out. The other man and the woman were given a hearing Monday morning of this week, and as they pleaded guilty to the charge placed against them, were fined $10 and $25 and cost respectively.

IN PROGRESSIVE CLEVELAND

The City Catches Its Own Fish—Vacant Lots Being Used For Garden Purposes.

Mayor Baker, aided by his executive and administrative force, is active in the cause of the reduced cost of living in this city. First in importance is the organization and operation of "The municipal fish and produce company" under the guidance and control of city officials and in the interest of the community in general.

Four steam tugs, employed for the purpose, now land daily upon the municipal dock here an average of about 10,000 pounds of fresh fish, taken from Lake Erie, and sales are made not only at the dock, but at each of the three city market places and from two other stalls established at other central points, thus giving the residents in all parts of the city opportunity to avail themselves of the privilege of purchase at the moderate price of five cents a pound, reducing the cost to consumers about one-half from prices previously paid to dealers.

Requests for supplies have been received from several cities and towns outside, but Director of Public Service Springborn has ruled that the object of the move is to reduce cost to residents of Cleveland and until the supply may prove more than adequate for the local demand applications from other points will not be considered. A recent audit of the accounts of the company, covering only its first three weeks of operation, shows a profit of about $1600.

The cost of operation is conceded to show more favorable at present than will be possible during the season of stormy weather in the fall, but a considerable further addition to the earnings is probable meanwhile and it is planned to utilize the total surplus accumulated by the close of the season of navigation in the way of purchases of fuel and provision supplies that will be used during the winter months.

Another move, in another way, but with the same end in view, has been the awarding to those desirous of cultivating their family vegetable supply but who lacked ground of their own, the free use of suitable land for such purpose. Both resident and nonresident owners made immediate response to the appeal of the mayor for vacant ground, plots in various sections of the city being tendered, and applications for the use of the land were as immediate and general as was the proffer of the ground by the owners. Cultivation of the soil is now going on, and substantial benefit will be resultant to many families.

Brought Him to Time

One Boston girl, who does not live a hundred miles from St. Stephen street, had her own delicate way of taking advantage of leap year, and what is better, her scheme worked beautifully. She had been courted about a year and as she was really fond of the chap, she was more than keen to hear the momentous question, but the man who apparently was sincerely fond of the girl failed to "pop." She had had occasion to sign a letter to the young man, and this is the way she did it: "As always, Edith Jones." She heavily underscored the "always" and the name "Jones." The marriage takes place next week and it has been deemed of sufficient importance to be given considerable space in the Boston papers.

A sprained ankle may as a rule be cured in from three to four days by applying Chamberlain's Liniment and observing the directions with each bottle. For sale by all dealers.

The work at the Fairground is progressing nicely. The new green house enterprise is rapidly developing. There are eight or ten new houses going up and a general movement in the way of repairs and improvement that makes Painesville a fairly busy place for those who wish to work

When will there ever be a better time to get that subway under the Lake Shore tracks on State street started, than right now?

Mrs. Geo. Ludlow, and little son, who have been guests of Mrs. Ludlow's parents, Mr. and Mrs D. E. Williams, Mentor avenue, have returned to their home in Rock Island, Ill.

—o—

Next Sunday, June 9, will be Children's Day at the M. E. Church. The morning hour of worship at ten o'clock will be devoted to a Childrens Day Service consisting of special music, recitations, and class exercises given by the Sunday School. This special service will be held in the auditorium of this church. A special Children's Day collection will be taken

—o—

In making a note of the fire on Liberty street, in last week's issue of the Herald, we had not the slightest intention of "knocking" the fire department in any way, shape or manner. We believe it goes without the saying that the fire fighters of Painesville done all that could be done, everyone knows that, and the boys could not be held accountable for conditions over which they had no control.

—o—

Everybody should get busy at once and help the "Safe and Sane Fourth" committee to have here in Painesville on Independence day this year a celebration that will be a credit to our beautiful city. The celebration held here last year was a pleasant surprise to many, but the work fell upon comparatively few. Let the work be divided so as not fall too heavily upon any one. Patriotism is a great thing, and a good place for it is right here at home.

—o—

The annual exhibit of the manual training work of the public schools will be held all this week in the Morley library and the public is cordially invited. There is no charge for admission and many wonderful examples of the handiwork of Painesville boys and girls will be on exhibition. There will be basketry, including raffia and reed work. Knitted yarn work of primary children and specimens of drawing from various grades will be shown. The exhibit is well worth seeing.

—o—

Mr. Morris Saslow of Painesville, and Mr. P. Waresw of Cleveland, are about to open a new store here, next door to Collacott's shoe store, under the firm name of Superior Clothing Co. Mr. Saslow has quite recently been in the employ of the Up to Date Department store, and was for a number of years in Fairport, he is therefore well known in Painesville and vicinity. Mr. Waresw is a young man of pleasant address who has had considerable experience in the clothing business. Painesville should give the glad hand to all young men who risk their dollars in an effort to build up business here.

Of the new enterprises located here during the year, the one most appreciated by the people of Painesville and vicinity is the Painesville Dry Cleaning Company, under the management of Mr. Charles Fink. From the very first the business has been successful, and as Mr. Fink's upright methods of dealing and his thorough and up-to-date workmanship becomes better known the business will continue to grow and prosper. In addition to the regular line of work done at this establishment Mr. Fink is prepared to clean all kinds of hats from the cheapest straw to the most expensive Panama.

COX WINS

POPULAR DAYTON EDITOR AND CONGRESSMAN NOMINATED BY DEMOCRATS FOR GOVERNOR

Platform Progressive But The Adoption of Unit Rule is a Black Eye to True Democratic Principles

The Democrats at Toledo nominated a good ticket and adopted a strong progressive platform, but the personal ambitions of Governor Harmon lead his political henchmen to force through the Unit Rule, this act being in itself contrary to the progressive ideas expressed in the platform adopted.

The ticket nominated is as follows:

Governor—James M. Cox, of Montgomery county.

Lieutenant Governor—Hugh L. Nichols, of Clermont county

Secretary of State—Charles H. Graves, of Ottawa county.

Treasurer of State—John P. Brennan, of Champaign county

Auditor of State—A. V. Donahey, of Tuscarawas county.

Attorney General—Timothy S. Hogan, of Jackson county.

Board of Public Works—Tobias Schutt, of Stark county, William Lanies, of Henry county

Dairy and Food Commissioner—S E. Strode, of Crawford county

School Commissioner—Frank W Miller, of Montgomery county

Supreme Court Clerk—Frank E McKean, of Cuyahoga county.

Supreme Court Judge (long term)—J. Foster Wilkins, of Tuscarawas county

Supreme Court Judge (short term) Oscar W. Newman, of Scioto county

Congressman-at-Large — Robert Crosser, of Cuyahoga county

OPENING

OLD STORE UNDER NEW MANAGEMENT TO MAKE BOW TO PUBLIC JUNE 8th.

Young Business Man From Cleveland Sets Example of Progressive Ideas in Business

Mr. V. M. Gehring, druggist, successor to Fred J. Barnes, will make his prettiest bow and greet everybody with his most expressive smile on Saturday, June 8th, when "Gehring's the Rexall Store," will be dedicated to serve the people with every thing that can be found in a metropolitan drug store.

The changes that have been made in this store since Mr. Gehring assumed the management have worked a revelation in one of Painesville's best business locations.

The store room has been enlarged newly decorated, equipped with new cases, soda fountain, new front and the stock has been added to and rearranged making the store a credit to the city.

Mr. Gehring has employed local men to do the work, and local firms, The Wadsworth Co. and the Up to Date Co. supplied most of the fixtures and finishing materials.

PUBLIC RECITAL

NOTED READER, MISS LUCINE FINCH TO BE HEARD HERE

Proceeds of Entertainment to Pay for Pictures for School.

Tuesday evening, June 11, at 8 o'clock, Miss Lucine Finch of New York City will give a recital of Southern stories and songs in the high school auditorium. The proceeds of this entertainment will be used to buy pictures for the grammar school on Washington street.

DECORATION DAY

Old Soldiers and Young Children With Flags and Flowers Make Imposing Parade.

Painesville people are proud of Citizens' band and the boys in their new uniforms were seen by thousands as they let the parade from the Court House to the cemetery on Decoration day.

The parade was an imposing one, the old soldiers with their slow, firm steps and the children in bright colors and their youthful faces contrasting with the stern set faces of the old warriors. Such a contrast shows quite plainly the severe test of life's great battle.

The Sons of Veterans and members of the W. R. C. took part in the exercises. At 2 o'clock in the afternoon James H. Taylor of Cleveland delivered a most patriotic address at the First Church to a large audience.

The day was bright and clear and there was nothing in the whole days exercise to mar the serious and patriotic sentiment of the occasion.

EXPENDITURES

OF CANDIDATES FOR OFFICES NOT LARGE IN LAKE COUNTY

Losing Candidates Spent As Much or Possibly More Than Successful Ones

Ora Spink spent $132.18 and landed the nomination of sheriff.

G. E. Stevenson spent $15.40 and E. H. Williams spent $6.75 as candidates for county commissioner, both won. E. L. House spent $68.75 and failed by a few votes to land.

J. C. Barto parted with $52.60 while the successful candidate for clerk office, J. R. Williams, ventured $75.75.

Homer Harper's expenses were $33.80 and Bartlett C. Shepherd's $64.96.

J. C. Ward spent $38.34 and has nothing but a good time to show for his money.

S. A. Haskell, candidate for nomination for county treasurer spent $75.78, C. J. Scott spent $96.66, while the successful man for the office, E. M. Orcutt, kept his expenses down to $31.30.

F. D. Malin, democratic candidate for the legislature, did not spend any thing, but his opponent on the republican ticket, J. V. Winans, wrote a few letters and rode on the street cars to insure his nomination, all of which cost the nice little sum of $1.18.

Judge Nye and W. Albert Davis won the renomination for the respective offices which they now fill without spending anything. The democratic candidates as a general thing spent nothing and will of course be that much richer when the grand fight comes on election day.

NINE YEARS

SUCCESSFUL BUSINESS EXPERIENCE OF LOCAL FIRM

Ninth Anniversary To Be An Event Of Interest To Local Buyers

Nine years ago the Up to Date company located here with no great claim to prestige, but with an earnest determination to build up a business along lines of honest goods and fair dealing.

This firms large store on Main street is evidence of how well they have succeeded. They number their friends by the thousands and have in no small way made Painesville noted as a good trade center.

Messrs Abramsen and Ruttenberg, the proprietors, with their assistants, have the personal good will and friendship of Painesville business people generally.

SUDDEN DEATH

Highly Respected Citizen of Liberty Street Passes Away Tuesday.

Phineas Merrill, aged 69 years, died suddenly Tuesday morning. He was apparently in good health during the early part of the morning and attended to his work as usual. He afterward came in the house and laid down, and within an hour was taken with heart trouble and died shortly afterwards. The deceased was born in Concord 69 years ago and has been a life-long resident of Lake county. He is survived by a widow and one son, Fred C. Merrill. The funeral services will be held from the Merrill home on Thursday p. m. at 2 o'clock and will be private.

The Christian Sunday School holds its Children's Day exercises Sunday evening, the Baptist S. S. having their exercises on the same night.

Decoration day services were held at the Christian church, after which the graves of the soldiers were decked with flowers by the children.

Last Thursday the boys in blue gathered
At the little church close to the graves
Of the boys who went down for the honor
Of that land they all fought to save
An old comrade in days of the sixty's
Praised the deeds of the blue and the gray,
We met there to learn of our heroes
Last Decoration Day.
We sing praises of civil war heroes
Still we honor the 30th of May
But there's no day in all the four seasons
For the makers of our U S A.
The fourth of July has no meaning—
But of athletics, cannon and noise
There is no time to hear of the brave deeds performed
By the noble '76 boys
Is this well? Should the sons of a nation
Give no heed to heroes of yore?
Is there no crying need at the present
As important as base ball—or more?
Why not teach the boys true patriotism?
Corporations will some day be guided by them
Let us hope they'll be true to their land
With their wealth serve their fellowmen

DEAFNESS CANNOT BE CURED

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars free.

FULLER'S EARTH IN AMERICA

Industry Has Reached Greatest Production and Consumption in Its History.

Fuller's earth, the claylike material that is used principally as a filtering medium for oils, fats, and grease, is found in 15 states, as shown by a report of the United States geological survey. In 1911 fuller's earth was produced in but seven states, Arkansas, California, Florida, Georgia, Massachusetts, South Carolina, and Texas, and there were no unusual developments in the industry. New deposits are reported from time to time, but in many the high standard of efficiency required is not found and only a few of the deposits are worked. Of the large number of known deposits but 13 were worked in 1911. Some of the causes for the small number of workings, in addition to the high standard of quality required, are inaccessibility of the deposits and lack of capital.

Notwithstanding the comparatively small number of producers, the output has almost steadily increased from the small beginning in 1895, when but 6,900 short tons were reported, valued at $41,400, or $6 a ton, to 1911, when 40,697 tons were reported, valued at $383,124, or $9.41 a ton.

Florida continues to be the leading state. In 1911 it reported 27,658 tons, valued at $265,571, or $9.60 a ton. This was 68 per cent. of the quantity and 69 per cent of the value of the entire output and value. The other states in the order of their rank in output and value in 1911 were Georgia, Arkansas, Texas, Massachusetts, California and South Carolina.

It Puzzled Him.

Robert is a very young nephew of an attache at the state house, and when he goes to visit his uncle he makes the rounds of his offices where he has numerous friends. He was sitting in the office of the secretary to the governor a few days ago, when the governor and H. L. Conter, deputy secretary of state, came from the governor's private office.

"Robert come over and shake hands with the governor," said Mark Thistlethwaite, the governor's secretary.

Without leaving his chair Robert looked the governor and Mr. Conter over critically.

"I will if you tell me which one it is," he replied.—Indianapolis News.

Platinum.

Platinum, one of the most useful of the metals in many ways was named by the Spaniards on account of its silvery color, plata signifying silver. It was found in the auriferous sands of the river Pinto in South America, and was unknown in Europe prior to 1741 when Don Antonio Ulloa announced its existence in his narrative of a voyage to Peru. It was not until 1830 that platinum was rendered malleable and ductile by a Dr. William Hyde of Wallaston. Platinum is largely employed in the manufacture of chemical utensils, owing to its immunity to the effects of heat, acid, etc.

Turk Makes Good Soldier.

Stupid, honest, kind to children, albeit somewhat callous to the sufferings of animals; brave, and, above all, silently enduring, the Turkish peasant soldier is a man for whom one cannot help feeling a strong sympathy in all his miseries. And see him in such a campaign as this, see how he responds to the smallest kindness (provided you can get him to accept it at all), see how cheerfully and with what simple humor he makes light of his hardships, and then your pity will become a stronger feeling still.—Alan Dellor, in The London Daily Express.

Untwist It.

Fred and Jack, little brothers, hitched their goats to a new wagon, their father bought them. Fred, the younger, got in to drive off, but "Billie" stubbornly refused to budge; whereupon Jack stepped up and gave the goat's tail a vicious twist or two, at which "Billie" made off at a lively gait, to the great pleasure of Fred, the driver. When the goat got started he did not slow down, but went faster and faster to the great dismay of Fred, who, much frightened, cried to his brother: "Jack, Jack, untwist it, untwist it!"—Norman E. Mack's National Monthly.

All From the Heart.

As the heart so is the life. The within is ceaselessly becoming the without. Nothing remains unrevealed; that which is hidden is but for a time; it ripens and comes forth at last. Seed, tree, blossom and fruit is the fourfold order of the universe. From the state of a man's heart proceed the conditions of his life; his thoughts blossom into deeds and his deeds bear the fruitage of character and destiny.—James Allen.

Astonished the Teacher.

The teacher in charge of one of the grades in a grammar school wrote on the board a number of words ending in the syllable "tion." After explaining the meaning of each to the class she told them to use the words in sentences. Her pupils wrote busily for a few moments, and then one of them astonished her with the following:

"Father's hair is a recollection, mother's is an acquisition, auntie's is a compilation, sister's is an aggregation, brother's is a conflagration, while baby's is a mere premonition."—Judge.

Reach the People.

The advertisements of the newspaper go closer home to the people than most of the other matter. Why? Because the main concern of nine-tenths of the people is living, and life is an unending round of buying, buying, buying—where to buy and what to buy.—K. H. Laffert.

Where Vegetarianism Fails.

Enthusiastic Worker—Since meat is so high, why not use vegetables?

Mrs. Gregan—They don't do a black eye no good.

TAFT CAPTURES OHIO'S BIG SIX

PRESIDENT WINS HIS FIGHT FOR DELEGATES-AT-LARGE AT THE STATE CONVENTION.

ADMINISTRATION IS INDORSED

REPUBLICANS RECESS 'TIL JULY 2 WHEN IT WILL RECONVENE AND SELECT TICKET.

FIRST DAY'S EVENTS AT OHIO REPUBLICAN CONVENTION.

Taft forces control credentials committee, seating their delegates in the only contest and control resolutions committee, which probably will write no platform but be limited to brief indorsement of president.

Walter Brown re-elected chairman of state central committee by vote of 13 to 8, though test vote shows committee divided 11 to 10 for Taft. Re-election of chairman is personal matter.

Temporary organization made permanent.

---

Convention Hall, Columbus, O.—President William Howard Taft won his fight for Ohio's six delegates-at-large to the Republican national convention at the state convention by a vote of 390½ to 362½.

Previous to this victory his forces defeated those of Colonel Roosevelt for indorsement in the adoption of the report of the committee on resolutions by 393½ to 359½.

The resolutions read:

"We heartily endorse the administration of President Taft."

The repulse of the Roosevelt men was made possible by the position of the Cuyahoga county delegation, which stood for Taft throughout by a vote of 48 to 5. The president's victory on the Big Six was by a margin of only 28 votes and his majority in Cuyahoga county more than equaled this amount.

Burton Heads Delegation.

The delegates-at-large elected by the Taft forces are: Senator Theodore E. Burton, Cleveland; Harry M. Daugherty, Columbus; Warren G. Harding, Marion; Charles P. Taft, Cincinnati; Arthur L. Vorys, Columbus; D. J. Cable, Lima.

The Taft delegates were nominated by Albert H. Merrill, chairman of the Hamilton county delegation.

The Taft alternates are: William L. Anderson, Hamilton; Sherman S. Deaton, Champaign; Sherman Granger, Zanesville; William W. Woods, Miami; L. C. Laylin, Columbus, and Julius Whiting, Stark.

Name State Ticket July 2.

After the election of the Big Six the convention recessed until July 2 when it will reconvene to select a state ticket.

The first test of strength between the rival forces of Taft and Roosevelt adherents was reached when the majority report of the committee on resolutions was presented by J. Warren Keifer. It carried the indorsement of President Taft. Immediately an effort was made by J. Meede Massie of Chillicothe to secure the adoption of the minority report, indorsing Roosevelt, as a substitute. The debate waxed hot and pandemonium reigned as a roll call was demanded upon the substitution of the Roosevelt report. It was this roll call that showed that the Taft men controlled the situation. The result was that the minority report was beaten, 393½ to 359½. Then the majority report was adopted on a viva voce vote at the call of Chairman Burton.

On the test the Cuyahoga delegation stood 48 for Taft and 5 for Roosevelt. Lucas county, the home of Walter Brown of Toledo, gave Roosevelt a solid 22. Montgomery county gave 29 for Taft. Hamilton county, too, lined up solidly for the president with 87 votes.

One Ballot Settles Six Six.

When the result of the action on resolutions was announced the convention decided to take one ballot on the Big Six. Candidates were named by the rival factions and the vote proceeded. The Taft delegates and alternates were victors, 390½ to 362½.

Prior to the presentation of the report of the resolutions committee the Taft men won two points without contest when, after the opening at 10:16 a. m., the majority report of the committee on credentials was adopted, seating the seven contesting Taft delegates from Lawrence county and four from Crawford county, and also making permanent the temporary organization led by Senator T. E. Burton as chairman.

The convention broke into confusion when Walter Brown was given the floor. He advised the adoption of the majority report, much to the surprise of the Taft forces.

The report of the committee on rules and order of business was adopted, setting the date for the recessed convention as July 2.

Margaret Sangster Is Dead.

Newark, N. J.—Margaret Elizabeth Sangster, noted poet and author, died at her home in Maplewood, a suburb.

She was 74 years old and pursued an active literary career for more than half a century. Death was due to an attack of indigestion.

Mrs. Sangster was born in New Rochelle, N. Y. She received a private education and in 1858 married George Sangster. She was a staff contributor to leading American magazines and also did editorial work for years.

Solon and Newspaper Man Fight.

Washington, D. C.—In the presence of a distinguished audience, which included Judge Clayton and Samuel Gompers, in the house office building, Representative Robert Y. Thomas, jr., of Kentucky made a fistic attack upon Joseph Annan, a newspaper man, who had written an article that he did not like.

After striking Annan and being struck in return, Thomas was choking his adversary when John Kirby, a second newspaper man, tripped and threw him.

THREE FALL TO DEATH

TWO GERMANS ARE MANGLED BENEATH MONOPLANE.

Philip Parmalee, Daring Young Pupil of Wright Brothers, Is Killed When Machine Turns Over.

Bremen, Germany.—Albert Buchstaetter, widely known German aviator, and his passenger, Lieut. Stille of the German army, were dashed to death from a height of 200 feet when their aeroplane fell in the presence of several thousand people. The men were riding in a monoplane and as they were turning, the machine tipped and fell with terrific force. The machine struck the ground with such impact that it was imbedded several feet and had to be sawed to pieces before the bodies of the two unfortunate men could be released. Both Buchstaetter and Stille were mangled almost beyond recognition.

North Yakima, Wash.—Philip O. Parmalee, one of the most daring young pupils of the Wright brothers, fell to his death before the eyes of thousands of visitors at the fair grounds here. The expert, who was used to remaining in the air for three hours without accident, had been up only three minutes when a contrary gust of wind caught the tail of his aeroplane and turned it completely over. Parmalee clung to the framework but the plane shot straight to the ground from a height of 400 feet. When it crumpled into a shapeless heap in a field three miles from the fair grounds, the young aviator was beneath the wreckage.

Philip O. Parmalee, the noted aviator hurled to death in Moxee valley near North Yakima, was betrothed to Mrs. C. E. Turpin, to whom he would have been wed within a week. The bride-to-be witnessed his tragic end. In her maddened grief she refused to believe Parmalee dead. In agony she stood over his mangled form and declared she knew the spark of life had not flown. She raved and piteously cried that she knew he would revive and commanded that only the physicians be allowed in the presence of the lifeless lover. Tearfully she beseeched that they would not pronounce him dead and it was only after much persuasion that she could be induced to turn from the dreadful scene.

'HOLDING HANDS' EXPENSIVE

Girl Claims She Lost Diamond Ring While Taking a Little Stroll With Male Companion.

Yonkers, N. Y.—Miss Nellie Burns of Uniontown has asked the police of Yonkers to try to recover her diamond ring, which she says vanished while she was "holding hands" with Frank Prendergast. The couple are close friends and it was while they were taking a little stroll Miss Burns alleges the ring was taken from her. Prendergast denied that he had taken the ring.

"What were you doing when you were walking with her?" asked a police sergeant.

"Nothing except talking that I remember," replied Prendergast.

"You remember more than that," admonished Miss Burns. "Weren't you holding hands with me?"

Prendergast admitted that he might have been, but denied knowing anything about the ring.

Sergeant Kielly asked Miss Burns if she was willing to swear out a charge of larceny against Prendergast and take the responsibility on her own shoulders.

"And would I have to go to court and tell what we were doing?" she asked rather excitedly.

"Well, you would have to tell the whole truth."

"Well, I don't propose to be the laughing stock of Yonkers just for the sake of a diamond ring."

TWO MEN 'CRAZY WITH HEAT'

One Tries to Drown Himself While the Other Runs Through Street in Garden of Eden Attire.

Greenwich, Conn.—"Crazy with the heat" is the reason given for the antics of two Greenwich men. August Johnson, 56, tried to drown himself near the Belle Haven dock. He was rescued and put in a padded cell.

Hugh Elliott, 30, disrobed at his home on Railroad avenue, and in Adam's Garden of Eden attire paraded the village streets, calling for Eve. Elliott was wrapped in a blanket by officers and taken to a sanitarium.

Two in Ill Health End Lives.

Zanesville, O.—Muskingum county had two suicides. James L. Kirby, 48, of Roseville, shot himself through the head because of ill health, and Louis Moore, 31, a farmer, hung himself in his barn east of the city. Kirby was despondent because he thought he was afflicted with consumption. Moore had been sick for some time.

Has His Teeth Shot Out.

Easton, Pa.—Peter Sheets, 14, of Youngstown, O., is in the hospital at Meadville with several teeth missing which were knocked out by a bullet.

Sheets and George Helsbeck of Vernon township, where the Youngstown family is visiting, drove to Meadville in an automobile. Sheets was left in the street while the others went into a store. There was a rifle in the automobile and Miss Cleova Helsbeck picked up the gun and when the girl "pretended" to shoot young Sheets the rifle exploded.

Claims Marriage by Fraud.

Kingston, N. Y.—Justice Alden Chester, presiding in one of the most remarkable cases ever tried before the supreme court, has granted an interlocutory decree of annulment to Mrs. Mary Light Davis.

The court holds that her husband, James E. Davis, obtained her hand by fraud and deceit in that he refused to have a ceremony performed by a Catholic priest after promising his bride to do so. They were married by a Protestant clergyman in New Baltimore, N. Y., December 12, 1911.

CLAIMS ARCHBALD IGNORED DEMANDS

FEDERAL ATTORNEY SAYS JUDGE LET OFF "WIRE POOL" OPERATORS WITH SMALL FINES.

TESTIFIES BEFORE PROBERS

Wise of New York Asserts Jurist Accepted Compromise Plea From Defendents, One Never Before Permitted in Court.

Washington, D. C.—Despite the most earnest demands of the government, Judge Archbald let the operators of the "wire trust" off with small fines, according to the testimony of United States District Attorney Wise of New York before the house committee on judiciary investigating the judge.

"Over my protest he accepted a compromise plea, one never before permitted in the court," said Mr. Wise. "He fined the pool operators who pleaded guilty, 83 in number, $1,000 apiece. I asked a jail sentence for E. E. Jackson, leader of the pool, but Judge Archbald refused and imposed a fine of $45,000. Jackson's profits from the pool were $200,000 a year."

Mr. Wise told the committee that before the operators were arraigned he informed Judge Archbald that, with the exception of Jackson, the government was willing to let them off with a substantial fine. The reason for such clemency was that the pool was dissolved two years before the government began its prosecution.

It was announced to the committee by Wrisley Brown, special attorney for the department of justice, that James R. Dainty, wanted as a witness against Judge Archbald, has fled to Europe. Should the committee recommend that the judge be impeached, as now appears most probable, extradition proceedings against Dainty will be instituted immediately.

S. D. Warriner of Wilkesbarre, Pa., vice president of the Lehigh Valley Coal Co., produced correspondence with Judge Archbald for the lease of a coal dump on the Lehigh Valley railroad near the Oxford washery, in which the judge had an interest.

President E. B. Thomas of the Lehigh Valley Railroad Co. and E. B. Smith of Philadelphia, a director of the Lehigh railroad and of the Gerard estate, also testified as to Judge Archbald's negotiations for the culm bank near the Oxford washery.

RAPS ALCOHOL AND NARCOTICS

Ex-Surgeon of New York Red Cross Hospital Says Wave of Degeneracy is Sweeping Land.

Atlantic City, N. J.—"A wave of degeneracy is sweeping the land and its development threatens the physical vitality of the nation," declared Dr. T. Alexander MacNichol of New York, ex-surgeon of the New York Red Cross hospital and who was sent abroad by former President Roosevelt to investigate the subject of alcoholism and narcotics.

"Within a period of 50 years the population of the United States increased 30 per cent. while the number of insane and feeble-minded increased 950 per cent according to the recent census, practically all of which is due to the choice and excessive use of alcohol in one form or another and narcotics."

Newspaper Man a Suicide.

New York City.—Frank D. Cusick, 43, for many years well known in newspaper work in this city and previously in Chicago, was found dead of gas asphyxiation in the basement of his home here.

His body was in a closed linen closet. His head was resting upon a pillow and there was a gas tube in his mouth to which his hand still clung. Mr. Cusick was observed lately to have appeared downcast and despondent. Melancholia probably impelled his suicide.

Boy Slayer Is Sentenced.

New York City.—Maitland Jarvis, the 12-year-old "boy scout" of the Bronx, who on March 9 shot and killed Henry Luckhardt, 8, was sentenced, in the children's court, to an indefinite term in the New York juvenile asylum.

Jarvis borrowed a rifle from his aunt and went out to shoot at a mark. Returning home, he passed Luckhardt and two older boys. They dared him to shoot and tried to duck out of the way. The Luckhardt boy was instantly killed.

JEALOUS LOVER SLAYS

SHOOTS AND KILLS THIRTEEN-YEAR-OLD GIRL.

Former Soldier Who Decoys Child From Schoolhouse Attempts to End Own Life With Bullet.

Phillipsburg, N. J.—Infuriated because pretty 13-year-old Annie Lynch refused to marry him and jealous because she went to a circus with a rival, Fred J. Brown, 23, of Easton, Pa., shot and killed the girl and then turned the pistol on himself with perhaps fatal results.

Brown was recently discharged from the army after three years' service. He met the girl at a church entertainment shortly after his return to Easton and became so smitten with her charms that he proposed marriage on the evening of their first meeting. Annie's father, when he learned of the proposal, ordered Brown to keep away but Brown continued to seek the girl at every opportunity.

He went to the parochial school that Annie attended and told the sister in charge that Mrs. Lynch had been stricken with serious illness. The girl was excused from her studies and hurried toward home, Brown walking with her. He repeated the stories of his love and repeated his proposal of marriage.

Worried about her mother's reported illness, the child gave him a short answer and ran toward the house. The ex-soldier followed, overtook her and, placing the revolver to her breast, fired the shot. As neighbors who witnessed the shooting rushed toward him, Brown sent a bullet into his own chest. Annie died as she reached her own doorstep, sinking lifeless into the arms of her mother who was attracted by the shooting.

CHILDREN DIE IN SNAKE FIGHT

Two Young Boys Are Bitten by Poisonous Reptile and Baby Drowns in a Washtub.

Greenville, N. C.—Three children were killed when a rattlesnake attacked a henhouse on George Adams' farm near here. Two boys, under 8, were bitten and a third child, 1, was drowned in a washtub.

The mother of the children, washing clothes in the yard, ordered the elder boy to quiet a disturbance in the henhouse. He tried to throw a cackling hen from her nest and was bitten by the snake. The second boy followed and met a similar fate.

When the mother discovered a snake was there she hurried to help the boys and while she was busy the baby fell into the washtub.

Last of "Wild Men" Dies.

Boston, Mass.—Plutano, last of the famous pair of "wild men of Borneo," died at the home of Mrs. H. A. Warner in Waltham. Plutano is believed to have been 92 years old, and with his brother, Wano, who died in 1905, had traveled all over the world. Plutano and Wano, said to have been captured on the island of Borneo, were brought to New York in the early '50s. It was not possible to teach the little men to speak English.

Scheme Didn't Work.

New York City.—When Charles H. Richter, 18, convicted of impersonating an officer, was brought into special sessions for sentence, a probation officer told the justice that one of Dr. Parkhurst's societies had been giving the boy $1 for every church service he attended. The officer added that the scheme had not worked.

Kills Her Supposed Rival.

Nashville, Tenn.—Mrs. Jessie C. Barnes shot and instantly killed Mrs. W. W. Judd at Buffalo Valley, Tenn. She had accused Mrs. Judd of paying attention to Mr. Barnes.

The shooting took place on a car platform in a train from Nashville. Mrs. Judd was returning to Double Springs, Tenn.

Mrs. Barnes boarded the train a few miles from Buffalo Valley. She calmly fired three bullets into Mrs. Judd and composedly left the train. She was arrested a short time later.

Senate Passes Eight-Hour Bill.

Washington, D. C.—The house passed, within two hours, the military academy appropriation bill, one of the smaller annual budgets. The bill carries approximately $1,035,000 for the expenses for the West Point academy during the next fiscal year.

With consideration of Senator Borah's eight-hour labor bill and the conference report on the agricultural bill occupying the senate, the chief business of that body was the passage, by a vote of 45 to 11, of the former measure.

LONG LAUDS WORK OF OHIO GOVERNOR

SOUNDS DEMOCRATIC KEYNOTE AND URGES SUPPORT FOR HARMON'S CAUSE.

Toledo, O.—In his keynote speech as temporary chairman of the Democratic state convention, George S. Long, secretary to Governor Harmon, urged the nomination of his chief for the presidency, and to that end asked the convention for its indorsement and instructions to the delegates to the national convention to support the governor. Continuing he said, in part:

The theme, the one idea to which I address myself in what I say, is this one proposition—the Democracy of Ohio has made good! Democracy as taught and practiced from the day of Thomas Jefferson will live as long as free government lives, and that will only die when we cannot or will not govern ourselves.

You come together as victors of three successive campaigns and you triumphed twice under one leader. The great citizenship of a great state never did itself so proud as when in 1910 it elected a second time by more than 100,000 plurality the dean in the college of American governors, your chief executive—Judson Harmon.

We are now nearing the close of four years' stewardship under Governor Harmon and State Treasurer Creamer. These two so well met the needs of the hour that two years later the people called them back and with them put Democrats in every post in the state house in which change was possible. These latter state officials will soon close two years of service.

It is proper here and now to go into the record and see how these Democratic servants have administered the affairs of state. That service will be the test which shall determine whether the Democratic party shall for a fourth successive time be entrusted with the control of public affairs in Ohio. I know that these Democratic officials gladly submit to this test. That they are ready to stand or fall on the record which they have made I know, too, that if they are rewarded according to that record that one of them may be the next president of the United States and the others will be renominated by this convention and re-elected next fall.

The Democratic legislature responding to a sense of duty and to meet conditions following years of legislative neglect, with the governor's help, often at his insistence and demand, wrote laws into the statute books creditable beyond the record of a generation, enacted laws under which a state board of administration now controls all the penal and charitable institutions of the state.

The powers of the state railroad commission have been broadened out so that all public utilities are under its control so far as concerns their general relations with the public.

In the field of dangerous labor a most important and useful step has been taken in the creation of a state liability board of awards providing for payment of indemnity in case of accidental injury to the employe.

The principle of the initiative and referendum is given effect and opportunity for thorough test under most favorable conditions in municipalities under the Crosser act signed by the governor. Its successful operation when demonstrated in states less populous, with social and industrial conditions less complex than in this state, can lead the way to its successful application in Ohio.

As the one act which is more familiar to you than all the others, I name the 1 per cent tax rate limit. Vital as this rate limit is it has other elements as important as the low and permanent rate, viz.: It places a limit on the officials who spend the people's money, provides a sure and wholesome check on extravagance.

Foreign corporations doing business in this state increased 74 in number and paid $32,887 more taxes in 1910 than in 1909, increased 60 in number and paid $37,681 more taxes in 1911 than in 1910, and paid a total in the three years of nearly $780,000. Ohio corporations paid as fees upon their stock issue alone in 1910, $1,215,599; in 1911, $2,380,000, an increase of $1,165,000 nearly.

Public utilities, that is railroads, steam and electric, electric light, gas, water, heating, steamship, dock, oil pipe line and such companies are required to pay a percentage upon their annual receipts. This was formerly 1 per cent but was increased in 1909 so that 1,060 of them in that year paid into the state treasury nearly $2,116,000; in 1910, 1,102 paid nearly $2,636,000, and in 1911, 1,344 paid nearly $2,833,000.

You come not only to select a state ticket but you select representation to a national convention. This is necessary in the exercise of the right as a state by its electoral college to vote for a president of the United States. This state, as does every other state in the Union, owes it to the nation to make its offering to the field of those eligible to what we deem the greatest office on earth. This is not only a privilege but a duty. The call of the states to a son of America comes as a summons which must be obeyed, not as an invitation which may be declined. For that reason, if for none other, the Democrats of this great state owe it to the Democracy of the Union to tender them the name of their great governor for consideration in Baltimore three weeks from today.

Ohio Republicans have furnished six presidents to the nation. Ohio Democrats never a one! Shall Ohio Democrats deny themselves the honor of a distinguished son who has proven his worth? Shall the political assassin continue to cut down every colossal Democrat who grows on Ohio soil? Shall you refuse to honor yourselves, your party, your state, by failing to stand at his back in the Baltimore contest?

No, rather as Ohio's champion, clad in the armor of a magnificent executive record, bid him enter the arena at Baltimore, measure swords with the favorite sons of Democracy from north, from south, from east, from west. If he loses you may be sure they felt the steel. If he wins you can follow to the White House a victor whose character is as spotless as the stars, whose ability is pre-eminent and who has never lost a battle before the people.

Five Die in Grain Well.

Cincinnati, O.—Five persons perished as the result of being overcome by gas fumes in a grain well at the dairy of Jacob Sachs in Fairmount, this city. A fireman who went into the pit to get out the bodies was also overcome. Two of the dead are women.

The dead: Mrs. Anna Espelsegge, Mrs. William Koester, Jacob Sachs, Joseph Nichoff, Robert Atkins.

Four of the victims forfeited their lives in efforts to rescue Jacob Sachs, the first victim.

Dies as Campaign Ends.

Sioux City, Iowa.—Congressman E. H. Hubbard of Sioux City, representing the Eleventh Iowa district, died suddenly from heart failure at the home of Joseph C. Kelly, editor of the Tribune. Congressman Hubbard had made a hard campaign for re-election.

Over 3,000 Miles by Horse.

Philadelphia, Pa.—Miss Alberta Claire of Sheridan, Wyo., has just completed a trip of 3,100 miles by horse.

"JIMMY" MADE IN PEN

DETECTIVES DISCOVER PRISON SUPPLIED BURGLAR TOOLS.

Find an Implement That Corresponds With Window Marks of a Columbus House in Possession of Ohlrich.

Columbus.—The "jimmy" used by John Schurtz in breaking into the residence of I. Cramer, is said to have been made in the stamp shop at the Ohio penitentiary for Guard Gustav Ohlrich, according to evidence secured by Detective Sergeant John Dorgan and Detectives Creedon and Carson. Another "jimmy," also said to have been made by a convict in the stamp shop, was found in Ohlrich's locker at the pen when the detectives searched it.

Ohlrich was arraigned in police court charged with having burglar tools in his possession. Ohlrich pleaded not guilty and his hearing was continued. Bond was fixed at $1,000.

Ohlrich's alleged connection with the burglary of the Cramer house will be explained direct to the grand jury, when the Schultz case is taken up, the burglar tool charge being the only one on which he will be arraigned in police court.

The "jimmy" recovered by the police is said to fit the marks found on the window of another house that was broken into recently. It is also claimed by the police that evidence has been secured showing that immediately after the theft of a valuable diamond from a Columbus house, Ohlrich offered a stone answering the description of the stolen one for sale, and that both he and Shultz made deposits in the bank three days after the diamond was stolen, which are believed to have been the proceeds of the sale of the stone.

Grand Jury Will be Busy.

Columbus.—The next federal grand jury will be a busy one, and there are rumors that the government will present a number of charges to it for careful probing. Assistant District Attorney Harley Burns was in Cincinnati conferring with District Attorney Sherman McPherson regarding the work of the session of court that will open on that date. The news of Mr. Burns' presence in that city came from Cincinnati. No one at the federal building knew about his visit there. It is nothing unusual for the assistant attorney to go to Cincinnati to confer with his chief upon the approach of a new term of court.

For some time the department of justice at Washington has been investigating certain alleged railroad combinations in Ohio. Early in the investigations it was known to be the intention of the attorney general to indict the corporations. When the cooperation of the Ohio Coal Operators' association was solicited, the representatives of the government that had been sent here, were told that they had but little interest in the movement if that was their object.

"But it is difficult to get evidence that will fasten the blame on individuals," replied the investigators.

"I can put my hand on one that is responsible for practically all that is complained of," said one of the operators' association officials.

Since then a new tack has been taken and O. E. Harrison, formerly of the attorney general's office here under Wade Ellis, now with Mr. Ellis in the department of justice at Washington, has spent much time in Ohio.

One of the cases to be presented to the grand jury will of course be that against A. D. Alderman, former postmaster at Marietta.

Farmers Hunt Desperado.

Springfield.—A posse of two hundred farmers headed by Sheriff Al. Lawrence and accompanied by other officers, is searching for a man accused of an attempted attack on Mrs. Otis Miller. A second attempted attack occurred later when Mrs. Cynthia Butcher of South Charleston was approached by the man.

Margery Bell Found.

Columbus.—Miss Margery Bell, a Cleveland high school girl who created a big sensation in Cleveland by running away from home when she was told she would not graduate, was located in Columbus, at the home of Mrs. C. W. Wells, 135 West Spring street.

Fatal Explosion.

Xenia.—William Kerns, aged thirty-five, married, was killed in an explosion at the plant of the Miami Powder Co. at Goes Station, near here. Kerns was the only man in the building, and it is not known what caused the explosion.

A Nightgown Chase.

Painesville.—Upon being aroused by a burglar who had entered her home, Mrs. A. Summer, sixty, seized a revolver and as the burglar fled, gave chase in her night dress through the business section of the town.

Cleveland.—Norman M. Hicks, forty-four years old, a fraternal order promoter, was sentenced to serve two years in the penitentiary by Judge Kennedy on his plea of guilty to obtaining money under false pretenses.

Delaware.—A. P. Lounsberry of Cincinnati was re-elected president of Ohio Gideons, and W. E. Helr of Cincinnati, was chosen secretary. The meeting will be held in Columbus next year.

Youngstown.—An unidentified boy is thought to have been knocked into the Mahoning river from the Market street viaduct when an automobile struck a buggy driven by J. H. Malmberry and wrecked it. Malmberry was probably fatally injured.

CON-CON DEBATES ABOUT FINISHED

WILL SETTLE SUBMISSION QUESTION THIS WEEK AND THEN ADJOURN SINE DIE.

I. & R. IS GREATLY ALTERED

Knight Proposal for Better Administration of School System and Taxation Cause Long Discussions.

Columbus.—With the final passage of the Tannehill proposal for direct state-wide primaries; adoption of a new form of the initiative and referendum, defeat of the proposition to have members of the general assembly elected on non-partisan ballots, and passage of the Knight "education" bill, which it was charged the American Book company was trying to kill, the constitutional convention, working morning, afternoon and night, practically completed Wednesday all of its work, except the determination of the manner of submitting its work to the people.

One of the last things the convention did, Wednesday night, was to decline the invitation extended by the city of Cincinnati, to meet in that city for its final session. The sending of regrets to Cincinnati was voted right after the convention had accepted the invitation, and was a distinct disappointment to the Cincinnatians who had counted on having the distinction of bringing the convention to that city even for a day. It was found, after the invitation had been accepted that only 57 delegates were certain of going. Piqued at the lack of interest Judge Peck of the Cincinnati delegation suggested that the convention send regrets. This was done.

Will Quit Saturday.

The present plan of the convention is to decide method of submission during Friday and Saturday and finally cease work Saturday. Many delegates believe that the convention should adjourn Saturday for several days before finally quitting, lest some mistake be found that could not be rectified were the convention to disband Saturday. It could not then reconvene.

The Knight proposal, providing for a more clearly-stated state control of the public school system, and for the right of city school districts by referendum vote, to determine the size and organization of their school boards, caused prolonged and spicy debate. Echoes of the old-time fight between the Ohio State university on the one side, and Ohio and Miami colleges on the other were unexpectedly heard, as they have been heard many times in the halls of the legislature. Professor Elson of the faculty of Ohio university, charged that the Knight proposal would allow the state to build up Ohio State at the expense of the other two so-called state universities. Professor Knight of Columbus called the assumption wholly unwarranted, but lest it might cause too much friction he finally consented to an amendment that will obviate the Elson fear.

Reconsidered and Passed.

This, however, was after the Elson faction, by combination with other unfriendly interests, had once defeated the measure. It was reconsidered and passed during the Wednesday night session. Whisperings that the American Book company had lobbyists on the ground to defeat the measure were outspoken on the convention floor. Professor Knight said that he had been told during the early life of the proposal that the American Book company would kill it, if possible. Other delegates brought into the discussion the name of Mary Ellen Lee. Professor Elson and Judge Marriott told the convention that they believed Mrs. Lee's statement that she did not represent the American Book company.

Judge Marriott, in moving to reconsider, said he understood the American Book company was opposed to the proposal, which would seem to indicate it had some merit.

Professor Knight took a direct slap at the office of the state school commissioner when he said: "This state has been circularized from one end to another by statements regarding the measure that are absolutely unwarranted and untrue."

Non-Partisan Plan Fails.

The effort of those who wanted a constitutional amendment to compel legislators to be elected without party designation, failed by a vote of 56 to 49. The supporters of the idea first tried to tack it to the initiative and referendum, but desisted, expecting to make it a part of the direct primary proposal. However, late Wednesday, the author of that proposal took the floor against the amendment and it was lost.

Adopt New I. and R.

The adoption of the new I. and R. proposal practically cleared the decks for the convention. The new proposal is the result of a day's jockeying by its advocates. It was not until President Bigelow, at the head of a committee of seven, worked out the redraft that the convention was ready for final action.

The proposal which passed provides that 3 per cent. of the electors may present any law to the legislature. If the legislature refuses to act, or if the measure is mutilated by hostile amendments, an additional 3 per cent. of the electors may petition and have a vote upon the original form of the measure, either with or without any of the amendments offered by the legislature.

On the reconstructed I. and R. proposal, President Bigelow said: "The plan avoids the perplexing problem of competing ballot features. It also has the merit that if friends of the measure agree that the legislature has made wise amendments they may let it go at that."

Differs from Old.

The new proposal differs somewhat from the original on the question of percentages. Under the redrafted measure amendments to the constitution can be secured by petition of 10 per cent of the voters instead of 12. Proposed laws can be initiated to the legislature on petition of 3 per cent of the voters. If the voters are not satisfied with the action of the legislature a supplementary petition of an additional 3 per cent may be filed and the law as originally petitioned for or amended by the legislature, can be submitted to the direct vote of the people.

The original proposal provided for the indirect initiative on petition of 6 per cent. A referendum vote can be taken on any law on petition of 6 per cent. The use of the I. and R. to secure the classification of property or the single tax is prohibited. These provisions are left unchanged in the redrafted proposal.

Previous to the adoption of the I. and R. the convention by a decisive vote defeated the amendment to elect members of the legislature on a non-partisan ballot.

$500 Exemption a Change.

Personal property will be exempted from taxation to the extent of $500 if the people ratify the taxation amendment to be submitted to them by the constitutional convention. The increase of the personal property exemption from $200 to $500 was one of the few new features added to the taxation proposal by the convention before final adoption of the proposal Tuesday. The new feature was secured by Delegate Elson of Athens county, who pleaded that the convention do something for the small property owners. He was aided by Judge Peck of Hamilton county and others.

Advocates of the uniform rule in taxation, as now provided for in the Ohio constitution, received a big fright during the taxation battle Tuesday by the near victory of the advocates of the idea of submitting the uniform rule and classification principle to the people as alternative propositions. The vote was 60 for dual submission and 58 against.

As it finally went through, the taxation proposal continues the uniform rule, but authorizes income, inheritance, franchise and mineral production taxes. It restores the tax on public bonds, now exempted. Advocates of exemption tried desperately Tuesday to bring back the exemption, but failed to muster enough strength. In view of the proposed issue of state bonds for good roads, one effort was made to secure the exemption of state bonds alone, but this effort also failed.

Reminders of Old Rome.

An important archaeological discovery has been made at Brindisi, where the remains of ancient Roman buildings have been found on the seashore in the locality known as St. Apollinare. The ruins have been identified as belonging to Roman wells which collected the neighboring hill waters and were used as a fountain. The adjacent remains of a Roman villa have been identified as the famous villa of Lenio Flaccus, Cicero's friend. Cicero occasionally visited the villa.

Discouraging Progress.

"You're not doing as well in your mathematics as you ought to be, Johnny," said Mrs. Lapsling; "at your age your cousin Horace was half way through differential calipers."

Gets More Peace, Anyway.

Frequent Failing.

That Tired Feeling.

Johnny (very tired)—Auntie, my eyelids won't stay up any longer.

HIRAM D. PECK.

Judge Peck of Cincinnati, as Chairman of the Constitutional Convention Committee on Judiciary and Bill of Rights has been a potent force in shaping the several proposals relating to the judicial system and its betterment.

With sentiment verging toward the plan, which contemplates the elimination of all circles and makes provision for an affirmative and a negative vote on every proposal submitted to the people, there may be less of a contest in the convention over the form of ballot than was anticipated. It is said, on what seems to be good authority, that more than a majority of members of the convention have declared they will stand against the circle plan.

The Cockroach and Consumption.

Experiments have been made which tend to show that the common cockroach is able by contamination with its faces to bring about the souring of milk, to infect food and milk with intestinal bacilli, to transmit the consumption bacillus, and to spread and transmit other germs and molds. These facts, taken in conjunction with the life habits of the insect, lead to the conclusion that the cockroach is able to, and may possibly, play a small part in the spreading of consumption and in the transmission of pus producing organisms; that the insect is in all probability an active agent in the souring of milk kept in kitchens and larders; and that it is undoubtedly an important factor in the distribution of molds to food and to numerous other articles, especially when they are kept in dark cupboards and cellars where cockroaches abound.

Steamer Turns Turtle.

An exciting story was told at an inquiry at Caxton hall recently into the loss of the steamer Eastern Counties, which turned turtle about four miles south of the Spurn Lightship, several lives being lost. It was stated that there was a large deck cargo, and that the steamer was unsteady. Off the Humber she took a pronounced list. The master ordered the engines to be slowed, called all hands on deck, ordered everyone to take lifebelts, and sounded the whistle as a signal of distress. The helm was starboarded with the idea of beaching the vessel on the south shore, but she turned right over and floated bottom up. Some of those on board climbed over the port rail and got on the bottom of the ship as she turned turtle.

Women Win High Honors.

Once more women have triumphed at the Royal academy. For the second time in three years the gold medal has been won by a female student, while of the fourteen prizes offered no less than ten have been carried off by women. In presenting these and congratulating Miss Margaret Williams on her brilliant achievement the president of the Royal academy paid high tribute to the perseverance and the talent of women artists; but again, we ask, why is it not recognized by the Royal Academy of Arts in the obvious way? In every way women show their fitness to compete with men for the honor of admission to associateship and to election among the forty, yet still they stand without the gate.—Lady's Pictorial.

Women and World Progress.

Miss Harriet L. Keeler, the new superintendent of Cleveland schools, holds that "the world has gone as far as man can take it alone. If it progresses further it will have to be with the help of women. We are sufficiently civilized now to recognize the value of the women's point of view and after all it is that point of view, rather than the woman herself, that is valuable." Two years ago, at the age of 63, and after teaching 38 years, Miss Keeler resigned. She was brought from retirement as a nonpartisan to settle a disturbed state of affairs in Cleveland's public school system.

Weighty Trivialities.

New Aviation Record.

An aviation record for the Southern Hemisphere has been put up by Mr. W. E. Hart, the Australian bird man, with a flight of 47 miles from Penrith to Sydney in 65 minutes. At one time Hart's biplane was 6,000 feet up. He encountered several air pockets in which his machine suddenly dropped a couple of fathoms, but his greatest difficulty was in negotiating the high fences and telegraph poles and lines at the Agricultural Society's ground in Sydney, where he alighted. He accomplished this, however, with admirable nerve and skill.

A Puzzle.

Why is it that the average man is always willing to spend $6 worth of his time trying to get a 40-cent reduction in his gas bill?

Better a Smile Than a Frown.

The Fruits of Creeds

By HENRY F. COPE

THAT which is true of men is true also of their creeds in at least one respect—they must be known by their fruits, by the effects which they produce. The final test of a creed is not whether it remains in precisely the form in which it was held by those who claimed for it a special revelation, but whether it is producing worthy results today.

How much better is our day for the creeds proclaimed to it? What effects are coming from the defense of the faith so far as the problems of human misery and need are concerned? The solemn words have been recited and their significances expounded for many a thousand Sundays from many a pulpit. Is life richer, sweeter, kindlier? Are men juster? Is the hypocrite hated and the oppressor cast down as a result?

The creeds have shed more blood and cost more human treasure than any other modern motive or cause. They must justify themselves in the life of today. Unless some one shall show us the vast human importance of knowing exactly the intricacies of ancient and subtle philosophies we may learn to ignore them all and go straight ahead with the business of trying to make this a better world to live in.

It is easy for many in sonorous tones to recite their faith, with nice attention to the least syllable and with a sense of valiant willingness to defend its last iota and then to go out and grind down the face of the poor, make themselves strong out of the weakness of others, and turn the heart of a devil to the appeals of common humanity.

Lack the Essential Things.

The trouble with such confessions of religion is that they have not enough contact with real living, not enough concern about real things to make a man feel their bearing on his life. They are guilty of limitation to speculations and analysis of the Deity instead of indicating conduct, inspiring to right relations and noble doing of duty in and amongst humanity.

The market and the shop are the places where the real creed is written; all the rest, spoken, sung, or printed, may be but empty words. A man's actual beliefs are wrought out in the stress of life. He may take the name of the Most High on his lips with accents of reverence and yet demonstrate by his dark creed that he believes only in the worth and power of the devil.

As we lay our hands on one another, as we mark our ways through life, as we leave the impress of ourselves on others, we are writing our real creeds. High heaven laughs at our foolish mouthings of words and watches the way we go and the works we do, for these prove the springs of our lives, these reveal the things we deeply, truly believe.

If a man says "I believe in God the Father," then he will surely live as one who knows that he is in a great family, that the universe is a home and not a jungle; that in the end truth and right and goodness must prevail; that the only way of living is that which brings us all up closer to the face and glory of that which we call God.

Make Sure of the Foundation.

It would be a good thing to turn from looking back over our creeds to make sure of their foundations—to take a good, long, clear look to make sure of their fruitage. Have they any effect on my life? If they have not they are drying up the very heart within me every time I utter empty words.

Ask, if there is any good in me, to what creed is it due? To that which I repeat in the name of the religion or to that which I am working out through life's lessons? What are the things I cherish most? What is the purpose of all my striving? Where lie the deep springs of conduct? To answer such questions is to uncover our dominant beliefs.

The creed to cherish is that which gives strength for worthy living; that which impels to the realization of our best at any cost, that which bears the fruits of godlike kindness, love, and hope for all our fellows; that which best helps us to make true, present, and actual the dreams and passions that lay behind the ancient words of faith and bring to pass the good of all our great family here.

The Higher Vision.

In the love of the temporal that threatens to crowd out spiritual capacities, and the sense of a life to come it is something to know that the Gospel of Jesus lifted the vision higher, that he ennobled this world with the glory of the next, that he made time eternal and gave the duties and the responsibilities of time the significance and the determining value of eternity. If he had not unsealed his sepulcher, if he had not given the world an example and denied it the principle through which personal holiness is attainable, he would have left the mystery of life as insoluble as it had been before his coming, and humanity would have continued its weary tread-mill of defeat without consolation or hope of final victory. The heart of the great Christian world beats high with hope and rejoices in the assurance of eternal life proclaimed in the message "Christ is risen."

This world is so full of a number of things,
I'm sure we should all be as happy as kings.
—R. L. Stevenson.

I was never happy till I gave up trying to be a great man, and was willing to be nobody.—Payson.

Physicians Recommend Castoria

CASTORIA has met with pronounced favor on the part of physicians, pharmaceutical societies and medical authorities. It is used by physicians with results most gratifying. The extended use of Castoria is unquestionably the result of three facts: First—The indisputable evidence that it is harmless: Second—That it not only allays stomach pains and quiets the nerves, but assimilates the food: Third—It is an agreeable and perfect substitute for Castor Oil. It is absolutely safe. It does not contain any Opium, Morphine, or other narcotic and does not stupefy. It is unlike Soothing Syrups, Bateman's Drops, Godfrey's Cordial, etc. This is a good deal for a Medical Journal to say. Our duty, however, is to expose danger and record the means of advancing health. The day for poisoning innocent children through greed or ignorance ought to end. To our knowledge, Castoria is a remedy which produces composure and health, by regulating the system—not by stupefying it—and our readers are entitled to the information.—Hall's Journal of Health.

Letters from Prominent Physicians addressed to Chas. H. Fletcher.

Dr. B. Halstead Scott, of Chicago, Ills., says: "I have prescribed your Castoria often for infants during my practice, and find it very satisfactory."

Dr. William Belmont, of Cleveland, Ohio, says: "Your Castoria stands first in its class. In my thirty years of practice I can say I never have found anything that so filled the place."

Dr. J. H. Taft, of Brooklyn, N. Y., says: "I have used your Castoria and found it an excellent remedy in my household and private practice for many years. The formula is excellent."

Dr. R. J. Hamlen, of Detroit, Mich., says: "I prescribe your Castoria extensively, as I have never found anything to equal it for children's troubles. I am aware that there are imitations in the field, but I always see that my patients get Fletcher's."

Dr. Wm. J. McCrann, of Omaha, Neb., says: "As the father of thirteen children I certainly know something about your great medicine, and aside from my own family experience I have in my years of practice found Castoria a popular and efficient remedy in almost every home."

Dr. J. R. Clausen, of Philadelphia, Pa., says: "The name that your Castoria has made for itself in the tens of thousands of homes blessed by the presence of children, scarcely needs to be supplemented by the endorsement of the medical profession, but I, for one, most heartily endorse it and believe it an excellent remedy."

Dr. R. M. Ward, of Kansas City, Mo., says: "Physicians generally do not prescribe proprietary preparations, but in the case of Castoria my experience, like that of many other physicians, has taught me to make an exception. I prescribe your Castoria in my practice because I have found it to be a thoroughly reliable remedy for children's complaints. Any physician who has raised a family, as I have, will join me in heartiest recommendation of Castoria."

WHEN THE ROMANCE FADED

Plain-Spoken Husband Came to the Point With a Few Words of Unvarnished Truth.

Congressman Jim Mann was on his way back from Chicago, and couldn't help hearing the conversation of the couple in the section right behind his. They looked like newly married folks, says Mack's National Monthly, but were not on their honeymoon, as Mann learned by deduction. The woman laid down a newspaper she had been reading and said to her husband:

"Do you know, I wish I had one of these affinities. Oh, I think it would be just gr-a-n-d to sit on a rock with somebody and have him rave about the incomparable golden color of my hair and tell me that my eyes were the most beautiful in the whole world, and——"

"Uh, huh," said the husband, yawning.

"And that the delicate pink of my cheeks had been painted there by the angels, and that he couldn't live without me. O-oh, I think an affinity like that would be——"

"'Taint an affinity you want," interrupted her husband. "What you seem to want is a plain, old-fashioned liar."

FEARED AN OPERATION.

Found a Wonderful Cure Without It.

James Greenmea, 142 East Adams St., Ionia, Mich., says: "What I suffered with kidney trouble I can never express. It was nothing short of torture. I was in bed for three months with terrific pain in my back, an awful urinary weakness, dizziness, nervousness and depression. I rapidly lost 45 pounds. My doctor advised an operation but I would not submit. Gravel was forming and the urine had almost stopped. I began taking Doan's Kidney Pills and after using one box, I passed a stone half an inch long. I continued passing smaller stones until forty had been ejected. I recovered then and was soon as well as ever."

The Bible Is Many Books.

There are few persons who understand the true origin and history of the Bible. As a matter of fact the Bible is not one, but many books. The word is derived from the Greek biblia, which means "books." In the same way we speak of the scriptures or "writings," both in the plural.

In "The Scripture of Truth," a remarkably successful book by Sidney Collett, the author tells of the origin, history, symbols, alleged errors and contradictions in the Bible.

A star's job is a hard one. The mental strain is even greater than the physical. For what he undergoes the fabulous salaries are not fabulous.

Before going into details let us define a star—the ball player's definition.

"A star is any player who, through individual excellence, achieves a reputation for brilliant work, thus attracting fans to the park to see him play."

He is a star only so long as his performances stand out. He is paid the salary of a star as long as his reputation brings fans to the stands and money to the box office. The day that sees the waning of his sensationalism also sees the waning of his salary.—Edward Lyell Fox in Outing.

WHEN LINCOLN WAS ABUSED.

The North American Review has done the public a service by reprinting from the files of metropolitan newspapers some political utterances following the first nomination of Abraham Lincoln

From the New York Herald:

May 19, 1860—The Republican convention at Chicago has nominated Abraham Lincoln of Illinois for president of the United States—a third-rate western lawyer, poorer than even poor Pierce. They pass over Seward, Chase, and Banks, who are statesmen and able men, and they take a fourth-rate lecturer, who cannot speak good grammar, and who, to raise the wind, delivers his hackneyed, illiterate compositions at $200 apiece. Our readers recollect that this peripatetic politician visited New York two or three months ago on his financial tour, when, in return for the most unmitigated trash, interlarded with coarse and clumsy jokes, he filled his empty pockets with dollars coined out of Republican fanaticism.

May 22, 1860—The candidate for president, Abraham Lincoln, is an uneducated man—a vulgar village politician, without any experience worth mentioning in the practical duties of statesmanship, and only noted for some very unpopular votes which he gave while a member of congress. The comparison between Seward and this illiterate western boor is odious—it is as Hyperion to a satyr.

From the Albany Atlas and Argus:

May 21, 1860—Mr. Lincoln was first heard of in politics a year ago last fall, when limping with wounds and howling with anguish, he was driven through the state of Illinois by Douglas and defeated with the tacit approval of the majority of his own party, and with the publicly expressed gratulations of Greeley, Weed, and others. Last spring he made his debut in this state as an orator, and commenced charging for his speeches at the rate of $100 apiece, and was forced to desist amid such public expressions of contempt that he may be said to have been fairly hissed out of the state. He has never held public office of any credit, and is not known except as a slang-whanging stump speaker, of a class with which every party teems, and of which all parties are ashamed.

From the Boston Post:

May 21, 1860—Lincoln has merely a talent for demagogue appeal that was thought to be worth in New England $50 or $100 a speech by those who hired him; but some who heard him were surprised that he should be considered anywhere a great man. He can only be the fanatical tool of the fanatical host he will lead on. This is the truth of the case, let the blowers of his party swell him as they may into tremendous dimensions. By this means, and by imitating in every locality the trickery and demagogism that won Lincoln his local popularity, and at length the nomination, his partisans may attempt to secure his election. But such is the intelligence of the country that this attempt must fail.

It is not necessary to draw the moral. But as one reads the vituperation of another eminent American by metropolitan newspapers to-day one wonders whether fifty years hence their excesses will be quoted as a warning and example.

A THOUSAND MILLION DOLLARS A YEAR!

This is the amount that the protected industries wring from the American people annually, over and above a fair profit on capital actually invested, according to a statement of Senator Gilbert M. Hitchcock of Nebraska. And Senator Hitchcock is not given to making wild or extravagant statements.

"I believe it is within reason to say," said Senator Hitchcock, at the conclusion of a speech he made on the subject, "that a careful examination of the profits from all classes of privileged wealth in this country would reveal that the protected industries exact from the people [illegible] millions a year, over and above a fair profit. The fact that these industries have a monopoly enables them to do this."

The steel trust alone gets $300,000,000 annually in excess of a fair profit. This monopoly does an annual business of three thousand millions of dollars a year, and it is estimated that without the tariff, the steel trust would have to sell its profits for 10 per cent less than it now sells them, and ten per cent of three thousand million is three hundred thousand. Every man, woman and child of the 92,000,000 in this country then, pays an annual tribute of $3.50 each to this trust, over and above what they would have to pay if the tariff were taken from steel.

What is the effect of this extortion? One effect has been to create a horde of mushroom millionaires. Another effect has been a gradual centralization of the nation's wealth into a few hands, with a consequent intensifying of the struggle for existence among the masses. Still another effect is seen in the vast number of strikes. Within the last 25 years 36,756 strikes have been declared in this country, most of them for higher wages. These strikes have involved a total of 6,000,000 workers, who, with their families, were driven to hunger and suffering.

While the steel trust enjoys a complete monopoly, due to the tariff, it finds time to compete with other nations for steel trade outside of the United States. Last year the steel makers of this country sold $230,000,000 worth of steel abroad, in direct competition with the steel makers of Europe, thus proving conclusively that a tariff on steel is not needed to "protect American workmen," since American workmen do not get any more than their fellows abroad. The tariff is simply a barrier put up to enable the steel trust to gouge millions out of the home consumer.

And in the meantime, the Democratic bill to lower the tariff on steel, having passed the House, lies in the Republican Senate, still unacted upon.

CRIME THAT IS SOCIAL

We are endowed by our Creator with moral faculties, which indicate to us not alone the true way to our own happiness, but also our proper relation to society. To make that a crime or misdemeanor by human law which is not repugnant to the moral faculties, is not only to lessen respect for human law, but it is to confuse distinctions between right and wrong. St. Thomas of Aquinas said that "human law is law only in virtue of its accordance with right reason; and it is thus manifest that it flows from the eternal law. And in so far as it deviates from right reason it is called an unjust law. In such cases it is no law at all law, but rather a species of violence."

We hear a great deal of the crimes committed by the individual against society, but very little about the crimes committed by society against the individual. The crime that flows from poverty is attributable to conditions imposed upon the individual by society. God created man with certain physical wants, on the satisfaction of which depend not alone the maintenance of his physical life, but also the development of his mental and moral faculties. But these wants can only be satisfied by man's labor. It is only by the application of his labor to land that man can produce the things he wants. Naturally men have a right to use their physical powers for the satisfaction of their physical wants. Therefore, the equal right of all men to the use of land is clear and unmistakable. It is a right declared by the very fact of their existence. It would be absurd to assume that some men have a right on earth and others have no right. We are all here in obedience to the will of God, therefore, we all have an equal right to the use of land, because without its use we cannot exist.

But society steps in and denies that right. It says to the vast majority of the human race that they are here by sufferance; that in order to live they must pay the men who have secured legal ownership of the land for the privilege. From this fundamental social wrong spring all the wrongs which menace modern civilization, which condemn the anthracite miner to a pitiable advance of 5 per cent in wages, while the land owners reap dividends of 40 to 50 per cent, which crowd families of five and six into a single room in a noisome tenement in the sight of hundreds of acres of idle land. Poverty and pauperism are not attributable to foreign immigration and the introduction of labor-saving machinery; they are the direct and necessary results of the monopolization of land. Now, the only way to remedy a fundamental wrong is to remove its cause. Therefore, the only way to abolish poverty and the crime, ignorance and brutishness that flow from it, is to destroy the monopoly of land by the remission of all taxes except a single tax on the value of land.

At the beginning of society, before the need for government arises, land has no value. But as population increases and the co-operation of individual labor powers develop an extensive industrial system, the need for some form of government arises, with its need for public revenue. As the need for public revenue arises, so does the value of land. The need for public revenue and the value of land arise at the same time and are due to the same causes. This association is invariable. The value of the things produced by labor tend to diminish, since the closer and broader co-operation of individual powers and capacities tends to lessen the cost of production. But the value of land rises higher and higher. At the time of the formation of New York city's government land was bought for a few cents an acre; today it is worth millions of dollars an acre. This enormous increase in the value of land is due to the causes which require vast public expenditures for fire, water, police and health departments, public schools and hospitals, jails and penitentiaries, judges, mayors and other public officials, in fact the numerous things essential to the health, safety, convenience and comfort of large cities. Is it not evident that here is the source of public revenue, the fund which the Creator provided to meet public expenditures? Here is a natural, invariable tendency by which, as the need for public revenue increases, at the same time and from the same causes the value of land increases. Do not the mandates of justice and the dictates of expediency impel us to take it for public purposes and common uses?

A DISGRACEFUL EXHIBIT

The Ohio primaries have practically terminated the most disgraceful, the most dishonorable and the most ridiculous political campaign ever before witnessed in this or any other civilized country. The president, the chosen representative of the people, the custodian of national honor, the exponent of national character, and his predecessor, in a mad scramble for political power, resorted to epithets so coarse and to personal abuse so shameless that the American republic has been made a byword of reproach among the progressive nations of the world. Throughout the whole disgraceful canvass a political principle, an industrial problem, an economic situation, a social condition, were never referred to. The great solemn fact that this government was instituted to "establish justice, insure domestic tranquility, provide for the common defense, promote the general welfare and secure the blessings of liberty to ourselves and our posterity," was entirely lost sight of. The rights and the interests of the people were completely ignored. It was not the common defense for which provision was to be made, but the defense of two men who had shamefully betrayed the most sacred trust ever confided to human hands, not the general welfare, but the personal welfare of self-confessed political opportunists that was to be promoted.

Why should the people's welfare or the nation's prosperity be given serious consideration when the political fate of a Taft and a Roosevelt was at stake?

STILL EMBALMING BEEF

Almost simultaneously with the charges made in Congress by Congressman Nelson that the Department of Agriculture was "letting up" in the meat inspection standard, comes the discovery, at Philadelphia, that 21,000 pounds of "embalmed" beef had been put aboard the United States cruiser Prairie, which was about to proceed to Cuba to help quell the new revolution in that country.

This tainted food was detected, not by the regular meat inspectors, but by special inspectors assigned by the Navy department to test that particular consignment of meat. The naval inspectors described this meat which was intended for the American soldiers and sailors as "filthy and diseased."

Solicitor George P. McCabe, the Wilson underling who drove Dr. Wiley out of the government service, grew very indignant when Congressman Nelson first asserted that the meat inspectors of the agricultural department were not doing their duty by the public.

But the Philadelphia discovery shows that Nelson knew what he was talking about.

RANDOM THOUGHTS

By Tom, Dick and Harry.

At a mission service in Chicago, Father Fagan, a Catholic priest, said to a company of young men:—"I would not have you all vote one way. We do not want a Catholic party in this country. Vote for a Republican, if you believe him to be a good man. Above all, BE GOOD MEN YOURSELVES."

This is about the best piece of advice we have seen in many a day. Politics is one thing and religion is another. The principles back of both need not conflict, the trouble comes when one attempts to mix creed and the affairs of government.

Serious People

We are a great people. Great because we as individuals are independent sons-of-guns. We have developed the ego until every one of us have opinions on every single theme under the sun. We know all about it—can tell the one one-thousandth of an inch where the other is wrong and we are right—and we don't hesitate to tell him about it either. We either like or don't like a thing and then being real serious, we take the next natural step, either wag our ears or kick like a mule. It keeps things agitated and lively. Makes 'em grow big like a house or an Irish wake. And it's our seriousness that does it all. It gives us a million rights to protect and, by heck, we're going to hustle to see that no one even chips a corner off one of them. If they do we want to pick them up Everett True fashion and toss them out the car window—a mighty good thing to prevent staleness.

At the same time how St. Peter must chuckle as he looks down on our antics. One little mite of humanity agitating himself because another little mite wears purple socks that the first little mite thinks belong exclusively to Mabel when she kicks rings in the air behind the foot lights. He resents the discord and aided perhaps by a pain in his tummy, known as dyspepsia, he throws sixteen fits.

One fellow wants to cut a foot or two off Bank street and forgets to cross his fingers. Forty full blown men, hundreds of women and their children bite holes in the atmosphere. A serious thing, that foot of dirt, and no man can trifle with it without having a court injunction hurled at his coconut. We don't propose to permit it, or we do propose, and pro or con, we have kittens over it. Oh, but we are serious and how the above mentioned St. Peter must giggle. We'd bet automobiles against toads that he's as fat as butter.

Fire and Pines of One Family.

Fir trees differ from pines only in the fact that the leaves grow singly and the scales of the cones are smooth, round and thin.

ORDINANCE No. 217

An ordinance fixing the compensation of the Plumbing and Sewer Inspector of the Village of Fairport, Ohio.

Be it ordained by the Council of the Village of Fairport, State of Ohio:

Section 1. That sections six and seven (6-7) of ordinance No. 201 as passed November 14, 1911 be and the same hereby are amended, to read as follows:

Sec. 6. Every person desiring to obtain a permit to do plumbing or to build a sewer shall submit a plan, prepared as the Inspector of Plumbing and Sewers may direct, which shall show the location, kind, sizes and specifications of all traps, vents, fixtures, waste and supply pipes, soil and drain pipes and all other particulars of the proposed improvement of sanitary importance and as may be required by the Inspector of Plumbing and Sewers. Every person desiring to obtain a plumbing or sewer tapping permit shall deposit with the Inspector of Plumbing and Sewers the sum of One Dollar to be by him credited to the cost of permits and inspection.

Sec. 7. The Inspector of Plumbing and Sewers shall receive from the amounts deposited and paid with him, compensation as follows: For each plumbing permit, the sum of twenty-five cents; for each sewer tapping permit the sum of twenty-five cents, for each inspection of plumbing or of a sewer, the sum of twenty-five cents, for each time called when the work is not ready for inspection the sum of fifty cents, for each certificate of completion, the sum of twenty-five cents. Any balance due or to be returned shall be paid at the time the certificate of completion is issued.

Sec. 2. That said original sections 6 and 7 of Ordinance No. 201 be and the same hereby are repealed.

Sec. 3. This ordinance shall be in force and take effect from and after its passage and legal publication.

Passed April 30, 1912.

THE GERMAN COACH STALLION

PROKURIST

Prokurist is a dark bay horse, very stylish and active, weighs 1,500 lbs. As an individual he has proven to be the greatest sire of his kind in this locality. Good mare owners should not fail to see him before deciding on their choice.

He was formerly owned by the Munson Coach Horse Company. Will make the season of 1912, at the farm of John Anderson, on Johnny Cake Ridge, 2 miles south of Painesville, except Thursdays, when he will stand at the farm of F. S. Colborn, one-half mile south of Lane Station. No business done on Sunday.

Service fee, $15.00 for a standing colt. Special prices for two or more mares for any one party. All possible care taken to avoid accidents, but mares bred at owner's risk and must be returned as requested by manager.

All of said bonds, together with interest coupons, are issued for the purpose of improving highways leading into said Township, and are issued under authority of the General Laws of the State of Ohio, particularly Sections 3295, 3939, 3940, 3941 and 3942 of the General Code of Ohio, and in accordance with a resolution duly adopted by the Trustees of said Township at their regular meeting on the 27th day of May, 1912, entitled "To issue bonds for the purpose of improving highways leading into the Township of Willoughby, Lake County, Ohio."

All of said bonds to draw interest from the date of sale at the rate of 4 1-2 per cent per annum, payable semi-annually on the 1st days of April and of October of each year on and after the 1st day of October, 1912. Said bonds and interest thereon shall be payable at the Willoughby Branch of The Cleveland Trust Company, at Willoughby, Ohio. Said bonds will be sold to the highest bidder for not less than par and accrued interest. All of said bonds shall be delivered to the highest and best bidder at the office of said Trustees in the Village of Willoughby, Ohio. All of the above described bonds shall be dated the day of sale, and, together with interest coupons, shall be issued and signed according to law; said interest coupons shall have the signature of the Clerk lithographed thereon.

All bids must state the number of bonds bid for, and the gross amount of the bid and accrued interest to date of delivery. All bids to be accompanied by a certified check on some solvent bank located in Lake County other than the one making the bid, payable to the Treasurer of said Township, for 10 per cent of the amount of the bonds bid for, upon the condition that if the bid is accepted the bidder will receive and pay for such bonds within ten days from and after the time of the award, said check to be retained by said Township if such condition is not fulfilled.

Said bids will be opened and publicly read and sale of said bonds will be made at the regular meeting of the Trustees of said Township held on the 6th day of July, 1912, at 8:30 o'clock P. M., at the usual place of meeting at the Town Hall in the Village of Willoughby, Ohio.

The Trustees reserve the right to reject any and all bids.

By C. C. JENKINS, Clerk.

IN GETTING AN ELECTRIC SUCTION CLEANER

DON'T BE DECEIVED and buy one with a cheap motor, a small vertical shaft which will soon wear and drop, especially when in connection with a small fan which must necessarily be run at high speed in order to get sufficient power. Such machines make a neat appearance and may do good work while new, but are SHORT LIVED.

When you buy the MAGIC ELECTRIC you have a cleaner with a five year guarantee certificate, a motor designed especially for it by the WESTINGHOUSE ELECTRIC MFG. CO., having a large horizontal shaft, a good sized fan which even at low speed gives sufficient power.

The MAGIC is the most simple in construction, having no pumps, valves, connecting rods, gears, belts, etc., to give out.

After three years' experience with various makes, we sell the BEST the market affords.

MENTOR

The forty-fourth annual Conference of the Cleveland District ministers, is to be held in the Methodist church here on Tuesday and Wednesday. The Sabbath School class of young ladies of whom Mrs. T. D. Morley is the teacher, are to serve a twenty-five cent dinner at noon on Wednesday, proceeds to go to Foreign Missions. There are only about thirty clergymen in this district, but there will be a chance to study the different needs of rural and city congregations, and what is better an opportunity for getting acquainted.

Mr. Howard Smith, who has just graduated from Case School, will leave for his home in Colorado Springs, on Thursday of this week, much to the regret of the many friends he has made in Mentor while spending his vacations down here, during the past three years.

Rev. John Morton was called back to Mentor for the funeral of Mr. F. E. Higgins, which was held at his home on Monday morning, after which the body was taken to Conneaut and buried by the side of his mother, as their home used to be there. Mr. Morton is now stationed at Hubbard, Ohio, and has a much larger work than when here.

It was a mistake that the Horace Andrews family had arrived from their New York winter home, as they were not expected until Saturday afternoon, although the servants had previously come on and made the house at "Primrose Hill" all ready. Mrs. Andrews has recently made the village library a present of a fine "Bas-Relief" of President J. A. Garfield, which now hangs in the main library room.

Mrs. Blish, accompanied by her three daughters, Mrs. Ed Parchall of Akron, Mrs. Ed Sawyer and Mrs. Will Sawyer of Mentor, were guests of Mrs. E. J. Dickey and her daughter, Mrs. Olsever in Willoughby for the day, Saturday.

Mr. J. C. Jackson has just completed a handsome cement garage, the blocks furnished by the Arthur Andrews firm here.

A short driving rain fell most of Sunday afternoon, since when it has been cold enough again for furnace fires, and the coughing and other signs of a severe winter still remain.

The electric car Stop No. 58 has been moved farther west in order that it might be in front of the ticket and freight offices in the new block, though there is considerable fault found with the change, as the street is narrow at that point, and with so many automobiles all the time buzzing past, it seems indeed to be a very dangerous place.

The address for Decoration Day was held in the Disciple church, and was given by Mr. Schauffner. The ranks of the G. A. R. are very fast thinning out, although they have been recruited by Young Army Boys from the Willoughby and Kirtland Camps, all meeting here.

Mr. Irving Garfield of Boston, his wife and two little daughters, are at "Lawnfield" the Garfield home, for their summer visit.

Fishing parties are all the rage here now, and "straw rides" to the lake will begin about next week, after the youngsters realize that good old vacation time is really here again.

Miss Martha Turkle of Hubbard, accompanied her uncle home last week and upon returning home, persuaded Miss Ida Morkle to go back with her for a little visit there, and they left here on Saturday last.

Our Methodist choir were called on to give a "graduation concert" in Kirtland on Friday of last week, for the Kirtland school commencement, which they did, everything passing off nicely and to the entire satisfaction of everybody interested.

Miss Marjorie Jackett leaves here [illegible] where she [illegible] to spend the summer vacation with relatives.

In riding over to Willoughby from here, one is surprised to see the great number of new peach orchards that have been set out during the last two years, most all of which are doing well. The largest of them all belongs to the "Goodhold" farm, owned by Mr. Holden, the proprietor of the Hollenden hotel in Cleveland. This farm will be remembered by your old subscribers as the Dr. Robinson place or farther back as the "Goodell" farm.

Miss Ruby Miller spent Saturday with friends in the city. Mr. L. S. Miller, her brother, is off on a hunting and fishing trip at present thereby taking his vacation early.

We understand that Mrs. Dore Hart Groesbeck was married one day last week to Mr. Frank Soothe of Kirtland.

Parties are drilling on the O. C. Raynolds farm in West Mentor, hoping to find natural gas.

Mrs. T. D. Morley leaves this week for a visit with relatives and old friends in Galesburgh, Ill., where she used to attend school when a young girl.

Mr. Ed Coville died Saturday evening at his home in South Mentor of some throat trouble; funeral Tuesday, we understand.

There is great complaint here about the scarcity of hired help of all kinds. The day laborers want two dollars a day, and boys think they should have about as much, while none of them care a "rap" how much they do, or how well they do it, all the thought seeming to be to get through, get their money and be off! (Oh, for the good old times when everybody took pride in doing their work well!)

T. D. Morley has just finished a large nice milk-house, of cement block made by the Arthur Andrews Co., and Frank Presley is putting up a big hog house at present, made of the same stuff.

Mr. Fred Howard is putting up a new house on Maple street, same to be for sale or rent, we understand.

Mrs. Lucretia Garfield accompanied by her brother Mr. Joseph Rudolph and Mrs. Rudolph, were expected to arrive at home Sunday evening from their winter home in Pasadena, Cal., and to spend the summer here.

Mrs. Edward Parchall of Akron, is spending a few days here with her mother, Mrs. Helen Dickey Blish at the Center.

One of the old residents of this village and one of its most highly respected and beloved members of the Disciple church, Mr. Robert Redcliffe passed away Friday evening late, and the funeral services were held in the church Sunday afternoon, Mr. Clarke the young new pastor, taking charge of the services, the bearers being neighbors and old friends.

Prof. Perry Smith has accepted a position in the Burton public schools and Miss Jessie Goff is to teach in Painesville another year, but Miss Hubbard will still have charge of the little folks here and Miss Littlejohn will be in the Intermediate Dept. another year.

The closing exercises of the Mentor high school passed off very nicely on Wednesday evening last, when Miss Hasel Sparry, Miss Lucy Gallagher, Miss Agnes Swain and John Gallagher all finished the course of study with credit to themselves and the school, and received their diplomas. The address of the evening was delivered by Rev. Matthias Mosely of Willoughby, the young Catholic priest who comes out here to look after his flock every other Sunday, and it was a good address, and well received, because full of noble thoughts about right living.

The Miscellany Club are to hold their annual picnic next Wednesday, the 12th, at Little Mountain, the Social Committee having braved the owners enough to ask and secure permission.

The County Sunday School Association held a convention in Painesville not long ago, when it was decided to go all over the township and find out what children are in Sunday school, where the parents attend church etc. Mr. E. M. Hyde of Mentor Plains was elected chairman of this Census Committee and Mrs. Frank Sandberg secretary.

Word has come back to Mentor friends of Mr. Frank Smith, that he is doing well in Charity hospital and begins to think of getting home.

Mr. and Mrs. James Moran are very pleasantly situated on Jackson street in Painesville, having recently bought the old Henry Card place which they are putting in order, expecting to make a home there. Mr. E. H. Cleveland is very poorly, seldom leaving his bed, and is a great care.

Mr. and Mrs. Mahlon Sweet of Kirtland were guests of their brother Mr. Jab Sweet and family one day last week.

Dorothy and Wilson Sanborn have been enjoying a visit during the week just past, from their cousins, Edward Cone of Geneva, and Raymond Hopkins of Cleveland.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles Jackett of Cleveland were guests of Mrs. Riley Harris over Sunday.

Mrs. A. D. Carleton attended the W. C. T. U. meeting on the Plains last week, and helped to organize a good Y. P. Branch of same; and was the guest of Mrs. Walter Tyler while there.

Mrs. Samuel Lytle is spending a short time at her old home near Cincinnati at present.

Mr. and Mrs. Martin Hopkins have arrived at home from Florida for the summer.

[illegible] on Hart street and will move in their new possession at once.

Miss Abby Mayhew of Willoughby is spending a few days over here with her cousins the Rexford and Curtiss families.

Mr. Lewis Johnson of Chicago, is visiting his sister, Mrs. Orlen Tower and his brother, W. H. Johnson for a short time at present.

Mrs. George Hicks returned home on Friday last, to Adrian, Mich., and found her fifteen year old son very sick with something like diptheria.

Children's Day in the Methodist church has been set for Sunday, the 16th, but Mr. Schauffner is going to preach especially to children next Sunday morning the 9th, and they are all invited to come and hear what he has to say.

There is no real need of anyone being troubled with constipation. Chamberlain's Tablets will cause an agreeable movement of the bowels without any unpleasant effect. Give them a trial. For sale by all dealers

SELF WORKING WASHER BOSS

The Washing Machine that Really Washes Clothes Clean

THIS is the famous "Boss"—the machine with the mechanical wash-board—improved by the high speed, fly wheel attachment. Can be operated by Electric, Water or Engine Power as well as by hand. Tell us the kind you want. A child can easily run it.

The clothes are rubbed, squeezed and thoroughly washed, far better than they can be by hand. Made of everlasting Louisiana Red Cypress Wood. Order one on trial from your local dealer. Write direct to us for booklet on washday hints.

SYNOPSIS.

Dan Blair, the 22-year-old son of the fifty million-dollar copper king of Blairtown, Mont., is a guest at the English home of Lady Galorey. Dan's father had been courteous to Lord Galorey during his visit to the United States and the courtesy is now being returned to the young man. The youth has an ideal girl in his mind. He meets Lily, Duchess of Breakwater, a beautiful widow, who is attracted by his immense fortune and takes a liking to her. When Dan was a boy a girl sang a solo at a church and he had never forgotten her. The Galoreys, Lily and Dan attend a London theater where one Letty Lane is the star. Dan recognizes her as the girl from his town, and going behind the scenes introduces himself and she remembers him. He learns that Prince Poniatowsky is suitor and escort to Letty. Lord Galorey and a friend named Ruggles determine to protect the westerner from Lily and other fortune hunters. Young Blair goes to see Letty. He can talk of nothing but Letty and this angers the Duchess. The westerner finds Letty ill from hard work, but she recovers and Ruggles and Dan invite her to supper. She asks Dan to build a home for disappointed theatrical people. Dan visits Lily for the time forgetting Letty, and later announces his engagement to the duchess. Letty refuses to sing for an entertainment given by Lily. Galorey tells Dan that all Lily cares for is his money, and it is disclosed that he and the duchess have been mutually in love for years. Letty sings at an aristocratic function, Dan escorting her home.

CHAPTER XIX.—Continued.

The boy walked briskly back of the scenes toward the little door, behind which, as he tapped, he hoped with all his heart to hear her voice bid him come in. But there were other voices in the room. He rattled the door knob and Letty Lane herself called to him without opening the door.

"Will you go, please, Mr. Blair? I can't see anyone tonight."

He had nothing to do but to go—to grind his heel as he turned to swear deeply against Poniatowsky. His late ecstasy was turned to gall. The theater seemed horrible to him, the chattering of the chorus girls, their [illegible], their laughter as he passed the little groups, all seemed weird and infernal, and everything became an object of irritation.

As he went blindly out of the theater he struck his arm against a piece of stage fittings and the blow was sharp and stinging, but he was glad of the hurt.

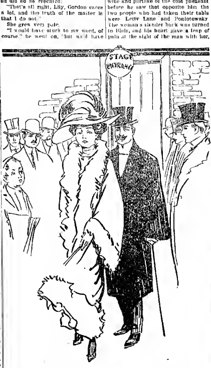
Without, in the street, Dan took his place with the other men and waited, a bitter taste in his mouth and anger in his breast, waited until Letty Lane fluttered down, followed by Poniatowsky, and the two drove away.

The young man could have gone after, running behind the motor, but there was a taxicab at hand; he jumped in it, ordering the man to follow the car to the Savoy. There the boy had the pleasure of seeing Miss Lane enter the hotel, Poniatowsky with her—had the anguish of seeing them both go up in the lift to her apartments.

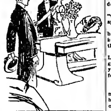
When Dan came to himself he heard the chimes of St. Martin's ring out eleven. He then remembered for the first time that he had promised to dine alone at home with the Duchess of Breakwater.

"Oooh, Lily will be wild!"

In spite of the lateness of the hour he hurried to Park lane. The familiar face of the man servant who let him in blurred before the young man's eyes. Her grace was out at the theater? Blair would wait then, and he went into the small drawing room, quiet, empty, reposeful, with a fire across the andirons, for the evening was damp and cool. Still dazed by his jealous passionate emotions, he glanced about the room, chose a long leather sofa and stretching out his length fell asleep. There in the shadow he slept profoundly, waking suddenly to find that he was not alone. Across the room the Duchess of Breakwater stood by the table; she was in evening dress, her cloak and gloves on the chair at her side. She laughed softly and the man to whom she laughed, on whom she smiled, was Lord Galorey.



Letty Lane Fluttered Down, Followed by Poniatowsky.



"Dan, I Really Don't Care a Pin for the Money—I Don't."

Blair raised himself up on the sofa without making any noise and he saw Galorey take the woman in his arms. The sight didn't make the fiance angry. He realized instantly that he wanted to believe that it was true, and as there was nothing theatrical in the young westerner, he sprang up, slang so much a part of his nature that the first words that came to his lips was a phrase in vogue.

"Look who's here!" he cried, and came blithely forward, his head clear, his lips smiling.

The duchess gave a little scream and, Dan lounged up to the two people and held his hand frankly out to the lady.

"That's all right, Lily! Go right on, Gordon, please. Only I had to let you know when I waked up! Only fair. I guess I must have been asleep quite a while."

The duchess of Breakwater shrugged.

"I don't know what you dreamed," she said acidly, "if you were asleep."

"Well, it was a very pretty dream," the boy returned, "and showed what a stupid ass I've been to think I couldn't have dreamed it when I was awake."

"I think you are crazy," the duchess exclaimed.

But Blair repeated: "That's all right. I mean to say as far as I am concerned—"

"My dear chap, you have been dreaming."

But Blair met the Englishman's gray eyes with his blue ones. "I did have a bottle of champagne, Gordon, that's a fact, but it couldn't make me see what I did see."

"Dan," the duchess of Breakwater broke in, "let Gordon take you home, like a dear. You're really ragging in a ridiculous way."

Blair looked at her steadily, and as he did so he repeated:

"That's all right, Lily, Gordon cares a lot, and the truth of the matter is that I do not."

She grew very pale.

"I would have stuck to my word, of course," he went on, "but we'd have been infernally unhappy and ended up in the divorce courts. Now, this little scene here of yours lets me out, and I don't lay it up against either of you."

"Gordon!" she appealed to her lover, "why, in heaven's name, don't you speak!"

The Englishman realized that while he was glad at heart, he regretted that he had been the means of her losing the chance of her life.

"What do you want me to say, Lily?" he exclaimed with a desperate gesture. "I can't tell him I don't love you. I have loved you, God help me, for ten years."

She could have killed him for it.

"I can tell you, Dan, if you want me to," Galorey went on, "that I don't believe she cares a penny for any one on the face of the earth, for you or me."

Old Dan Blair's son showed his business training. His one idea was to "get out," and as he didn't care who the duchess of Breakwater loved or didn't love, he wanted to break away as fast as he could. He sat down at the table under the light of the lamp and drew out his wallet with its compact, thick little check book, the millionaire's pass to most of the things that he wants.

"You've taught me a lot," he said to the duchess of Breakwater, "and my father sent me over here for that. I have been awfully fond of you, too. I thought I was fonder than I am, I guess. At any rate I want to stand by one of my promises. That old place of yours—Stainer court—now that's got to be fixed up."

He made a few computations on paper, lifted the pad to her with the figures on it, round, generous and full.

"At home," he said, "in Blairtown, we have what we call 'engagement' parties, when each fellow brings a present to the girl, but this is what we might call a 'broken engagement party.' Now, I can't," the boy went on, "give this money to you very well; it won't look right. We will have to fix that up some way or other. You will have to say you got an unexpected inheritance from some uncle in Australia." He smiled at Galorey: "We'll fix it up together."

His candor, his simplicity, were so charming, he stood before the two so young, so clear, so clean, that a sudden tenderness for him, and a sense of what she had lost, what she never had had, made her exclaim:

"Dan, I really don't care a pin for the money—I don't"—but the hand she held out was seized by the other man and held fast. Galorey said:

"Very well, let it go at that. You don't care for the money, but you will take it just the same. Now, don't for God's sake, tell him that you care for him."

He made her meet his eyes this time; stronger than she, Galorey forced her to be sincere. She set Dan free and he turned and left them standing there facing each other. He softly crossed the room, and looking back, he saw them, tall, distinguished, both of them under the lamplight—enemies, and yet the closest friends bound by the strongest tie in the world.

As Dan went out through the curtains of the room and they fell behind him the duchess of Breakwater sank down in the chair by the side of the table, she buried her face. Gordon Galorey bent over her and again took her in his arms, and she suffered it.

CHAPTER XX.

A Hand Clasp

It was one o'clock. Blair called a hansom and told the driver to take him to the Carlton, and leaning back in the vehicle he breathed a long sigh. He looked like his father, but he didn't know it. He felt old. He was a man and a tired one and a free one, and the sense of this liberty began to refresh him like a breeze over parched soil. He thought over what he had left for a second, stopped longest in pitying Galorey, then went into the Carlton restaurant to order some supper, for he began to feel the need of food. He had not time to drink his wine and partake of the cold pheasant before he saw that opposite him the two people who had taken their table were Letty Lane and Poniatowsky. The woman's slender back was turned to Blair, and his heart gave a leap of pain at the sight of the man with her, and the cruel suffering began again.

Dan gave up the idea of eating; drank a whole bottle of champagne, then pushed it away from him violently. "Hold up," he told himself, "you're getting dangerous; this drinking won't do." So he sat drumming on the table looking into the air. When those two got up to go, however, he would go with them; that was sure. He could never see them go out together again, no—no—no! As his brain grew a bit clearer he saw that they were having a heated discussion between them, and as the room emptied finally, save for themselves, Dan, though he could not hear what Poniatowsky said, understood that he was urging something which the girl did not wish to grant. When they left he rose as well, and at the door of the restaurant the actress and her companion paused, and Dan saw her face, deadly pale. There were tears in her eyes.

Suffering.

This world would be a dreary monotone without the mountains and the lakes, the rivers and the valleys, which have come through nature's great upheavals. The sufferings of earth make it the more glorious. Man is much like this in his own experience. The blessings of life have come in large measure because of the heartaches and the agonies of men and women. They have given of their life blood so that others might be enriched. This has been their crucifixion. But out of their affliction has come a new life—grown from the seed of the best that died in the old self. This has been their resurrection.—Charles Stelzle.

Omelettes or Broils.

Senator Martine of New Jersey—the "farmer senator," as it is his pride to be called—was relating in Washington memories of his farm life.

"What quaint minds," he said, "have those New Jersey colored folks who work New Jersey's farms! I remember an old uncle who once paused in a job of potato hoeing to sing in my ears the praise of chicken.

"'Chickens,' he said, 'is so accommodatin'. Dey's so accommodatin', suh. Yo' can eat 'em befo' dey's bawn, an' yo' can eat 'em aftah dey's dead.'"

ESSENTIAL CULTIVATION AND MANAGEMENT OF GRAPE VINES

Found to Be Good Practice to do Pruning Just About Time of Picking, But in No Case Should Treatment Go Over Until Spring, as "Bleeding" Causes Weakness and Stunts.

The care of grapes is the same whether for the home or the vineyard, and the method of training depends largely upon circumstances. In the west, California, and the far east, Italy, Spain, etc., no trellis is used, as wood is not procurable, but in Michigan and the other states the crop is supported by trellis. On our farm four canes are allowed to grow from the root stock, being guided till they reach to longitudinal wires by being tied with tarred twine, writes Herman Haupt, Jr., in the Rural New Yorker. We use cedar posts eight feet long set in the ground about 2½ feet, with the butt end throughout coated with hot coal tar from the gas works. The end posts are braced so that the wires may be drawn taut. It is a mistake to bore holes in the posts and run wires through them at four feet from the ground or in fact any distance, as it allows of the accumulation of moisture, and a wire at this height very naturally interferes with the cultivation of the vineyard and the picking of the crop. Any obstruction that prevents getting readily from one row of vines to the next is an error. The cross arms, if made of 1 by 4 inch board and secured with three nails, need not have the wire braced from the end of the arms to the post. To hold the longitudinal wires we saw a shallow notch in the upper edge of the cross-arms; this is sufficient, and being daubed with tar keeps out moisture. At best wood will rot and we have adopted the plan now of replacing the wooden post with one made of concrete. A rectangular box is made tapering from six inches at the base to four inches at the top and eight feet long, open along one side. This box is made with only two sides tapering, the others are straight. In the ends of the box we bore four holes, near the outer edge, for the admission of four strands of galvanized telephone wire; these are passed through the box from end to end and made taut. The box is then laid on its side, the open side up, and filled with concrete. One part best Portland cement, three parts sand and water to make quite wet. With a trowel the upper surface is smoothed off. At the upper or smaller end of the post are inserted in the wet concrete two one-quarter inch bolts, the head imbedded in the concrete, and the shank protruding an inch or more. The bolts are four inches apart and two inches from the top of the post. One is two inches and the other six inches from the top. To these bolts are screwed the cross-arms 24 inches long, when the post has set and hardened. The box or form is so made that six or eight or more posts may be made at one time. This makes a post that will last for all time, and need no repairs. The end posts will, of course, need bracing in the same manner as the wooden ones. When the canes have reached the wires they are loosely tied to the wire and pruned back to the second bud of the new wood. We find it good practice to prune the vines just about the time of picking the fruit, or a little later, but in no case do we let it go till spring, as the "bleeding" at that time weakens the vine and stunts both vine and fruit. Grapes do nicely on a sandy or gravelly soil and the ground should be kept clean and well worked. To give the vines a uniform influence from the sun and air, plant the vineyard in rows running north and south and on high, well-drained ground.

Foot Board
Foot Board ⅞"x12"
Guard ⅞x4
Main Brace 1⅞x3⅞
Front Post 1⅞x3⅞
Brace ⅞x4
Brace ⅞x4
Bough Catcher
Cross arm 1⅞"x6" oak
¾" Pipe
Journal bolts ½" Hinge bolts ⅜" stove All other bolts ⅜" carriage Foot boards connected to front side of cross arms by 5" butt hinges or 6" or 8" Tee hinges.
1" Iron Pipe held by 3-⅜ bolts.

The special features of the improved Cornell spray tower are: 1. It folds down flat. The bough catcher is lowered and then by removing the loose hinge pin at the upper end of the main brace the whole tower may be let down backwards until it lies flat on the top of the spray rig. 2. It is easy to ride. The man using the tower, standing astride of the saddle rail, can grip this rail with his thighs and so hold his position with ease. It has no rail to interfere with a free movement of the pole. 3. It parts the limbs. The bough catcher and the pipe braces raise and turn the limbs without breaking them. The operator can be on the saddle rail and the limbs will go over him. 4. It is strong. Built as shown in the cut, the tower will last for many years. The tower is best mounted on top of the tank, but it may be mounted over the engine if desired. Full details of construction are given by Prof. H. W. Riley in a circular which will be sent by the state college of agriculture at Ithaca, N. Y.

EXCELLENT WAY TO SET POSTS

Experience Teaches That It Will Last Much Longer With the Small End Placed in the Ground.

After many years' experience I have concluded by placing the small end of the post in the ground. A post will last much longer than with the large end down. The reason for this is obvious. When limbs are cut off it always leaves a cut that holds more or less water, and where worms have worked the holes are always downward. These poles hold some moisture, but by placing the top end down this moisture runs out and leaves the post dry.

At first thought it looks as though the post with the large end up would not make a good appearance. However, says an expert in the Farm and Home, I have generally found that the large end is the straight end, and frequently there is a crook at the small end. If this be placed in the ground, the fence when completed looks much better. I also have found that small posts for wire fence last longer than large ones, for they do not hold moisture as long. A post should never be reset until it is well seasoned. The end posts should always be placed in concrete; then there need be no bracing or anchors used.

Soiling Crops.

Just once more we are going to urge dairymen who have not done so heretofore to sow soiling crops this spring to keep up the milk flow when the grass fails next summer.

Raising Calves.

The calves from a first-class herd of cows at six to eight months old should average $75 a head and with far less expense than that of raising other stock.

Corn for Fattening.

Rich in starch and oil, corn excels all other grains for fattening. It is deficient in protein and ash, and not altogether suited for growing animals.

The last time President Taft was in Chicago he was invited to the inevitable banquet. Accompanying him were his secretary, Mr. Hilles, and his military aid, Major Archibald Butt. In the course of the dinner the Chicago men sang a parody of Dixie.

Butt, who is from Georgia, had his whole evening spoiled right there. Somebody, noticing his pained expression, asked him what the trouble was.

Lamb's Tenure of Life Not Long.

A party of privileged sightseers were admitted to a private view of a menagerie between performances, and among other things were shown what was called a "Happy Family," that is to say, in one and the same cage there was a toothless lion, a tiger, somewhat the worse for wear, and a half-famished wolf. Beside these wild animals, curled up in one corner, was a diminutive lamb which shivered as it slumbered.

"About twelve months," replied the showman.

"Why," exclaimed a lady, "I am sure that little lamb is not as old as that."

"Oh," said the showman, quite unmoved, "the lamb has to be renewed occasionally."

DIFFERENT NOW.
Since the Slugger, Coffee, Was Abandoned.

Coffee probably causes more biliousness and so-called malaria than any one other thing—even bad climate. (Tea is just as harmful as coffee because it contains caffeine, the drug in coffee).

A Ft. Worth man says:

"I have always been of a bilious temperament, subject to malaria and up to one year ago a perfect slave to coffee. At times I would be covered with boils and full of malarial poison, was very nervous and had swimming in the head.

"I don't know how it happened, but I finally became convinced that my sickness was due to the use of coffee, and a little less than a year ago I stopped coffee and began drinking Postum.

"From that time I have not had a boil, not had malaria at all, have gained 15 pounds good solid weight and know beyond all doubt this is due to the use of Postum in place of coffee, as I have taken no medicine at all.

"Postum has certainly made healthy, red blood for me in place of the blood that coffee drinking impoverished and made unhealthy." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

Postum makes red blood.

"There's a reason," and it is explained in the little book, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs.

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true, and full of human interest.

WRECKS OF THE NEW JERSEY COAST

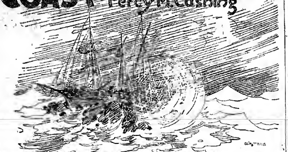
By Percy M. Cushing



IN THE department of the life-saving service at Washington they sometimes speak of "a night's work on the Jersey coast," which, to a casual listener, carries no especial significance. It is only when one is curious enough to probe behind the matter-of-fact attitude of the department officials, or dig into the time-yellowed reports of the coast patrol that one obtains a glimmer of what this branch of government service expects of its servants, and of the unemotional heroism that is concealed in that casual phrase—"a night's work."

From Washington, if you go down into the life-saving stations along the Jersey shore, you will find the same casual indifference to the story of one night which is now history—an indifference that might lead to the belief that the occasion was a trifle, were it not for the fact that in the memories of the old men of the service its details are still vivid.

It was the third of February, 1880. Two storms were rushing along the Atlantic coast. They met off the Jersey shore, a howling, roaring conflict of wind and weather, snow-rent and sleet-riven.

As darkness settled the life-saving crews in the stations along the wind-swept coast watched the sea with foreboding in their hearts. At midnight the storm was at its height.

In the next twelve hours during its continuance the apprehensions of the Jersey patrol found realization. Within those twelve hours there were five wrecks within the scope of four consecutive stations, while another disaster engaged a station a short distance beyond. The men of the stations rescued forty-three persons, toiled hungry and half-frozen in darkness and tempest, established a standard of bravery and fortitude that is unique and went through the ordeal with that offhand carelessness of personal risk which characterizes those of their calling.

At one in the morning Keeper Charles H. Valentine of Station No. 4 lay gravely ill of pleurisy. At 1:30 Surfman Van Brunt, staggering into the drift of the gale on the west patrol, caught the red gleam of a light in the breakers. So fierce was the wind, filled with driven sand and sleet, that he could not look into its teeth, but by shielding his eyes and looking across it he saw the outline of a large schooner. She was the B. C. Babcock of Somers Point, and she was on a bar close to shore.

Van Brunt ran for the station and gave the alarm. Despite his illness, Keeper Valentine rose from his bed and in person led his crew to the rescue. Baffled by the snow which lay thick along the beach, by the gale that tore seams in their faces, and by the intense cold which froze shot line and beach apparatus, the life savers fought for two hours to get a line aboard the stranded vessel. At length they succeeded, and a man came ashore in the breeches buoy. He said that the captain of the Babcock had his wife and two small children on board. The breeches buoy was sent out again and the captain came ashore in it, his six-year-old daughter in his arms. His wife followed. Then came the mate with the other child. Last came the rest of the crew.

The life savers went back to the station, and in the early hours of the stormy dawn were hastily rearranging the apparatus when one of the men saw a large brig coming head on for the shore. Keeper Valentine had gone back to bed, but once more he arose and insisted on leading his men again to the scene of danger.

Before the crew could get the half-prepared beach apparatus to the surf, the brig, running furiously before the tremendous sea, her sails split and tattered, struck with terrific impact. The tide was very high, and the brig, the Augustine from Havana, came up close to the station and well inside the breakers. Just before she struck the life savers could see a man at the wheel, apparently steering composedly, his face emotionless, a pipe in his teeth.

When the shock came a torrent of frothing seas broke over the vessel's stern, covering the helmsman; but a moment later he could be seen standing at the wheel, unmoved. Then the brig swung broadside to the fusillade of thundering surf, and her crew fled forward to the bitts.

By this time the life savers were on the beach with their gun, while a crowd of some hundreds of persons watched from the shelter of the higher dunes. The brig was so close to shore that Surfman Garrett White, following a receding sea down the beach, succeeded in throwing a heaving stick and line on board her.

This the crew secured, and hauled the whip-line on board, but, getting the tailblock, did not know what to do next. In vain the life savers signaled and shouted to them. They were Spanish, and the directions on the billet attached to the lines were in Italian and English only.

At this moment the life savers were filled with horror. The crew of the grounded brig, unable to solve the mystery of rigging the breeches buoy, were preparing to take a terrible risk. One of them seized the line and started the attempt of coming in on it hand over hand.

Meantime the wreck of the Babcock, a quarter of a mile up the beach, had broken up, and the fragments of the vessel, together with her cargo of cordwood, were being swept by the current down about the Augustine, filling the surf with tumbling debris which well-nigh insured the death of anyone who fell into it. In a moment the whip line, over which the sailors were preparing to come in, fouled in the wreckage. Disregarding the shouts to wait, the first sailor, clad only in a pair of trousers, seized the line and began working his way in on it hand over hand.

Rushing waist deep into the breakers, White seized the man, and as the brig rolled inshore and the line slackened he slipped the bight from the sailor's neck.

The next second both were caught in the inrush of wood and water and torn from the line to be buried beneath the breakers. By a terrific effort White succeeded in regaining his footing and, still clutching the sailor, dragged him out of the surf.

While this struggle was taking place two more sailors had started down the line from the brig. Surfman Van Brunt sprang into the water to aid them, but was swept from his feet, his life seeming on a straw in the deadly mass of tumbling timbers. He was carried down shore a hundred yards, where a friendly wave shouldered him up on the beach. At the moment Van Brunt's peril was recognized by those on shore, Surfman Potter leaped to his assistance, only to be himself unfooted and flung on to a floating mass of drift. As he lay there struggling to get to his feet, the line suddenly tautened in the current and falling across his breast held him pinioned under water. For fully a minute he lay there helpless in sight of his comrades and slowly drowning. At last, nearly dead, a wave washed him free.

Meantime one of the two sailors was torn from his hold on the rope and washed ashore unconscious. Surfman Ferguson went for the other and brought him in. Surfman Lockwood rescued the fourth man.

And so, one by one, in grim hand-to-hand combat with the storm, the crew of the wrecked brig were rescued. Hours later she was boarded in the surfboat. In the cabin, lying in his bunk, a pistol bullet through his head, they found the captain. He had been part owner of the vessel, and when he had seen that she was lost, he had gone below, scrawled a note in Spanish saying he was ruined, and shot himself.

While the men of Station No. 4 were battling at these two wrecks, those of Station No. 2 were rescuing seven men and the captain's wife from the three-masted schooner Stephen Harding. While five miles off shore the Harding had been in collision with the schooner Kate Newman, which had gone down with all hands, save one man, who, as the vessels came together, leaped over the bulwarks of the Newman on to the deck of the Harding.

At the same time Stations Nos. 11 and 12 were waging one of the grimmest and gamest fights against masterful odds in the history of the service.

This struggle was at the wreck of the schooner George Taulane. The night before the big storm she was off Navesink, running steadily in the growing wind. An hour found the snow shutting thick over the rim of the sea, and the gale increased to a hurricane. It was two in the morning when the craft found herself in distress. At that hour the deck load of lumber, piled high, broke loose. The terrific roll of the schooner in the high sea sent huge timbers tumbling about her decks, making it almost impossible for the crew to stay above hatches. Twenty minutes later fire was discovered on board. Flames shot aft from the forecastle, igniting the deck load.

With her progress somewhat arrested toward shore by the dragging anchors, the Taulane began drifting parallel to the shore, getting in close to it very slowly. At this time she was discovered by the life savers of Station No. 11.

This crew, leaving beach apparatus behind and knowing that no lifeboat could live in the breakers, followed the craft as she drifted along the coast, calculating that she would ground near Station No. 12 and depending on that station for apparatus. Shortly afterward the wreck was seen by Keeper Chadwick of Station 12, who ordered out his crew with beach cart and gun.

At this time the vessel was about half-way between the two stations. On one side the crew of Station 11 were following her along the beach; on the other the crew of No. 12 were coming in to meet her.

It was between nine and ten o'clock when the two crews met. The horses that had started with the beach cart of the men from Station 12 had refused to ford the sluices between the hills and had been left behind, the men dragging the cart themselves. The helpless Taulane was then still holding off the bar by her dragging anchors, and still drifting along shore. The two life-saving crews now joined forces in a strange and terrible battle.

The vessel was 400 yards off shore, her men in her rigging, the seas breaking and tumbling white all over her hull. But she was still moving, steadily, surely, alongshore, her keel free of the sand.

The life savers at once placed the surf gun and a line which was fired fell across the Taulane out of reach of her shipwrecked crew. Before another could be fired the vessel had drifted southward out of range.

Loading the gun and apparatus into the beach cart, the two life-saving crews started after her alongshore, laboring manfully in the sand and flooded sluices to keep pace with the drift of the vessel to leeward. In order to do this they were obliged to proceed at what was almost a run. After twenty minutes of breathless work they were again opposite her, the gun was once more planted, and another shot fired.

At this portion of the beach the sand dunes were low, and the only point of vantage from which the gun could be shot was the top of the knolls. The knoll on which the effort was made was in an indentation in the shore making it farther from the vessel, and, the line being wet and heavy, it failed to reach the Taulane.

Once more the crews of Stations 11 and 12 loaded the heavy beach cart and staggered on after the fast drifting schooner. As the chase led to the south, the conditions on the beach became worse. The surf washed in higher, the sluices became more numerous, and the dry sand dune tops further separated.

The next dry hill was 400 yards farther on, and the beach that lay before it was well-nigh impassable. After twenty minutes of grim effort it was finally gained only to find that the vessel had passed it and was drifting on.

Perhaps the best account of the remainder of the terrible march to its ultimate end is given in the report of the service of 1880, which says of it:

"From first to last the difficulties of the life savers and the perils which beset them never slackened a moment. The wheels of the cart, in coast phrase 'sanded down' so rapidly—that is, sank so quickly in the infiltrated soil—that the conveyance had to be kept on the move lest it should be lost. Often the cart had to be partially unloaded and portions of the apparatus carried by the crews to lighten it sufficiently to make progress possible, and at other times the men would have to fling themselves upon the wheels and hold them with all their strength to prevent the cart from being capsized by the inequalities of the submerged ground or the overwhelming inburst of the sea rushing high over the axles.

"The escapes were numerous. It was with great difficulty that the men could keep their feet in this constant onslaught and pelting of driftwood. But not a man fell away or flinched from the work before him.

"Not the least difficult of their tasks was that of keeping the lines, and especially the guns and powder, dry in the universal drench around them, and it is difficult to understand how they contrived it, for, aside from the number of actual firings, wherever a momentary pause of the vessel as she grazed bottom, or a slowing of her motion, offered an opportunity for action, at least a dozen times, and probably more, the cart was hurriedly unloaded on the nearest eminence, the gun planted and the shot line arranged for the effort, when the wreck would suddenly roll away upon her course, and the men would have to reload the cart and toil on again after her. In this way and with these interruptions, they worked down along the beach to station No. 12 and a quarter of a mile beyond it when a chance offered for another shot, but the line parted. The crew again moved stubbornly on. It was now noon, and suddenly the man so long seen hanging in the rigging fell into the sea and was gone. The crew still followed the vessel with unslackened activity. Half an hour later they saw another man drop lifeless from the ratlines.

"Laboring forward now for the rescue of the remaining five, they suffered a misfortune. In staggering and floundering through one of the worst sluiceways with the cart, the gun toppled off into the flood and was lost. A desperate search was made at once, and finally it was found in four or five feet of water, fished up and wiped dry, and carried thenceforth by the stout keeper on his shoulder. A man was dispatched back to No. 12 for a dry shot-line, while the crew, moved on to a point three-quarters of a mile below the station, where they got another chance to fire a shot, which, however, fell short, the tide having forced the firing party farther and farther back on the hills as they advanced, and the line, too, being weighted with moisture.

"The cart was again reloaded, and the march resumed. A mile below the station the man overtook them with the dry shot-line and, chance offering, the last shot was fired. This time it was a success! The line flew between the foremast and the jib-stay, and, the cut sweeping the bight of the line in to the side of the vessel, the sailors got hold of it and fastened it to the fore and main rigging.

"As the schooner still continued to drift and roll, nothing could yet be done, but while the greater part of the force loaded up the cart and trudged on with it, three or four kept fast hold of the shore end of the shot line, and kept pace with the wreck in leash. At the end of another quarter of a mile the vessel suddenly struck the tide setting north, stopped, swung head offshore and worked back to her anchors under the comb of the breakers. The time had come at last; and the whip-line, with its appurtenances, was bent on to the shot-line, hauled aboard, and made fast by the tail of the block to the mainmast head.

"The wreck now slued around broadside to the sea and rolled frightfully. The hawser followed the whip-line on board, and the breeches-buoy was rigged on, but the vessel rolled so that it was impossible to set the hawser up on shore in the usual manner, so it was rove through the bull's-eye in the sand anchor, while several men held on to the end to give and take with each roll of the vessel. The work of hauling the sailors from the wreck was now begun with electric energy. After two men were landed, the vessel took the ground, but the circumstances increased rather than diminished her rolling, and some conception of this powerful motion may be derived from the fact that in one instance the breeches buoy with a man in it swung in the off shore roll fully fifty feet in the air.

"The strain and friction upon the hawser were so great that the lignum vitae bull's-eye through which it ran at the sand anchor, despite the hardness of the wood, was worn fully half an inch deep during 30 minutes of use. Within those 30 minutes, however, the five men were safely landed, the last man getting out of the buoy at half past two."

And so closes the story of that which in the department at Washington, is spoken of casually as "A night's work on the Jersey coast."

Wolf as a Bell Whether

Canadian Settler's Experiment Didn't Work Out as He Had Expected.

A settler on the upper Mattawa river in Canada caught a wolf. He had read that ships were sometimes cleared of rats by fastening a bell around the neck of one of them. Accordingly, it seemed to him that in a similar manner he might rid the adjacent woods of wolves. He therefore fastened a bell on the wolf's neck and turned it loose.

When the snow had disappeared practically the settler allowed his flock of sheep to exercise their lambs in the fields near his house. While he stood watching the gambols of the lambs, the sheep pricked up their ears, as if intently listening. Then, with a great deal of bleating, the whole flock took to the woods. The settler wondered at this strange freak on the part of the lambs, but he went about his work. When, an hour later, the sheep returned, he discovered that one of the lambs was missing. The next day the same thing occurred—again a lamb failed to return. The settler's children tried to keep the sheep in the fields. When they could not do this, they followed the animals into the bush. They reported that they had distinctly heard a bell tinkling in the distance.

All at once it dawned upon the settler that the bell he had fastened to the neck of the wolf was the same that had been borne by the father of the flock in the previous summer. The quick-eared sheep had recognized the sound of the bell and, true to their instincts, had hastened to join their last year's companion. The result was that they found, not a wolf in sheep's clothing, but a wolf with a sheep's bell, ready to dine on a spring lamb. The settler did not release any more belled wolves.

Health & Beauty Hints

By Katherine Morton

A toilet vinegar of any desired odor is made by digesting four ounces of any fragrant flowers or scented herbs in one pint of strong white-wine vinegar. Merely put the flowers in the cold vinegar and let it stand for a week, agitating three times daily; then strain several times, and repeat the process with more fresh flowers or herbs if the liquid is not sufficiently perfumed. Toilet vinegars made from dried herbs, such as lavender and rosemary or others, can be prepared in the same manner, only half the quantity of these being needed; but fresh materials are better, these exercising a more active result upon the skin.

Women used to the coquetries of the toilet understand the use of toilet waters and vinegars of all sorts. Where cold cream is much employed, they are indispensable for taking the shine off the skin, and since a liberal use of cream burns the flesh, making it at last darker and rougher than before—remember the point—the toilet vinegar is often required for a thorough cleansing. When using, about a tablespoonful of strong sort is put in a small bowl of water. For astringent treatments of the neck the vinegar or water will be used full strength, after the throat has been washed, massaged and creamed. Sponging down with a solution of toilet vinegar and water is also very refreshing on a hot day and to sick persons, while if a hot plate is sprinkled with one or it is sprayed about the chamber the sick room will be gratefully purified.

When treating sagging muscles of the neck use the vinegar hot.

Where the herbs or flowers cannot be had, flower and herb oils achieve the next best thing in the way of a beneficial toilet water, and a vinegar of this sort is as easily managed. One of the simplest lavender waters made, and which always receives the name of "fine" in the drug stores, can be fabricated at home by digesting one ounce of mitcham oil of lavender in a half pint of strong rectified spirits. Other perfumed oils can be used in the same way.

A toilet water especially for resting the muscles of the body owes its invention, it is said, to Mme. Bernhardt, who used it every day, particularly when coming in from her outdoor exercises. As this wonderful woman at sixty-eight or nine is younger than many women of forty, I would advise a little trial of her "calming" water, which is made in this manner:

| | |
|---|---|
| Alcohol | ½ pint |
| Spirits of camphor | 2 ounces |
| Spirits of ammonia | 2 ounces |
| Sea salt | 3 ounces |
| Boiling water | To make a quart |

Put all ingredients in a large bottle, or in two, and agitate thoroughly. When using, shake the bottle always and rub the water into the skin with the hands.

Dresses for Girls

THE first is for a girl of 8 to 10 years, and is made up in ruby red fine woollen material, with a silk stripe.

It has a Magyar bodice with the right side of front cut in a slant and taken over to the left. A strap of plain material trimmed with buttons is carried from above waist to hem of skirt.

The neck and sleeves are trimmed to match, and the waist-band is also of the plain material.

Materials required: 2½ yards stripe 44 inches wide, ¾ yard plain 40 inches wide, 1½ dozen buttons.

The second would look well in fine face cloth and is for a girl of 6 to 8 years. It has a pleated skirt connected to the bodice by a braided waistband, the neck and armholes are trimmed to match. Piece lace or figured silk may be used for the required underslip.

Materials required: 2 yards cloth 42 inches wide, 8 yards Russia braid, 1½ yards silk or lace 18 inches wide for underslip.

For the third black satin is used. The dress is for a little girl of 4 to 6 years, and is just a straight, simply cut Magyar trimmed at the neck and sleeves by Vandyke lace. A cord girdle encircles the waist, and a narrow lace edging finishes the foot.

Materials required: 1½ yards satin 40 inches wide, 1 yard Vandyke and 1½ yards narrow lace.

Social Forms and Entertainments

From a School Girl.

I have been helped very much by your valuable column. Many thanks.

Do you think a young lady should teach a young man to play cards? How often should a school girl let her beau call upon her, or do you think a girl of fifteen too young to receive company?

Do you believe in "leap year" affairs where the girls go for the boys? Do you approve of going automobiling at night? "VIOLET EYES."

There is no harm that I can see in teaching a young man to play cards, for I do not object to cards any more than any other game. A girl of fifteen is entirely too young to have what you are pleased to call a "beau." Wait until you are out of school before you allow such thoughts. Leap year parties are lots of fun when properly chaperoned, as all parties should be. I am not much in favor of night automobiling without a chaperone.

From a "Young Girl."

I am a young girl of fourteen years. Is it right when at a party a boy who is in my room at school escort me home? My brother is just my size. When he has one or two boy friends at his home is it right for me to play games with them? H. SMITH.

Certainly it was perfectly correct for your boy friend to see you safely home and equally proper for you to help your brother entertain his friends, that is if he likes to have you with him and he should.

MADAME MERRI.

MUST BE WELL CARED FOR

White Hair, the Crown of Advancing Years, Needs Constant and Tender Treatment.

Sometimes snow white hair is a great charm, but those locks won't long remain snowy if they are not very tenderly treated. In the first place if they are regularly waved—and they will look the prettier for that treatment—the waving must be done with curl-papers, kids or bits of tightly twisted white cloth, and never with a hot iron, as that yellows the hair and utterly spoils the appearance. Equal care must be taken when having mother's white locks shampooed. Avoid any sort of dark soap and do the actual cleansing with castile or the white of an egg, being careful to rinse the head in several waters so as to remove every particle of the soapy substance. A lemon squeezed in a wash-hand bowl full of water makes an excellent rinsing for white hair, as it adds to its snowy appearance and for the same reason that linens are the better for a little blue water so are white locks, but the blue tone must be very faint indeed and never allowed to dry in on the hair.

White locks should be rubbed or fanned until they are thoroughly dried and not allowed to dry by degrees slowly from hanging [illegible] or rapidly by seating the owner of them close to a hot fire. White locks that are too quickly dried look fluffy for a few days but they never look soft and of fine texture.

Simple Evening Dress.

There are occasions when the girl of limited dress allowance feels she must be gowned in evening costume, and if this evening frock is to be new she should let simplicity rule. For the young girl who has only a small amount to spend on her clothes there is nothing so sweet and dainty as a sheer cotton material made over a princess slip of silk.

As women advance in age crepe de chine, both in white and delicate shades, is inexpensive and becoming. For women well advanced in life the same material in black can be used.

HEART NEEDS ESPECIAL CARE

Strain on the Vital Organ Must Be Avoided When Middle Life Has Been Passed.

"The death by heart failure of Gen. Frederick D. Grant," says the Medical Record, "emphasizes the repeated warnings of the medical profession that we should treat a senile heart with respect. As far as we know, there is not the slightest disagreement on this one point—every human heart over fifty, and perhaps over forty five, cannot stand much internal pressure without being ruined or at least damaged. A very slight man may go through severe muscular exertion with but little damage, but a heavy man, like the general, places on the heart and arteries a hydrostatic pressure beyond the safety point, and it never recovers.

"The pitiful feature of this deplorable death is the fact that Gen. Grant in his last annual report had called attention to the opinion of life insurance examiners that army officers were becoming poor risks on account of the increasing strain on their profession. It is safe to predict more deaths like Gen. Grant's, unless we treat the heart of a man over forty-five with more gentleness."

CUTICURA OINTMENT HEALED BAD SORE ON LIMB

"Some time ago I was coming up some steps when the board crushed under me like an egg shell, and my right limb went through to the knee, and scraped the flesh off the bone just inside and below the knee. I neglected it for a day or two, then it began to hurt me pretty badly. I put balsam fir on to draw out the poison, but when I had used it a week, it hurt so badly that I changed to —— ointment. That made it smart and burn so badly that I couldn't use it any more, and that was the fourth week after I was hurt.

"Then I began to use Cuticura Ointment for the sore. It stopped hurting immediately and began healing right away. It was a bad-looking sore before Cuticura Ointment healed it, and I suffered so I couldn't sleep from two days after I fell until I began using Cuticura Ointment.

"Cuticura Soap is the best soap I ever saw. I have used all kinds of soap for washing my face, and always it would leave my face smarting. I had to keep a lotion to stop the smart, no matter how expensive a soap I used. I find at last in Cuticura Soap a soap that will clean my face and leave no smarting, and I do not have to use any lotion or anything else to ease it. I believe Cuticura Soap is the best soap made." (Signed) Mrs. M. E. Fairchild, 805 Lafayette St., Wichita, Kan., May 8, 1911. Although Cuticura Soap and Ointment are sold by druggists and dealers everywhere, a sample of each, with 32-page book, will be mailed free on application to "Cuticura," Dept. L, Boston.

Joke on the Doctor.

The physicians in Mankato had agreed that during their Chautauqua assembly they would employ a call boy, and each was to pay his share of the expense. This boy was to call any doctor who was wanted, without disturbing the speaker, as it was embarrassing to him and looked as if they were doing it to advertise without expense. So it all went well until the afternoon when Strickland W. Gilliland spoke. As he was talking away a certain doctor had a call from the platform, and he walked out rather ostentatiously. Some of the people who knew of the arrangement laughed or snickered, and the speaker got it. He said: "Don't laugh, folks. That is the way my brother got his start." And everybody roared.

MADISON HOME

Mrs. Parmelia Grove celebrated her 80th birthday May 27th. The ladies of the Ohio Cottage responding to an invitation from Mrs. Grove assembled in the Library in the afternoon, where congratulations, and a jolly good time were enjoyed by all present. Light refreshments were served. Out of town guests were Mrs E. G Wilson and daughter of Collinwood.

Miss Anne Carrigan spent Saturday and Sunday in Cleveland.

Mrs. Ada B. Quirk of Trumbull, spent Monday with her friend, Maria Bushnell.

Mrs. Arthur Pope was a caller at the Home Monday.

When your child has whooping cough be careful to keep the cough loose and expectoration easy by giving Chamberlain's Cough Remedy as may be required. This remedy will also liquify the tough mucus and make it easier to expectorate. It has been used successfully in many epidemics and is safe and sure. For sale by all dealers.

"The Question Before the House"

When a Prohibitionist at Asbury Park asked Senator La Follette if he were a Prohibitionist, the questioner probably did not mean to be disorderly, but he was. Senator La Follette had just closed an address on the fighting issues of the pending Presidential campaign, of which Prohibition is not one nor likely to be. Prohibition was therefore on that occasion not germane to what parliamentarians call "the question before the house." It was a disorderly interruption. But Senator La Follette answered it straight from the shoulder, as is customary with him. Not being a Prohibitionist, he said so in one word of one syllable. But he added several words of well-merited rebuke. He said to his clerical questioner: "I don't think that was fair of you; that question has not entered into the discussions of the campaign, and is not an issue; but as you ask it and have my answer, I suggest that you put the question also to Mr. Roosevelt and Mr. Taft when they come here."

Each age of our lives has its joys. Old people should be happy, and they will be if Chamberlain's Tablets are taken to strengthen the digestion and keep the bowels regular. These tablets are mild and gentle in their action and especially suitable for people of middle age and older. For sale by all dealers.

Marriage Licenses

Elephant Lived for Centuries.

When Alexander the Great conquered Porus, king of India, he took a great elephant that had fought gallantly for the defeated king, named him Ajax, dedicated him to the sun, placed upon him a metal band with the inscription, "Alexander, the son of Jupiter, dedicated Ajax to the sun." The elephant was found alive 350 years later.

Hatpin Caused Death.

A simple hatpin caused the death of its wearer in Paris the other morning near the Alma Bridge. A young woman slipped as she alighted from a tramcar and fell. The hatpin was dislodged, and by some extraordinary chance was driven right through the unlucky woman's scalp. Death was instantaneous.

SCHOOL PICNIC

FIRST ANNUAL SOCIAL GATHERING OF PUPILS OF WILLOUGHBY TOWNSHIP

The Advanced Conditions of Rural Schools and Congenial and Mutual Efforts Working For Their Betterment Worthy of Note

The Willoughby Township schools enjoyed their first annual picnic at Willoughbeach Park on Saturday, June 1st. The day was an ideal picnic day.

The crowd came early. Crowd! yes it was a large and an enthusiastic crowd, and showed the interest and sympathy the fathers and mothers have in their schools. The fathers laid down their farm work, and the mothers put aside their household duties and came on trolley cars, in [illegible] joyed themselves as only children can, for they evidently had prayed—"Backward, turn backward, oh time in your flight; make me a child again all day and till night."

More than a thousand persons ate their dinners in groups of school districts.

Old acquaintances were renewed, and new ones were made, and before going to their homes plans for a 1913 picnic were suggested.

The exhibit of school work was a great surprise to many parents, for, as is well known, only a few parents know just what is being done in their school.

The exhibit in penmanship showed work from all grades, and convinced the most skeptical that even first graders do write a very legible hand. Some of the upper grade work shown was very good.

There were some excellent maps drawn and colored so nicely, that, as some remarked, it was necessary to scrutinize closely in order to see that it was not a leaf torn from a book.

The nature work in pressed and mounted leaves and flowers, was very fine.

The production maps were good.

Samples of number work and arithmetic, showing the analysis of problems, etc., made an interesting exhibit. But no one can tell on paper how interesting this feature was, just wait until the next picnic and go and see for yourself.

The sports were enjoyed by all, boys and girls alike entered into them, and did their level best to win.

The superintendent had not forgotten that children like to swing, and he had arranged with the management so that the children had the merry-go-round free. And didn't they enjoy that part of it? The ponies and boats were filled to capacity every minute.

Take it all in all it was one grand success, and served to advertise the schools of Willoughby Township better than anything that has been done lately.

This year has been a very successful one for the schools. At the commencement held on Wednesday, May 29th, twenty-two boys and girls were graduated from the eighth grade, and are now eligible to enter some high school.

Superintendent Gillespie is quite proud of the work his teachers are doing, and does not hesitate to say so. His Board of Education gives him its loyal support, and allows him to furnish his teachers with every valuable help, and apparatus that they ask for. His teachers are loyal to him, for they know he is their friend and sympathizes with them in their troubles and rejoices with them in their triumphs. Under his direction during the past decade the schools have advanced to their present high efficiency equal to any rural schools in our Western Reserve. Let us all work to make the next year better than the present, thus keeping up with the rapid advances in scientific school progress. —Citizen.

COWARDLY ACT

School Boys from Chardon Attacked by Young Roughs

Painesville was given a bad name by the act of local fellows who did not have sense enough to show any consideration for the presence of young ladies.

The young people from Chardon who came to the band concert last Friday evening were set upon by a crowd of young toughs and a lively battle took place, in which the Chardon boys (we are glad to say) defended themselves in the only way left open to them and done it quite effectually. Two Painesville boys were arrested.

The rumors set afloat about this unpleasant affair have been highly colored, but the truth presents the whole affair as a disgrace to Painesville. When young people, young boys and girls can not come in our city without being the object of a rough, ill-mannered attack, it is about time for the decent people of our city to commence a war on these young savages. They should be taught good manners and if in no other way, with a club.

ABOUT PEOPLE AND PLACES

Mr. F. D. Malin is now out again after a few days illness.

—o—

Congressman James M. Cox is surely a handsome candidate.

—o—

We failed to get the Moose Home, but we can try for the next good thing.

—o—

Wayne B. Wheeler does a lot of threatening, but he never accomplishes much.

—o—

Mr. James Davis is building a new residence on Mentor avenue near the B. & O. viaduct.

—o—

Mr. and Mrs. Hoover, the newly weds, will reside on Washington street in this city.

—o—

Mr. W. P. Storrs has given $1000 to start an endowment fund for the Painesville Public Library.

—o—

Miss Gertrude Hudson has accepted a position with the Gail G. Grant Co. in the dry goods department.

—o—

Councilman McLeod is flirting his cambric handkerchief (real lace) at Director of Service E. L. House.

—o—

An ordinance fixing salaries in the department of Public Safety was passed by city council Monday evening.

—o—

Mr. Cedrick Edwards of Concord is at home again after spending a year at the State Agricultural School, O. S. U.

—o—

Mr. A. F. Bernard, accompanied by his daughter, Louise, is attending the Nurseryman's convention at Boston this week.

—o—

Mr. Joseph Rudolph of Mentor and Mr. O. W. Kessle of Madison were two out of town visitors in Painesville Monday of this week.

—o—

Prof. Kenneth Ward of Columbus is spending a few days as the guest of his parents, Mr and Mrs. John C. Ward of Washington street.

—o—

Hon. F. D. Malin has been compelled to keep within doors, since returning from Columbus last Friday, on account of a severe cold.

—o—

J. W. Roberts of Jefferson, judge of court of common pleas, was nominated as candidate by the republican convention held here Monday afternoon of this week.

—o—

If the Democratic convention should smile upon the candidacy of Governor Harmon it might just as well go the limit and choose Judge Parker for his running mate.

—o—

Miss Anna and Edgar Murroy of W. Jackson street, both of whom have been quite seriously ill, are now reported to be improving. Dr. M. D. Cadwell is the attending physician.

—o—

Melvin Colgrove, who recently graduated from the School of Pharmacy at the University of Buffalo, has returned to his home in this city.

—o—

Glenn Brower was severely bitten by a large shepherd dog on Saturday evening. It is not believed that any dangerous results will follow as the dog showed no symptoms of being mad.

—o—

The concert this week will be given on Thursday evening instead of Friday owing to the high school commencement on that evening. Miss Iszie Nye, the popular young trombonist, will be an added attraction.

—o—

There were every indication of an immense strawberry crop this year, but the absence of rains of the right time, has resulted in a much lighter yield than was expected. The retail price has been at 12 cents to 14 cents.

—o—

While no report has been received from New York regarding the choice of a Moose Home site, it looks as though either Springfield, O., or Painesville would be favored with Painesville standing the best chance.

—o—

It is estimated that the proposed subway under the Lake Shore tracks will cost $225000. We believe the estimate is too high, but if it does cost that much Painesville will undoubtedly be ready to pay her share of the expense.

—o—

Mrs. R. C. Moodey of Painesville was struck by an automobile in Cleveland Monday morning and quite severely injured. Her relatives and friends in this city have been assured that while her injuries were painful there is every reason to believe that she will make rapid recovery.

—o—

The finance committee of the Painesville public library association at their meeting Monday night, reported a donation of $150 from Mrs. Carrie Wilcox Paige, in memory of her sister, Miss Mary Wilcox, who was for many years a trustee of the library.

The premium list of the Lake County Association is now being printed. Mr. F. G. Johnson has been engaged to take charge of the advertising features of the work. Mr. Bates, secretary, has been working for over a year to make the premium list a credit to the county.

—o—

Mrs. Mary Celinda Chadwick died Saturday morning at 4.30 o'clock at her home, 113 Prospect street, aged 61 years. She is survived by a husband, Miles Chadwick, and six children, three daughters and three sons, one of the sons, Robert M. Chadwick lives in Painesville. The funeral was held and burial was at Leroy.

—o—

A. Perry and wife attended the funeral of Mrs. Perry's uncle, Mr. H. P. Alvord, formerly of Painesville, Department Head of The Root McBride Co at Cleveland on Saturday last. Geauga County relatives in attendance were, M. J. Alvord and wife, Henry and Miss Addie Alvord, F. P. Bill, wife and son, E. M. Williams, wife and daughters, and H. Battles and wife. Interment was made in Lakeview cemetery.

—o—

The new Moose lodge known as L. O. O. M., No. 994, was organized last Friday evening in the Elks' lodge rooms with seventy-five members. The first officers are: John C. Ward, past dictator; David Radcliffe, dictator; B. F. Crofoot, vice dictator; E. Les Howard, prelate; K. D. Park, secretary; M. A. Tuttle, treasurer; E. L. Cole, inner guard; E. Sweeney, outer guard; T. W. Morgan, A. J. White, C. A. Streator, trustees.

—o—

The news coming from the C. P. & E. to the effect that the township park line would be built in the near future if opposition did not develop is gratifying. The new township park is the ideal spot for the purpose but without the trolley line it is almost useless. With the trolley line it will be an actual example of the wisdom of the commission in selecting the location.—Telegraph-Republican.

Why should there be any opposition to the C. P. & E. building a road to the township park?

FRANCIS M. CADWELL

Died at Willoughby Friday, June 7.

Francis M. Cadwell, aged 74 years died last Friday morning at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Mildred Gibbs of Willoughby, after an illness of two weeks.

Mr. Cadwell was a man of quiet unassuming ways who made and retained the friendship of all who knew him. He had lived in Willoughby five or six years, before which time he had made Fairport his home, having lived there about ten years, coming to Fairport from Richmond, Ashtabula Co. Ohio. In both Fairport and Richmond he had always identified himself with every movement looking to the betterment of the community. He was noted for his hospitality and kindly ways toward those who needed assistance.

Three years ago Mr. Cadwell's wife died. Since that time he had showed the evidences of failing health and he passed to the Great Beyond with a quiet resignation that was in keeping with his whole life.

The deceased is survived by four living children Dr. M. D. Cadwell and Mrs. Gibbs, son and daughter, both being well known in this county where they have lived for a number of years. Two other sons, William and Ernest, both live in Girard, Ohio.

The funeral was held at the Gibbs' residence last Sunday afternoon. Burial was at Evergreen cemetery, Painesville.

BAD ACCIDENT

Little Girl Has Leg Broken In Two Places.

The young five year old daughter of Mr and Mrs. Harry Greer of Jefferson street, met with a sad accident when she was run over by a bicycle rider which resulted in breaking the girl's leg in two places. The accident happened Tuesday afternoon at about four o'clock.

The bicycle rider, claimed by eye witnesses to have been a foreigner, made his escape as quickly as possible, so that his identity is not known. The little girl is doing as well as might be expected.

Boyd—Hoover

Miss Caroline Boyd of Perry, formerly of Painesville where she has many friends, and Montrose Hoover of the firm of Hoover & Chapman, of this city, were quietly married at the parsonage of Rev. Hodgeson at Willoughby, Monday morning at 10 o'clock. Both are well known and popular young people. Mr. and Mrs. Hoover will make Painesville their permanent home.

It is now well known that not more than one case of rheumatism in ten requires any internal treatment whatever. All that is needed is a free application of Chamberlain's Liniment and massaging the parts at each application. Try it and see how quickly it will relieve the pain and soreness. Sold by all dealers.

WM. J. BRYAN

THE CLEVELAND PRESS PAYS AN ELOQUENT TRIBUTE TO THE GREAT COMMONER

"Today He is But 52 Which Is Early Noontide In The Day of Intellect, of Politics, of Statecraft."

Sixteen years ago he leaped into national prominence with a speech which carried the deep insurgency of the hour. He led, not once, but thrice to glorious defeat. Each time he was followed by the minds, the hearts and the votes of millions of his countrymen.

Today he is but fifty-two, which is early noontide in the day of intellect, of politics, of statecraft.

It is marvelous that a man who leads only to defeat could retain his hold upon the minds and the imagination of men over so long a period. The explanation lies neither in his eloquence nor in his political principles, whatever may be said of the quality of the one or the soundness of the other. The explanation of Bryan is character—integrity, sincerity, fidelity, courage.

True moral grandeur is so rare, especially among politicians, that the world takes off its hat to it whenever it appears.

JAMES J. HARRISON

At the Advanced Age of 83 Years Dies at Eustis, Florida.

Mr. Harrison, president and founder of the Storrs & Harrison Co. is dead. He died at his winter home in Eustis, Florida, Tuesday morning, June 11.

Mr. Harrison was born in Kent county, England, and came to this country with his parents when a mere child, and had lived in Lake county nearly his whole life. His struggle for an education and a start in business finds its parallel in the efforts of many another of our most successful American citizens.

The Storrs & Harrison Co.'s nurseries has made Painesville known in all parts of the world, and every good citizen of Painesville has a just cause for pride in the fact that Mr. Harrison, always a moving spirit in this great business, was a most exemplary citizen. He justly merited the love and respect of all his associates.

The funeral will be held at the Harrison residence, at the Nursery, Saturday afternoon, June 15th.

DE WITT CLINTON PARKER

Died at Mentor Thursday, June 6th, at Advanced Age.

De Witt Clinton Parker, aged 88 years, died Thursday, June 6, at the residence of his daughter, Mrs. M. J. Wood.

Mr. Parker was at the time of his death the oldest resident of Mentor who was born in Mentor. He was the son of the late Capt. Clark Parker, one of the earliest settlers of Mentor township. The deceased had lived in both Lake and Geauga counties, and his friends in both counties are numbered by the hundreds. During the past few years he had made Mentor his permanent home.

He is survived by his wife, two sons and four daughters. His two sons, Colonel and Charles, are well-known citizens of Mentor.

As above stated, Mr. Parker died at the home of his daughter, Mrs. Wood, the wife of M. J. Wood, who are also well known in Mentor. One daughter lives in Russell, Ohio, and two in Kansas City, Mo.

The funeral was held at the Wood residence last Saturday afternoon.

GRANT WILDER DEAD

Grant Wilder, aged 90 years, died at his home on Mentor avenue Wednesday morning of this week.

Mr. Wilder was born in Connecticut but came to Painesville in the early days and was for a number of years one of Lake county's most active business men. He was engaged in the foundry and plow business and had other interests of importance. Of late he has lead a quiet life but has always possessed a most cheerful disposition and his absence will be noted with many expressions of sorrow.

Mr. Wilder was a brother of the late Mrs. Fisher and members of that family are the only known survivors.

COURT HOUSE NEWS

Court of Common Pleas

On Monday morning Ellen Mitchell was granted a divorce from Jacob O. Mitchell by Judge A. G. Reynolds on the grounds of gross neglect of duty. Mr. Mitchell was at one time mayor of Fairport but now resides in Pennsylvania.

NEW CASES

MACCABEES GRAND RALLY

The great patriotic order of the Knights and Ladies of the Maccabees of the World, will hold a grand rally for Lake and adjoining counties in Painesville, Friday, June 21st, 1912, together with a family reunion, picnic, athletic carnival, street demonstration, and evening class initiation.

The city authorities of Painesville have kindly granted the use of the beautiful City Park for this celebration. Members, friends, and visiting delegations will gather in the park where the daytime program will be given under the auspices of Painesville Maccabees. National and state officers of this great continent-wide organization will be present to participate in the program and to meet the membership.

Everywhere and in every way the Maccabees will display the Stars and Stripes with their own colors, black, red, and white, giving the day a true patriotic distinction. Painesville business men are asked to display Old Glory in their business places and they will be provided also, without expense, with K. O. T. M. decorations through local committees.

His Honor the Mayor will welcome the hosts of Maccabees at the noon reception in the Park. Hon. Paul Howland, member of Congress, and others, will speak. Hon. L. E. Sisler of Detroit, Great Commander Ed. L. Young of Norwalk, Gen. Geo. H. Scott of Toledo, Mrs. Emma S. Olds of Elyria the Great Commander for the Ladies of the Maccabees of Ohio and others will be present.

Large Maccabee delegations will be present from Cleveland, Willoughby, Madison, Perry, Mentor, Wickliffe, Fairport, Geneva, Ashtabula, Windsor, Warren, Chardon, and other points.

The evening street parade will be led by Pearl Division No. 1, Uniform Rank, K. O. T. M. of Cleveland, with bands, floats, decorated automobiles, and other vehicles. Maccabee Marchers, and Sir Knights on foot.

The celebration will close with a great evening class initiation beginning at 8 o'clock. The ritual work will be put on by the Painesville Maccabee Degree Team, one of the best in Northern Ohio.

The local arrangements are being cared for by efficient committees under the direction of L. D. Dayton, Chairman, E. Z. Fought, Commander, and W. E. Chapman, record keeper of the local organization.

JOHN F. WALKER

Former Resident of Lake County Died at Home in North Dakota.

We clip the following obituary notice from April 30th issue of the Valley City, North Dakota, Patriot:

Again it becomes our painful duty to chronicle the demise of another of our prominent and highly respected residents.

Again, Death, the dread visitant, whose trail is but a shroud of gloom and despair, has swung his sceptor and his inexorable order has been given to "pass under the rod." We mentioned in Thursday's issue, the death of F. J. Walker, which occurred at his home just west of the city.

The funeral services were held Saturday at the home of his daughter Mrs. Helen Russell in this city, Rev. Willard C. Lyon officiating. The interment was made in Woodbine cemetery.

John Franklin Walker was born in Painesville, Ohio, February 23, 1839 where he grew to manhood and on October 15, 1862 was married to Josephine Dikeman and in 1872 moved with his family to Fillmore county Minnesota, where he was engaged in the milling business.

In 1882, after having met with failure in business, he came to Valley City, locating just west of the city on a homestead formerly owned by Dr. Coe, building up and making a pretty and comfortable home, where he resided at the time of his death.

Mr. Walker was a man of quiet and unassuming manners and in addition to his family leaves a large circle of friends to mourn his demise. He leaves a wife, his companion of nearly fifty years, and two children Helen M. Russell and Frank H. Walker, to mourn the loss of a loving husband and father.

IMPORTANT MEETING

The annual meeting of the Lake County Humane Society will be held at the Court House in Painesville, on Saturday, June 22, 1912, at 1.30 P. M., to elect officers and other business.

Mr and Mrs. Wallace Cheney and children of Jefferson visited friends in Perry Sunday.

Miss Vancia Ford of Laos is convalescing.

Mrs. Harry Beardslee of Ashville, North Carolina, is spending a few days at the home of her mother, Mrs S. N Ford.

The ladies of the Home Missionary Society of the Methodist Church surprised Mrs Anna Wire of Painesville with a postal shower Monday morning and a party in the afternoon. Nineteen members of the society were present and a most pleasant afternoon was spent. Ice cream and cake were served.

Miss Lillias Davies of Cleveland is visiting relatives and friends in Perry.

The funeral of Mrs. Chas. Chamberlain was held Saturday afternoon from her home. Father Wright of Geneva read the Episcopal service after which he gave a short sketch of her life since she came into the church. He told of the great help she had been to the Brotherhood of St. Andrew and her election as an Honorary member of that Brotherhood. And he comforted the bereaved by pointing out her goodness and usefulness; and now happiness in life beyond the vale.

The report states that one hundred and sixty-seven attended prayer meeting last Thursday evening. This means a steady increase that should continue until every person in town devotes Thursday evening to the work of the Lord.

Mrs. Series' mother and niece of [illegible] are visiting her.

Miss Florence Lyons of Unionville is spending the week with her aunt, Mrs. Victor Salkeld of Perry.

Mr. Peters is entertaining his mother whose home is in the east.

Mr. and Mrs. Wm. Joiner and Mr. R. O. Few attended the funeral of Mr. Fred Brydle of Conneaut Sunday.

The Baptist Sewing Society meets at the Chapel Wednesday afternoon.

Perry Y. M. C. A. boys may be justly proud of their work at the Track Meet in Painesville Saturday. They carried off the penant, but besides this they scored 91 points, the second highest being Madison with 45. We believe that Y. M. C. A. work in Perry has been a success.

Mrs W. N. Ford, assisted by Mrs. S. A. Hull and Mrs. Hubert Wright, will entertain the Home Mission Society at its regular monthly meeting Thursday afternoon.

WICKLIFFE

The Wickliffe Presbyterian Church held its annual meeting Monday evening of this week.

Next missionary meeting will be held at Mrs. E. D. Young's on Wednesday afternoon at the usual time.

Children's day was held at the church last Sunday. Quite a large crowd attended. Song were sung by Miss Gertrude King and the Misses Millie and Anna Goees. The children spoke a number of pieces which were enjoyed by all.

Mr. and Mrs. Budd Merrils were visitors at the Merrils home Sunday afternoon.

Mr. Frank Gones and family from Oklahoma are visiting at the Hardaker home, also other relatives of this town.

Mr. William Morris has gone to Buffalo where he expects to stay until fall.

Mr. Frank Sherman and family attended the Sherman reunion Monday.

The Cleveland Crane & Engineering Co. will hold their picnic at Conneaut Lake June 22nd. Everybody is looking forward for the good time that is to come.

Miss Nellie Heath was a visitor at the Ferguson home a few days last week.

Mr. and Mrs. Walkley and children went to Collinwood last Sunday afternoon.

Mr. and Mrs. Robert Parkin went to Cleveland shopping last Saturday afternoon.

Mr. William Davidson and Mr. Charles Morris have gone back to the Cleveland Crane & Engineering Co. shop to work.

CONCORD

Thomas Caley is quite seriously ill.

Michael Krebs spent Sunday and Monday in Cleveland.

The ground was white with frost Saturday morning, June 8th, and in places ice formed as thick as window glass in shallow dishes, but no bad effects are reported from the unusual cold.

Commencement exercises were held last Friday afternoon, June 7, at the M. E. Church at Wilson's Corners. Three girls graduated: Minnie Pease, Elizabeth Brown and Mildred Tucker. Homer Harper, Esq., of Painesville delivered a short address and the music under the efficient management of Mrs B. B. Park of Painesville added much in the success of the entertainment.

Mrs. Phillip Bacon of Florida, Mr. and Mrs. H. R. Hubbard and Mr. and Mrs. Elno Hubbard of Hambden, were Wednesday callers at A. C. Warren's in their new automobile.

Mrs. Margaret Hodges and little daughter have returned home after a several weeks visit at the home of her parents, N. E. Logan.

Ernest Logan has a new horse and carriage.

Born—To Mr. and Mrs. Forrest Chamberlain, at the home of J. H. Winchell, a daughter, June 7.

WRESTLING BOUTS IN JAPAN.

Description of The Great Contests Which Are Held Twice a Year in Tokio.

It is no light matter to be a Japanese wrestler. Iyamasa Tokugawa, attache at the Imperial Japanese Embassy, gave an outline of what wrestling meant to the Japanese, and mentioned incidentally that the art originated in Japan before the Christian era.

Mr. Tokugawa said that there are no fewer than forty-eight formulae by which wrestlers try to bring opponents to earth—a sort of catch as catch can with forty-eight Queensberry rules added. Wrestlers are naked, except for a narrow girdle, and consequently it is not easy to get a "hold."

The Japanese have at present 587 trained wrestlers in the service of the Wrestling Association, and in June and January of every year there are great displays at the hall in Tokio. Beginning at sunrise, the matches continue until the evening, and it is not necessary for a fall to take place before a victory can be claimed.

On the floor of the amphitheatre is a square heap of earth three feet high and in that square is the wrestling ring, twelve feet in circumference, surrounded by twelve straw bags. Let a wrestler's knee touch the ground or the tip of his little finger go outside that ring and he has lost the match.

There are rigidly observed ranks among the wrestlers. All of them go under nicknames which are bestowed on them by their patrons or chosen by themselves. The highest class is what may be interpreted as the "rope" men. To be raised to this dazzling dignity is a rare event.

For 200 years there were only fifteen men who enjoyed the distinction, and the power to confer the title is held by an old Japanese family which is said to have been that which initiated the art. Altogether there are five grades of wrestlers, all gladiators who are eager to try their skill with men trained like themselves.

They begin the matches by first washing their mouths in a bucketful of water by the side of the ring. No suggestion is made that they bite each other, it is simply a peculiar rule. Then they sit on their haunches, hands on the ground and watch each other. If they feel confident they spring at each other suddenly and hold onto girdle or body. But if one does not wish to start the match and sees his opponent ready for the spring, he may call "Not yet," and they both go and wash their mouths again. "There are, therefore, many not yets," remarked Mr. Tokugawa dryly.—London Standard.

Matrimonial Tangle.

With the death the other night in a Philadelphia hospital of a resident of that city, it became known that he had been married eight years, notwithstanding that by the terms of his father's will, through which he inherited $250,000, he had been forbidden to remarry. His only alternative was to lose the money. The mother and brother of the dead man knew nothing of his marriage until after his death, when they went to the hospital to claim the body. There they found a woman they knew as unmarried, who lived just one block from them. She produced proofs of the marriage. Following the ceremony the deceased had returned to his home and she returned to live with her mother. Friends of both families are now wondering what will become of the $250,000.

Branded Small Girl.

After watching desperadoes apply hot irons to stolen cattle, three South San Francisco youths decided to be bad men themselves recently, and made a little thirteen-year-old girl their victim. Two held her while a third placed a hot branding iron on her back. The brand was a large R, which made her a member of the desperate clan. She endured the suffering and kept the secret, and, though the branding took place on April 19th, her parents did not discover it until the other day. Although the girl's injuries were painful at the time they will not prove serious. Doctors who examined her, however, declare that the marks will remain the rest of her life.

Therefore the Aforesaid Smith.

"Never sign a paper until you have read and understood every word of it," old lawyer Ruggles used to say," said Uncle Hiram casually, "but I want to bet my house and lot that four-fifths of the deeds, mortgages and insurance applications and policies have never been thoroughly read and understood by their makers and never will be."

Made Sport of Cupid.

Albert Stierli, a handsome Swiss plumber, was sentenced a few days since at Zurich to a year's imprisonment for defrauding seventeen young women, to whom he had become engaged at the same time. All of them still want to marry him. The judge remarked that Stierli would have committed a more serious crime if he had "married the lot," at which there was laughter in court. Stierli seemed glad when he was led away by two gendarmes, and the majority of his fiancees were in the court.

Killed by Pet Drake.

An aged woman resident of Phoenixville, Pa., was killed the other day by a drake, which has been a pet of the family for some time, but which has lately shown signs of ill temper. The woman was walking through the yard when she was attacked by the drake. In attempting to escape she fell and the fowl struck at her head and face with his bill. Relatives heard her cries and drove the drake away, but the woman died a few minutes later.

COX AND UNIT RULE VICTORS AT TOLEDO

CONGRESSMAN FROM THIRD OHIO DISTRICT HEADS THE DEMOCRATIC STATE TICKET.

HARMON GETS 48 DELEGATES

Mayor Baker of Cleveland, Backer of Woodrow Wilson, Declares He Will Fight Proposition on Floor at Baltimore.

DEMOCRATIC STATE TICKET.

Governor—James M. Cox.
Lieutenant Governor—Hugh L. Nichols.
Secretary of State—Charles H. Graves.
Auditor of State—Vic Donahey.
Treasurer of State—John Brennan.
Attorney General—T. S. Hogan.
State School Commissioner—Frank Miller.
Clerk of Supreme Court—Frank McKean.
State Food and Dairy Commissioner—S. E. Strode.
Board of Public Works—William Sainse and Tobias Scholl.
Supreme Judge (long term)—Oscar Newman.
Supreme Judge (long term)—W. E. Scofield.
Supreme Judge (short term)—J. Foster Wilkin.
Congressman-at-large—Robert Crosser.

***

Toledo, O.—The unit rule was adopted and James M. Cox was nominated for governor at the Democratic state convention here.

After a fight which had lasted 18 hours, the Harmon forces, led by Ed H. Moore, put through the unit rule, despite a brave contest conducted by Mayor Baker of Cleveland, the Harmon forces winning by 597 to 355. Under the unit rule, the chairman of the Ohio delegation to the national convention will cast the entire 48 votes of the delegation, including those of the 19 pledged Wilson delegates, for Harmon as long as he is in the race. Baker will fight the proposition on the floor at Baltimore.

Names 12 Delegates-at-Large.

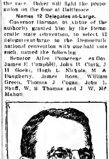
Governor Harmon, by virtue of the authority granted him by the Democratic state convention, to select 12 delegates-at-large to the Democratic national convention with one-half vote each, named the following:

Senator Atlee Pomerene, ex-Gov. James E. Campbell, John H. Clark, J. H. Goeke, Hugh L. Nichols, M. A. Daugherty, James Ross, William Green, Thomas J. Cogan, John L. Shuff, W. S. Thomas and J. W. McMahon.



JAMES M. COX.

Cox, newspaper publisher of Dayton and Springfield and congressman from the Third district, was nominated for governor by acclamation, after his name had been presented by Judge McCann of Dayton. Cox had kept the favor of the Harmon forces by splitting the vote of his home county, Montgomery, on the unit rule, although he had announced himself against it.

Present state officeholders from lieutenant governor down, except D. S. Creamer, state treasurer, were renominated. Lieut. Gov. Hugh Nichols, who had announced that he did not desire the nomination, was given it by acclamation, but he said he didn't know whether or not he would accept it.

Creamer has had two terms as treasurer and did not seek renomination. He was mentioned for governor, but did not allow his name to go before the convention.

John Brennan of Urbana was nominated for state treasurer on the second ballot.

Vic Donahey of Tuscarawas county was nominated for auditor of state on the fourth ballot, after a hard fight.

Vote on Unit Rule.

The majority vote on platform, embodying the unit rule, was adopted by a vote of 597 to 355 votes for the minority report as presented by Mayor Baker.

The battle on the unit rule began with a roar 20 minutes after the chairman's gavel fell in the Democratic state convention.

PLATFORM ADOPTED BY OHIO DEMOCRATS

"Be it resolved, by the Democracy in the state of Ohio in convention assembled, that

"Gov. Judson Harmon having secured a majority vote at the Democratic preferential primary for the presidency, and being entitled to choose the delegate-at-large under a resolution adopted previous to the primary by the Democratic state central committee, is hereby empowered and directed by this state convention to select and present for ratification by this convention 12 delegates-at-large, with a half vote each, who shall sit as delegates-at-large from Ohio at the Democratic national convention that convenes in Baltimore.

"The splendid record of constructive statesmanship made by the present Democratic national house of representatives has won the admiration of the nation and given proof that the party is in readiness for the larger power and responsibility about to be conferred on it.

"We favor the extension of the postal service by the federal government, and indorse in substance the bill providing for a postal express now pending in congress heretofore favorably reported by the interstate and foreign commerce commission of the house.

"In complete control of the legislative and executive power for the first time in 20 years, the Democratic party in Ohio in two years has a record of progressive and constructive achievement almost unparalleled in the history of American commonwealths, a record in signal contrast with that of the Republican oligarchy so long in control, which in its alliance with privilege has used the public treasury for the enrichment of its petty bosses and its captains of industry.

"Such a record entitles the Democracy to a continuation in power at the hands of the people of Ohio.

"The Democratic party, in practical reaffirmation of its allegiance to the doctrine that all political power is inherent in the people, has restored to them their weapons of self-defense through the initiative and referendum for cities and by giving them the direct nomination and election of United States senators. And it has made possible the rehabilitation of the judiciary by the creation of a non-partisan ballot for the election of judges.

"For the first time in the history of Ohio railroads and other public service corporations are paying taxes upon the same basis as the farm and home. By the enactment of a public utilities law, the rates, services and capitalization of the giant corporations so long free from public control are being regulated.

"The limitation of the hours of labor for women and the establishment of a workmen's compensation commission are an earnest of the desire of the Democracy to rescue the workers made helpless by industrial conditions and combinations.

"The control of the institutions of the state, long a source of public scandal, inefficiency and divided responsibility, has been committed to a central board of administration in accordance with the modern principles of economic and efficient business management.

"The non-partisan prosecution of bipartisan grafters, the inauguration of a system of competitive bidding for the use of the state funds, instead of placing these funds, as heretofore, in banks of favorite political friends, the enactment of a law to prevent corrupt practices at elections, the establishment of a reformatory for women and the introduction of agricultural instructions in the schools are evidences not only of the desire of the Democracy to serve, but also of its ability and competency to administer the state government in the interest of the people.

"The record of the past is the promise of the future.

"The Democratic party stands first for a restoration of the government to the people through direct legislation, and through the simplification of the machinery of government so that the people may adequately express themselves, and, second, for legislation looking to the abolition of privilege and to the restoration of equal opportunity to all.

"To this end, we favor:

"First, a short ballot in the selection of administration officers, as a means for insuring greater scrutiny in the selection of public officials and for fixing and centralizing responsibility.

"Second, separate ballots for state and national officers.

"Third, home rule for cities and villages, including the question of public or private ownership and operation of all public utilities.

"Fourth, the immediate valuation of the property, tangible and intangible, of all public utilities of this state, to the end that rates for service to the public shall be based on actual values and not upon fictitious capitalization.

"Fifth, home rule in taxation.

"Sixth, the adoption of the proposed amendment to the constitution providing for the initiative and referendum in state matters.

"Seventh, a further reduction in the hours of labor for women, and further restriction on the right of employment of children in workshops and factories.

"Eighth, the ratification of the proposed amendment to the federal constitution providing for the direct election of United States senators.

"Ninth, legislation looking to the improvement of the roads and highways of the state.

"Tenth, continuation of the reform in the conduct of the state's penal institutions which has been inaugurated, and abandonment of the present prison system.

"We indorse and approve the administration of Gov. Judson Harmon and the Democratic state officials as the best the state of Ohio has ever had.

"This convention fulfills the promise made without a dissenting vote by our immediate predecessors, the delegates who sat in the Democratic state convention of 1910 and pledged the Democratic party of Ohio to 'indorse and present Judson Harmon for the presidency in 1912.' This pledge was ratified by the voters of this state by a majority of over 100,000.

"His administration during the two intervening years justifies this confidence.

"Accordingly, the delegates from Ohio to the Democratic national convention at Baltimore are instructed to give their loyal support in an effort to make Gov. Judson Harmon the Democratic nominee for the presidency and further instructed to vote for him as a body as long as he permits his name to remain before the convention or as long as a majority vote of the Ohio delegation shall so desire."

GANGSTERS IN OPEN WAR

Eight Gun Fights and Two Bomb Explosions Result in One Man Being Killed and Six Wounded.

New York City.—Convinced that they can put down the present outbreak of the gangsters only by the most drastic methods, the New York police authorities sent an army of central office detectives into the downtown sections with instructions to shoot to kill any gun men found starting trouble.

The eight gun fights and two bomb explosions of the past three days with a record of one man killed and six wounded have turned the city into a mining camp. The task of the police has been rendered doubly difficult by the refusal of the gangsters to testify against each other when arrested.

A woman is said to be at the bottom of this latest outbreak of lawlessness. The followers of "Big Jack" Zelig, the police have learned, have sworn to exterminate the Sirocco outfit of Five Points fame.

Doctor Astonishes Hearers.

Atlantic City, N. J.—How the tissue of the human body are made to live after death and to grow in cold storage and serve practical purposes, was told at a session of the convention of the American Medical association here by Dr. Alexis Carrel of New York, who is in charge of that branch of the research work at the Rockefeller institute.

Dr. Carrel's address from the standpoint of progress in medical science was probably the most important of the convention.

Judge Upholds Newspaper.

Richmond, Va.—Contemporaneous reports of testimony taken in open court, however objectionable to some readers, are legitimate and may be circulated in the mails, according to the decision of Federal Judge Waddill here in the case of the United States against the Journal Co., incorporated, of this city.

The case grew out of the publication in the Richmond Evening Journal of testimony taken at the trial of Henry C. Beattie, Jr., for the murder of his wife last summer.

NATIONAL SOLON KILLED BY TRAIN

REPRESENTATIVE WICKLIFFE OF LOUISIANA HURLED BY ENGINE AGAINST SIGNAL POST.

WIFE HEARS NEWS IN CAPITOL

Sits in House Gallery Awaiting Husband's Arrival Until Seen by Fellow Congressman, Who Was About to Announce Death.

Washington, D. C.—The members of the house of representatives, assembling on June 11, found the desk of Robert C. Wickliffe of Louisiana draped in the cloth of mourning that silently announced the decease of a nation's lawmaker. The colleagues of the young statesman were shocked to learn that he had been killed by a train at the Potomac bridge during the early morning.

As they assumed their seats gravely in preparation for the customary tributes to the dead the solemn silence was broken by a tinkle of laughter—a woman's laughter—from the gallery. It fell strangely, harshly by contrast, on the scene of mourning. In surprise, the eyes of the statesmen were turned quickly toward a group of women who were chatting cheerily in the spectators' seats while waiting for the session to begin. It was instantly seen that the laughter was excusable, for the desk of the dead man was under the gallery and out of their sight. The chat ceased as Representative Estopinal arose to make the customary announcement and to propose an adjournment out of respect to the dead. He had spoken the first word when a sudden clap of Speaker Clark's gavel stopped him. The speaker had fixed his eyes on the little group of women in the gallery. And among them, smiling, radiant, unconscious of the tragedy that had fallen upon her life he had recognized the wife of the dead representative, Mrs. Wickliffe.

"Will the gentleman suspend for a minute," said the speaker huskily and quickly.

All eyes followed the speaker's glance to where Mrs. Wickliffe sat. General Estopinal dropped back in his chair while Speaker Clark, after a whispered conference, sent his clerk to require Mrs. Wickliffe to come to the speaker's room.

On the way out Mrs. Wickliffe was joined by Representatives Heflin (Ala.) and Cullop (Ind.). Evidently she read that something was wrong in their faces, for she cried:

"What is the matter, has anything happened to Bob?"

"He has been hurt, Mrs. Wickliffe," she was told.

"Is he dead?" she whispered.

"He is dead," returned big Representative Heflin, his deep voice husky, with tears.

Mrs. Wickliffe bore up bravely under the shock. In the speaker's room her friends crowded about her and endeavored to console her. None of the women friends who were searching for her arrived in time to comfort her because she insisted on being taken immediately home to her apartments in the Burlington to the bedside of her 4-year-old daughter, who was slightly indisposed.

It was this same indisposition of their child that probably led to the congressman's death, for Mr. and Mrs. Wickliffe had spent most of the night by her bedside. Representative Wickliffe, feeling the need for fresh air after his vigil, told his wife he thought he would go fishing and at 6 a. m. started. His movements up to the time of the accident are unknown.

Engineer Watkins of the train which struck Wickliffe saw the representative climb the embankment and stop on the track, apparently watching another train moving in an opposite direction. Before Watkins could stop his train the engine had struck Wickliffe and he was hurled against a signal post, more than ten feet from the track.

TWO DIE AS BIPLANE FALLS

United States Army Officer and a Representative of the Wright Company Are Dashed to Earth.

Washington, D. C.—A. T. Welsh of Brunswick, Ga., representing the Wright Biplane Co., and Lieut. L. W. Hazelhurst of the Seventeenth infantry were dashed to death when the biplane in which they were making an ascension crashed to the earth from an elevation of about 100 feet.

The aviator and his passenger had been in the air but three minutes when the accident occurred. He and Hazelhurst were just starting out on a climbing test. On the first round of the field they had reached an altitude of about 100 feet. Suddenly the machine dipped to one side and came to the ground with a crash, both men underneath. Death was instantaneous.

Tells Why He Killed Father.

Greensburg, Pa.—To free his mother, himself and other members of the family from the abuse of his father, Elmer Watt, aged 16, placed ten grains of strychnine in his father's whiskey, according to a confession by the boy in District Attorney W. T. Dunn's office.

The boy was formally charged with murder, as the elder Watt died May 19, a few hours after drinking the poisoned liquor.

Young Watt was arrested at his home by Corporal Dresser.

Helen Boyle Seeks Pardon.

Sharon, Pa.—Helen Boyle, the accomplice in the kidnaping of Billy Whitla three years ago and who is now serving a 25-year sentence in the western penitentiary, will make another try for her freedom. An application for Mrs. Boyle will be presented to the board of pardons in July.

This is the second attempt by Helen Boyle to regain her freedom. Her first effort failed. Now that the kidnaping case has become little more than history, the woman says she expects favorable consideration.

WOULD IMPEACH JUDGE

VICTOR BERGER MAKES CHARGES AGAINST HANFORD.

Congressman From Wisconsin Asks Action Against Man Who Denaturalized Socialist.

Washington, D. C.—Impeachment of Federal Judge Cornelius H. Hanford of Seattle, for annulling the naturalization papers of Leonard Olsson, a Seattle Socialist, and alleged "habitual drunkenness, 'moral and temperamental unfitness' and unlawful and corrupt" decisions, was formally demanded of the house by Representative Victor Berger.

A resolution directing the judiciary committee to investigate Judge Hanford and impeach him if the charges are proved, was introduced by Berger. It was referred to the committee after a brief statement by its author.

"I charge Judge Hanford with being an habitual drunkard," said Berger, in rising to a question of highest privilege.

"I charge him with having annulled on May 13, in violation of the constitution and on a frivolous charge (socialism) the naturalization papers of Leonard Olsson.

"I charge him with having issued in a collusive suit of August Peabody against the Seattle, Renton & Southern railway, in August, 1911, an injunction in the interests of the company and against the interests of the citizens of Seattle flagrantly in violation of justice and law.

"I charge him with being morally and temperamentally unfit to hold a judicial position.

"I charge him with having been guilty of a long series of unlawful and corrupt decisions."

In his resolution, Berger directs the judiciary committee to report if Hanford "has been repeatedly in a drunken condition while presiding in court, whether he has been guilty of corrupt conduct in office, whether his administration has resulted in injury and wrong to litigants and others and whether he has been guilty of any misbehavior for which he should be impeached."

Berger will appear shortly at a formal hearing before the committee to attempt substantiation of the charges. He says he has scores of affidavits to support the indictments.

The impeachment demand follows repudiation by President Taft and Attorney General Wickersham of Hanford's decision in the Olsson case.

The president has directed Wickersham to reopen Olsson's case, get a new trial, if possible.

MAKES PEACE WITH UNCLE SAM

Aluminum Trust Which Was Sued Under Sherman Law Agrees to Restriction.

Washington, D. C.—By a decree entered in the federal court at Pittsburgh, the aluminum trust formally made peace with the government. The trust, which was alleged to have control of 90 per cent of the output of aluminum by means of a system of restrictive contracts, and which was sued under the Sherman law several weeks ago, agrees to the nullification of these agreements.

The contracts of the Aluminum Co. of America, the "trust," with foreign companies, whereby the European and American markets are divided up on a percentage basis, are perpetually enjoined in the decree just issued.

The Aluminum Co. of America is forbidden from obtaining control through stock ownership, from hampering rivals by delaying shipments of raw materials, by price manipulation, or by withholding material used in manufacturing aluminum products.

Weds Daughter-in-Law.

Spartanburg, S. C.—Tucapau, a neighboring cotton mills village, was stirred by the announcement that William N. Mason, the village blacksmith, 58, had married his daughter-in-law, Mrs. Cora Lea Mason, 34.

Since the death of her husband, seven years ago, Mrs. Mason and her four children have been making their home with the father-in-law, who has been a widower 16 years. He is attached to his grandchildren and he feared a strange woman might not be kind to them.

Official Dispenser of Beer.

Wichita, Kan.—Sheriff John Millhaubt, of Wichita, through orders from the attorney general of Kansas, has an engagement to act as official "opener" of 18,000 bottles of beer.

Last October a special detective for Governor Stubbs seized here two car loads of beer from a Cincinnati company. It was ordered destroyed, but the company effected an agreement whereby the liquor was ordered poured out and the bottles and cases returned to it. Each bottle is to be [illegible] separately.

STANLEY PROBERS READY TO REPORT

COMPLETES EXHAUSTIVE INVESTIGATION INTO UNITED STATES STEEL CORPORATION.

PROPOSES STRINGENT LAWS

Accuses J. Pierpont Morgan of Being the Arch Enemy of Sherman Act and Independent Iron Business of United States.

Washington, D. C.—The Stanley committee, which made an exhaustive investigation into the United States Steel Corporation, will file its report with the house of representatives within the next ten days. The report will directly accuse J. Pierpont Morgan, leading spirit in the steel trust, of being the arch enemy of the Sherman anti-trust law and of the independent steel business in the United States. It will show that in the organization of this one company Mr. Morgan and his personal associates reaped the unprecedented profit of $636,000,000.

The report will recommend legislation for the dissolution of the United States Steel Corporation as a monopoly on raw material within the definition of the Sherman anti-trust law under the recent decision of the supreme court and as a holding company in defiance of a former decision in the case of the Northern Securities, a railroad combination. It will also recommend:

Federal incorporation and registration of all industrial corporations doing an interstate business with the right of federal inspection such as is now exercised over federal banks.

That the states be given the right to control the tax to be levied on corporations and the character of its business.

Legislation prohibiting national banks from participating as corporations in industrial combinations and will provide criminal penalties for interlocking directorate boards.

Legislation prohibiting in the future the acquisition by any individual or corporation of mineral rights or properties, whether in public or private ownership, that may lead to a monopoly within the definition of the law.

Delay in the presentation of the report was directly due to the hope on the part of Chairman Stanley that J. P. Morgan would return to the United States in time to testify.

"Mr. Morgan purposely fled the country to escape appearance before the committee," said Chairman Stanley. "I am not without hope that we will be able to summon him."

MOUNTAINS SPIT FORTH FIRE

Spout Hot Ashes, Flames and Rocks and Shake the Earth With Tremendous Explosions.

Tacoma, Wash.—Spouting hot ashes, flames and rocks, shaking the earth with tremendous explosions, terrifying the natives with vast subterranean noises, lighting and smoke filled skies with a livid glare by night, three or more miles high mountains, hundreds of miles apart, have burst into flame and are creating a reign of terror in southwestern Alaska. Cordova was awakened by a mighty rumbling and cannonading of Mounts Iliamna and Redoubt, more than 200 miles away.

From Seward comes word that the entire westward is wildly excited. The sky at Seward is covered with a dull red glow. Ashes are already three to four feet deep about Katmai. Ashes are falling at Sitka, 700 miles away from the volcanoes.

One Killed When Prisoners Riot.

San Francisco, Cal.—Continuation of the "bread riots" in San Quentin prison resulted in one prisoner being killed by a shot from a guard's rifle and another prisoner getting a bullet in the head. A third prisoner received a flesh wound in the leg. The dead: H. L. Linwood, a federal prisoner.

The injured: Frank Taylor, negro, from San Francisco, shot in the hand; H. A. George, from San Francisco, struck in the leg by the same bullet that came through Taylor's hand.

I cannot express my thanks for what Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has done for me. I had taken other medicines but did not find relief."—Miss CORA B. FOSNAUGH, Stoutsville, Ohio, R.F.D., No. 1.

Hundreds of such letters from mothers expressing their gratitude for what Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has accomplished for their daughters have been received by the Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Company, Lynn, Mass.

The Worst of It.

"Do you keep a cook, Mrs. Subub?"

"Madam, I not only keep the cook, but also her entire family."

His Changed Fortune.

"Wow! There went Smithkins in his new six. When I knew him a few years ago he had a junk shop."

"He still has. Only he moved it to a fashionable street, kept the same stock and labeled it 'Antiques.'"—Judge.

Still Hoping.

"Life is a series of disappointments."

"Yes. I know a man who has been hoping nearly all his life that he would some day come into possession of a coin worth more than its face value."

Pleading Out.

"Writing a story?" the caller asked the busy author.

"Yes, in dialect."

"I didn't think you ever made use of dialect."

"I don't, as a rule, but I have to now. Several letters are broken on my typewriter."

IN THE KINDERGARTEN

"Now, Willie, why do bees swarm—what is the cause of it?"

"Oh, simply bee cause, I guess."

INCIDENTS BEFORE THE BIG REPUBLICAN CONTEST IN THE COLISEUM AT CHICAGO

Chicago, June 10.—The chief duty of the Chicago hotel clerk just now is to point out the political celebrities. It has been necessary to describe big men of the convention for persons seeking them so many times that John Burk, head clerk of the Annex, can give finest identifying details of attire and build of a statesman in a moment.

A great part of the population of the hotel consists of newspaper, magazine, and free lance photographers. Twelve snapshotters were in an arc about Senator J. M. Dixon of Montana, Colonel Roosevelt's manager, when he consented to be photographed on his arrival.

Before the senator reached the hotel on Wednesday two men had been led out on Michigan avenue by the camera squad in the belief that each of the accommodating strangers was the Montanan. One photographer would be "tipped off" that "the tall, white haired man in the Panama is Senator Dixon."

The stranger at once would be invited out in the street for different poses in the sun. Of the two cases of mistaken identity one was A. B. Butler of Washington, a Taft camp aid. It is said the other was a Boston linen salesman. He did not deny he was Senator Dixon, and posed graciously with and without his hat and facing in different advantageous angles.

A New One From Texas.

Col. Cecil Lyon of the Texas delegation, and an irrepressible supporter of Roosevelt, had a new story to tell to take the place of his old one about the cataclysm in Yoakum county, Texas, where a Democratic county convention instructed for Roosevelt, causing Wilson supporters to bolt.

"I was walking down the street with Charles Hilles in Washington the other day," began Colonel Lyon, after some one had said President Taft's secretary had arrived at the Blackstone hotel.

"A small delivery wagon passed," the colonel continued. "I looked up and saw four large volumes stacked on top with the titles facing us. Three of the books were reports of the Republican conventions of 1900, 1904 and 1908. The fourth was 'Problems of the Day,' by William H. Taft. I directed Mr. Hilles' attention to the load of books. He seemed offended."

Borah's Bushy Hair.

Senator Borah of Idaho is one of the few big men of the convention who cannot be called picturesque, unless his bushy hair entitles him to that description. It is said his only reason for wearing so much hair is to conceal a bad scar on the back of his head received in an accident in his youth.

Mr. Borah, like Jonah K. Kalanianaole, Hawaiian delegate, has a round, chubby, Buster Brown type of physiognomy. His dignity, however, is such that none would think of calling him "Cupid"—and that is the brown skinned islander's nickname in congress.

Has His Name on $5 Bill.

A southern delegate was much excited over the appearance of a tall negro at the Coliseum annex who figured in several conferences.

"Have you a $5 bill?" asked a friend.

When the currency was produced the friend called attention to the signature of the registrar of the treasury, Judson Lyon.

"That same dark person over there is Judson Lyon, delegate from Georgia," was the explanation.

Uroy Woodson's Story.

Uroy Woodson, secretary of the Democratic national committee, is telling a story which has what he claims is a moral.

"You Republicans," says Mr. Woodson, "remind me of old Colonel Gunfire, who, although a Democrat, lived in a stronghold of Republicanism. One winter he blew in and asked to be sworn in as a member of the Democratic legislature.

"Colonel, did you sure enough beat a Republican?"

"Suh, I beat three of 'em at once."

"Now that is what we are going to do in less numbers. Get together and scrap, but after it is over watch us Democrats beat two of you, Taft and Teddy, all at once."

Want Sherman Renominated.

Former Governor Franklin Murphy of New Jersey took his seat with the national committee minus the vice-presidential boom which he had with him four years ago. This year Mr. Murphy is singing the praises of Vice-President Sherman for another term.

"I know that custom is against renominating a vice-president," he said, "but there is a strong current in favor of renominating Vice-President Sherman. It will probably be an eastern man and all the gossip I have heard has been for Sherman."

Mr. Murphy added that the "vice-presidential bee" has ceased to buzz in his direction.

A group of out-of-town newspaper representatives were on the point of making an enumeration in the vicinity of the Coliseum of emergency cafes for reference in times of busy sessions.

"Col. Cecil Lyon has just put through a motion making newspaper men guests at a cafe service to be installed in headquarters at once," said a committeeman who left the session before adjournment.

Colonel Lyon was proposed for dark horse candidate—immediately and unanimously.

Good Nature the Rule.

Good nature is the rule among all of the national committeemen and delegates. None is too harassed by puzzling political entanglements to deny any one a smile and handshake.

"An old crab has lots of luck in this game—I don't think!" laughed Senator Dixon, Roosevelt's manager, after he had passed out a dozen pulsating hand grasps. Then he walked over to former Senator Dick—Taft contest director—in the lobby of national committee headquarters at the Coliseum annex and slapped him on the back.

"Lo," said Mr. Dixon.

"Right back at you, senator," smiled Mr. Dick.

Those who were near the two chiefs of the hostile camps could hear a boyish "Joe" and "Charley" being exchanged at times. They were like old college chums. Friendly eye twinkling scenes between chiefs and lieutenants and subalterns of the opposing forces were common.

One noteworthy meeting that started amicably and ended in a torrid argument was between Joseph Keating of Indiana and Congressman Lucius C. Littauer of New York.

Importance of the Bell Boys.

The bell boys of the big hotels have been pressed into service for all sorts of duties. They not only carry ice water and life preservers to the various headquarters and rooms of delegates, but also serve in the capacity of page, "state house messenger," marshal of delegations, office boy, introducer, and general headquarters attache.

There are hundreds of different documents to be exchanged between headquarters, with verbal explanations to go to the men in charge.

"Here's the list of delegates from Alabama with the Twenty-third district left out," a delegation chief explains to the boy in buttons. "Take it up to Senator Blank with my compliments, and inform him I will send the rest to him in half an hour."

When a hop was dispatched with a copy of the recommendations of the rules committee, to be submitted to the national committee, a senator remarked:

"That young man has a mission of more widespread influence than that of any other boy in America."

"Whoo-ee," sighed a bell boy. He was counting change. "Nine hours on the hop and only $1.60 in tips. I am going to vote the Democratic ticket straight."

Teddy's Bulldog.

When the Roosevelt press bureau arrived from Washington they brought with them a new campaign song which is causing a smile even among the Taft delegations. It is to the tune of "Casey Jones."

Teddy's gotta dawg, but he aint no
hound,
He's a square jawed bull, and his face
is round,
His legs is short, and he's close to the ground,
And you bet they ain't kickin' Teddy's dawg around.

CHORUS

Square jawed bull, and his face is round,
Squared jawed bull, and his face is
round,
Short legged bull, close to the ground,
And you bet they ain't kickin' Teddy's
bull around.

The Democratic dawg, the unlucky
hound
That the boys have all been kickin' around
Is the same old dawg that's been stick-in' roun'
Since old Abe Lincoln came to Washington town.

And now he comes back, the measly
hound,
With his face and his tail still hangin'
down,
The hungry, sly old lop eared hound,
No wonder the boys have been kickin'
round.

All Taft Types.

It has been noticed that a great part of the delegates that have arrived are robust men. "All Taft types," commented an admirer of the president. Chief among the heavyweights is A. M. Stevenson, Colorado national committeeman, who hails from Denver. Mr. Stevenson weighs more than 280 pounds.

Delegation From Hawaii.

Seated in a corner of the Pompeiian room at the Congress hotel was a little party composed of the Hawaiian delegation. Prince Kalanianaole, generally called "Prince Cupid," and C. A. Rice, delegates from the island; H. L. Holstein, national committeeman, A. Horner, secretary to the delegation, and Colonel S. Parker, the "Mark Hanna of Hawaii," made up the party.

"It can't be all work and no play," said the prince.

Since a Roosevelt delegation came into the Congress singing a parody on the "Houn' Dog," Taft supporters have begun to put themselves in practice for the campaign yells.

Short, long, loud and sharp, they come in all varieties. Some are for use before and some after the nomination. A mourning song is being written, bemoaning the fate of "Teddy," and several in jubilation, in anticipation of the success of Taft. A farewell yell will be put in use later. The last line tells the whole story. "We're going home, we're broke."

Colonel Lyon's Bride.

Colonel Lyon of Texas asked Mrs. Lyon to pose for newspaper photographers. She did it with reluctance, and after it was all over the colonel said softly, with a wink at the reporters: "Dear, don't let those fellows know you are a bride."

The colonel and Mrs. Lyon have been married several years and have one presidential possibility.

"I like to kid her, you see," explained the colonel, "but she knows a joke when she sees it. By the way, that girl can mix the best mint julep in the world, but wouldn't drink one. Along the same policy she says she will move out of any state that ever goes prohibition. One day while she was visiting in Colorado she read in the paper that I was going to change my politics. She immediately wrote me that if I did that it was up to me, but that she and the maid and the cook and the men on the ranch would all be 'agin' me, and quietly hinted that the best thing I could do was to vote for Teddy as long as I live."

WILL NOT SIGN AMENDMENT ROLL

THE SCIOTO COUNTY DELEGATE REFUSES TO APPROVE NEW OHIO AMENDMENTS.

ADJOURNS TO MEET AUGUST THE 26th

The Convention Favored State-Wide Publicity and Has Arranged for Speeches to Be Made Over the State.

Columbus.—Completing all details of its work, the constitutional convention adjourned at 11 o'clock June 7 until August 26, unless called together sooner by the written request of 25 of its members.

The grand resolution, in which has been placed the 42 proposed changes in the present constitution, has been formally engrossed and signed by 118 of the delegates to the convention. One name is missing, that of Delegate Nelson W. Evans of Scioto county. He declined to affix his signature on the ground that the taxation plank is wrong, that the only proper method of taxation is classification of property and that he could not afford to sign his name to a political and scientific heresy.

Captain Evans brought to the convention at the beginning a complete state constitution and gave each of the delegates a copy. It left the entire taxation question in the hands of the general assembly with full power to handle the problem as it saw proper. The delegates did not take kindly to the Evans plan and no section of it was enacted into the proposed organic laws.

Secretary Galbreath was supplied with seven assistants who will complete the work of the office. They are to be retained as long as required. They will handle all matters ordered by the committee on submission and the detail of publicity campaign agreed upon.

The session on August 26 was arranged for the purpose of correcting the work accomplished in case any serious flaw is discovered before that date.

President Bigelow and most of the delegates will be on the stump talking for the amendments during the summer and particularly during the weeks immediately preceding the special election September 3. Mayor Newton D. Baker of Cleveland, Mayor Brand Whitlock of Toledo and other men of prominence will be on the stump asking the people for an approval of the amendments. It will be a lively campaign.

While the delegates favor widespread newspaper publicity, they also desire all the public speaking that can be arranged for. The progressives are expected to handle a great deal of the work of the public meetings.

Would Abandon Canal.

Declaring that the Miami and Erie canal is nothing more than a big open ditch, laden with pestilential and disease-breeding germs, the Central Improvement association of Dayton began a movement toward declaring the canal a nuisance by the board of health and effecting its abandonment.

Experts to Aid Farmers.

Columbus.—Each of the 88 counties in Ohio will have a resident expert to confer with farmers regarding the way to assure best possible crops, under an arrangement which has been made between the Ohio experiment station at Wooster and the United States department of agriculture.

A state leader will be in charge and seven district supervisors will direct the work. The salary and expenses of the state leader and the district supervisors will be paid jointly by the experiment station and the government.

County agents will be supported partly by the people of the counties or some organization interested in the advance of agriculture and by the Wooster station. The scheme will be put in operation about July 1.

Gets $75,000 by Court Ruling.

In reversing the circuit and sustaining a verdict in common pleas court for $14,296.14 in favor of the New York Coal Co., which has offices at the state capitol, the supreme court established a precedent which will result in the local company receiving about $75,000 in pending suits to recover amounts it claims by contract when leased mine yields do not equal the minimum output as per contract.

The New York company leased a mine to the New Pittsburg Coal Co. of Pittsburg, with provision that 10 cents royalty be paid to the lessee and that 100,000 tons a year be mined. The output for the year did not reach 100,000 tons and the local company sued for the difference. A jury in Judge Bigger's court returned a verdict in its favor. Three similar suits are pending in which the New York company is plaintiff.

Supreme Court Ruling.

By a decision of the supreme court it is held that when a man takes out burial insurance on his wife, the insurance company cannot, upon her death, dictate what undertaker shall perform the services.

Bond Issue Denied.

The application of the Columbus, Kenton & Toledo Traction Co. to increase its capital $50,000 and to sell $1,285,000 bonds in order that it might extend its line into Columbus was turned down.

The public service commission also denied the right of the Lake Shore Electric Railway Co. to issue $56,000 of mortgage bonds when it discovered the corporation intended to sell the bonds at 80 instead of par. The railway made petition for the right to issue the bonds for improvements.

Complaints from patrons of the line that it is being operated with insufficient equipment has caused the commission to notify the officials of the Tri-State Railway & Electric Co. to appear before the state commission July 15, when the case will be investigated.

Clearings Show Business Betterment.

Every large city in Ohio showed healthy increase in bank clearings for the month of May as compared with the clearings of May last year, with the exception of Toledo. Columbus clearings showed an increase of $4,125,600 for the month compared with May last year. According to the bank clearings, business throughout the state is in a far better condition than for a number of years. The total clearings for Columbus were $27,767,500, compared with $23,641,900 in May last year; Cincinnati's clearings were $125,887,200 against $104,323,200 last year; Cleveland's clearings were $82,393,672 against $80,275,571 last year; Toledo's were $19,829,098 against $20,840,000; Dayton's were $9,384,203 against $9,292,734; Youngstown's were $5,788,729 against $4,250,415, and Akron's were $9,384,000 against $4,170,000 last year.

Ohio Pensioners Dying Off Fast.

Columbus.—The number of removals from the pension rolls of the Columbus agency by death during the month of May was the largest in many years—375. That includes both soldiers themselves and dependents. Of Civil war veterans there were 233 deaths. Seven hundred and forty widows of Civil war soldiers died, six widows of the Mexican war veterans and one widow of a soldier of the War of 1812. The number of pensioners of all kinds on the roll of the Columbus agency was, at the beginning of June, 50,164.

Fixes State Tax Rate.

State Auditor Fullington has announced that the 1912 tax rate for state purposes would be four hundred and fifty-one thousandths of one mill. Of this three hundred and thirty-five ten thousandths of one mill is for the sinking fund, eight hundred and twenty-five ten thousandths of one mill for the university fund, and three hundred and thirty-five thousandths of one mill for the state common school fund.

Fair Passless Again.

Secretary A. P. Sandles of the state board of agriculture has announced that the next state fair to be held the last week in August, would be a "passless fair."

This means that the exhibitors themselves will have to pay to get in each day to exhibit their wares. All of the fair privileges have already been let and there is very little space left to dispose of.

Investigate Farmer Company.

The Farmers' Grain & Seed Co. of Henry county is a unique business enterprise recently investigated by a representative of the college of agriculture, Ohio State university. It is a stock company of over 200 farmers, who own an elevator and buy and sell grain, coal, tile, fence posts, carbide and fertilizers. The company was organized a year ago with a capital stock of $8,800, the stock to be sold at $25 per share.

All stockholders must be farmers and no man can hold more than eight shares. After the stock had been sold an elevator was erected at a cost of $10,000, leaving the company with an indebtedness of $2,000.

The first grain was received by the new elevator August 7, 1911. December 1 a dividend of 5 per cent was declared on the capital stock. It is estimated that they will have handled during the year about 500,000 bushels of grain.

Some of the corn purchased by this farmers' company is sold in carload lots to inland points, but the bulk of the grain is sold on the four terminal markets, Toledo, Buffalo, Baltimore and Pittsburg. The success of this enterprise has led to the formation of ten other similar organizations in Henry county. They are not yet in operation, but expect to be in the near future.

From Farm Back to Forest.

An Ohio farmer is solving the problem of what to do with a wornout farm in this interesting manner. He owns an old homestead of 60 acres, which he is desirous of keeping in the family. He does not live on the place, however, for the reason that farming on it has of late years been a decidedly losing proposition. He has, therefore, decided to plant the entire tract in trees. Already 35,000 Norway spruce have been set out, 3½ feet apart each way, on an area of about 11 acres. The trees will be cut, as they become large enough, for Christmas trees. Chestnut seedlings will be planted in the space left by the removal of the spruce, and it is expected that these will come into bearing by the time the last spruce is cut. In addition to the spruce, hardy catalpa, black locust, elm, box elder and sycamore have been planted. It is planned to put the entire 60 acres in forest within five or six years.

Cetone's Trial Postponed.

Columbus.—Owing to illness of State Senator George K. Cetone of Dayton, his trial on charges of having accepted a bribe was postponed to the September term of court. The trial of Representative George B. Nye was set tentatively for June 17.

Work for "Pen" Men.

If present plans of the board of administration do not miscarry, 150 penitentiary prisoners will be taken to Carroll county, where they will begin work on the strip of road which is being built jointly by the county and state. Tents have been provided for the men and camp will be pitched at the scene of operations.

In addition to the squad sent to Carroll county the board expects to send an equal number to Stark county, where the state and county are building a co-operative road.

Governor Invited West.

Through the Cleveland Grays, the Ohio Society of California has issued an invitation to Gov. and Mrs. Harmon to attend a meeting of that organization, which will be held at San Francisco July 2. A special train has been chartered by the Cleveland organization, and Gov. and Mrs. Harmon will join the party here should they decide to accept the invitation. The trip will be made primarily for the selection of a site for the Ohio building at the Panama-Pacific exposition.

EIGHT SLAIN IN BEDS

SIX MEMBERS OF FAMILY AND TWO FRIENDS MURDERED.

Victims' Heads Are Mashed and an Ax Covered With Blood and Hair Is Found.

Villisca, Ia.—Joseph Moore, a prominent Villisca business man, his wife, and four children—Herman, 11; Catherine, 9; Boyd, 7; Paul, 6—and Misses Edith and Blanch Stillinger, 20 and 18, friends of the Moores, were found murdered in the Moore home. Their heads had been mashed and an ax covered with blood and hair was found.

All were murdered in their beds. There is no definite clew to the murderer, although search is being made, it is said, for one person suspected by the authorities.

Owing to the terrible mutilation, the identity of the two young women could not at first be established. They were believed to be Mrs. Van Gilder and her daughter, relatives of the Moores. Later they were positively identified as the Stillinger sisters, daughters of a wealthy farmer living a few miles from Villisca, who had been in attendance at a church entertainment here the night previous.

Horses neighing in the barn at the Moore home caused a woman neighbor to notice that no member of the family appeared to be up. After failing to effect an entrance to the house, the city marshal was summoned and the doors forced.

Moore and his wife were the first to be discovered. They were lying in their bed in a front room. Then came the finding of the bodies of the two guests and later those of the children in a third room.

No robbery was committed and it seems that only a desire for revenge could have prompted the murder unless the work was done by a madman.

DEATH DUE TO STRENUOUS HOP

Woman Bursts Blood Vessel in Her Side While Trying to Master the Turkey Trot.

Atlantic City, N. J.—Mrs. Agnes E. Day, aged 21, is dead at her home here as the result of her desire to master the turkey trot. Friends who heard of her sudden death learned that she had been practicing the dance with her husband prior to going to one of the piers to witness experts do the trot.

She was seized with a sudden pain in her side and stopped the strenuous hop. The young woman fell to the floor unconscious. Before physicians had arrived she was dead. Examination showed that she had burst a blood vessel in her side.

LAYS DOWNFALL TO SODAS

Man Arrested for Robbery Says He Cut Out Real Drinking and Got Into Trouble.

New York City.—Returning to her home at 2475 Eighth avenue, Mrs. Leonore Kehlenback saw two men coming from her apartments. One of them entered an ice cream parlor. Mrs. Kehlenback called Policeman Boylan and told him where the man had gone. After the man had gulped down two sodas he was arrested.

"If I hadn't cut out real drinking I never would have been here now," said the prisoner. "My friends always said those ice cream sodas would get me into trouble and they have. Just couldn't keep from them when I had the money to buy."

INVENTOR'S WIDOW PENNILESS

Woman Whose Husband Originated Roll Top Desk Is Dispossessed From Her Home.

New York City.—Hundreds of persons stood in front of a brownstone house just off Fifth avenue at 26 East Seventy-ninth street, and watched a gray haired, beat woman who sat on the stoop, keeping watch over her household effects.

She is Mrs. Mary Finn, 60, widow of Thomas Finn, inventor of the roll top desk, who once enjoyed all the luxuries of wealth.

Senate to Oust Wood.

Washington, D. C.—After three hours' debate over the proposal to legislate Gen. Leonard Wood out of office as chief of staff of the army and the question of appointing a commission to investigate the subject of abandoning certain army posts the senate, by a vote of 27 to 24, adopted the conference report on the army appropriation bill.

The fight over the Wood issues was between Senators Lodge and Root on one side and Senator Warren on the other, and the latter won.

Girl Saved by Surgeon's Skill.

New York City.—Picked up for dead, Esther Harris, 18, whose escape from the Triangle shirt waist fire last year was made at the cost of a broken neck and back, has been cured.

Unable to move even a finger for 11 months after the tragedy in which 147 men and women were killed, she can stand and walk unassisted.

On the bare hope it might help, Dr. Henry W. Frauenthal treated her by means of a system of weights which finally pulled the vertebrae back in position.

Pleads Guilty to Murder.

Beaver, Pa.—Fred C. Attle, a very wealthy farmer of Frankfort Springs, who, on May 16, beat his wife, Elizabeth C. Attle, to death with a poker and then dragged her body to a small creek near their home, pleaded guilty to a charge of murder before Judge R. S. Holt.

Testimony will be presented to fix the degree of the crime.

Attle's plea was a surprise to the big crowd which had assembled in the court room to hear the proceedings in the trial.

Ohio Happenings

Sandusky.—The postoffice at the Ohio soldiers' and sailors' home, two miles east of this city, was robbed of $519 worth of stamps and $5.69 in cash between midnight and morning. Postoffice Inspector Charles G. Pfeil and Sheriff Herman Reuter believe the job was done by professionals, probably members of the gang that has been operating in northern Ohio for several months. Entrance to the building was gained through a rear window, ten feet from which is the guard house in which are quartered the soldiers' home police, who go off duty at midnight.

Continental.—This village is still in an upheaval as a result of the fire which destroyed the business section. The fire consumed 17 business houses and six residences. The total loss on all buildings will be $60,000, with about three-fourths covered by insurance. Most of the owners of the buildings that burned reside here and it was stated that new structures will be erected as soon as the insurance can be adjusted.

Canton.—After being converted by Billy Sunday here last January and actively taking up evangelistic work, Jack Cardiff, boxing instructor at the Y. M. C. A. and claimant to the welterweight championship, will abandon his newly chosen field and return to the roped arena. "A man must live," says Cardiff, in explanation.

Norwalk.—D. W. Johnston, president of the Huron County Banking Co., tendered his resignation on account of ill health. The company refused to accept it, granting him an extended vacation instead.

Findlay.—Eighty-six congregations comprising a church population of more than 20,000, are represented by delegates in the fifty-sixth annual convention of the synod of the Evangelical Lutheran church of Ohio here. Officers elected follow: President, Dr. W. G. Dressler, Findlay; secretary, Rev. J. J. S. Rumbarger, Adamsville; treasurer, Rev. J. M. Wenrick, Wapakoneta. More than 100 ministers are present.

Warren.—Republicans of the second division of the Seventh judicial district, composed of Mahoning, Trumbull and Portage counties, in convention here unanimously nominated Probate Judge David F. Griffith of Youngstown as candidate for judge of common pleas court. The name of Attorney W. S. Anderson of Youngstown also will appear on the ticket. He was nominated at the recent primaries.

Youngstown.—Fire did $10,000 damage to John S. Orr & Son's undertaking place of this city. DeWitt Morrow, his wife and two children, narrowly escaped being trapped in their apartments on the third floor of the building. They were saved by a barn man who had jumped from the second story. The fire for a time threatened the Grand opera house and adjoining buildings.

Columbus.—A. D. Alderman, postmaster at Marietta, charged with embezzling $3,070 from his office, was sentenced in the United States court here to ten months in the Miami county jail and fined $3,070. Alderman was secretly indicted by the federal grand jury. Learning that he was to be placed under arrest, he came to Columbus. As soon as the shortage in his accounts became public Postmaster Alderman paid back the embezzled money.

Cincinnati.—Discovery of the alleged wholesale selling of babies at prices ranging from $10 to $100 is the latest development in the war on baby "farms," headed by R. A. Longman of the Children's home, last year's president of the state conference of charities. Information in the case of Nora Davis appeared to show that her baby, which had been born in a hospital, was not dead as she had been notified, but sold. Habeas corpus papers have been drawn up to gain possession of the child.

Cleveland.—Three operators of the Bell Telephone Co. were injured by plaster falling on them as they sat at their work in the main exchange building. They were Miss Pearl Dobson, shoulder broken; Miss Augusta Swanson, bruised about the head and shoulders; Miss Anna S. Brady, bruised. All were rendered unconscious. Officials of the company, however, declare that the 85 other operators at work in the room were not panic stricken at the time but remained at their positions.

Cleveland.—The beating of a baby's fists against the window pane and his frightened cry gave the first hint that his mother, Mrs. Rebecca Jacobson, 22, had been shot and killed by a suitor whose advances she had repulsed in her home here. The suitor, Sidney Phillips, who had been a boarder at the Jacobson home, after firing two bullets into the body of the woman whom he could not win from her husband, placed the pistol to his head behind his left ear and fired a bullet into his brain. He fell dead beside the body of his victim.

Cambridge.—Mary H., 14 months old daughter of Deputy Mine Inspector Abel Elwood, fell from a porch at her home into a bucket of water this morning and drowned before she was discovered. The child's parents were preparing to attend the funeral of a relative and had placed the child on the porch but a few minutes before the accident occurred.

Cincinnati.—A body believed to be that of Jeannette Simpkins, aged 23, who committed suicide by jumping into the Ohio river from the deck of a pleasure steamer, was taken from the river near here.

Steubenville.—Wild screeches of "Help, help!" rent the air. John Brown, a tinworker, appeared to be causing the commotion. There was a rush in his direction. Brown pulled a Brazilian parrot from his pocket. He was explaining to a policeman when the owner of the bird ran up and had him arrested on the charge of stealing it.

Wooster.—Brigadier General Aquilla Wiley, aged 80, Civil war veteran and attorney, died here. He was defeated in a race for congress against the late President William McKinley in 1877.

HIRES
HOUSEHOLD EXTRACT
FOR MAKING OLD FASHIONED HOME-MADE ROOTBEER
Every home should make rootbeer in springtime for its deliciousness and its fine tonic properties.

Only Thinking.

"Where are you thinking of going this summer?"

"I'm thinking of England, Norway, and Scotland, but I'll probably go to Peak Beach."

A Fine Distinction.

The friend of the city editor was being initiated into the mysteries of modern journalism.

"How large a staff have you?" he asked.

"Let me see," mused the city editor. "We have about fifty men, five women and three society reporters."—Judge.

The Only Way.

An elder while baptizing converts at a revival meeting advanced with a wiry, sharp-eyed old chap into the water. He asked the usual question, whether there was any reason why the ordinance of baptism should not be administered. After a pause a tall, powerful-looking man who was looking quietly on remarked:

"Elder, I don't want to interfere in yer business, but I want to say that this is an old sinner you have got hold of, and that one dip won't do him any good; you'll have to anchor him out in deep water over night."—Life.

WELL POSTED.
A California Doctor With Forty Years' Experience.

"In my forty years' experience as a teacher and practitioner along hygienic lines," says a Los Angeles physician, "I have never found a food to compare with Grape-Nuts for the benefit of the general health of all classes of people.

"I have recommended Grape-Nuts for a number of years to patients with the greatest success and every year's experience makes me more enthusiastic regarding its use.

"I make it a rule to always recommend Grape-Nuts and Postum in place of coffee when giving my patients instructions as to diet, for I know both Grape-Nuts and Postum can be digested by anyone.

"As for myself, when engaged in much mental work my diet twice a day consists of Grape-Nuts and rich cream. I find it just the thing to build up gray matter and keep the brain in good working order.

"In addition to its wonderful effects as a brain and nerve food Grape-Nuts always keeps the digestive organs in perfect healthy tone. I carry it with me when I travel, otherwise I am almost certain to have trouble with my stomach." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

Strong endorsements like the above from physicians all over the country have stamped Grape-Nuts the most scientific food in the world. "There's a reason."

PLUTOCRACY FIGHTING SINGLE TAX.

In Ohio a constitutional convention is framing a new state constitution. They have incorporated in it the state-wide Initiative and Referendum but the opponents of these reforms secured the adoption by the convention of an amendment providing that the Initiative and Referendum shall never be used "to enact a law authorizing any classification of property for the purpose of levying different rates of taxation thereon, or of authorizing any single tax on land or land values or land sites at a higher rate or by a different rule than is or may be applied to improvements thereon or to personal property."

We know of no better advertisement which could be given to the Single Tax propaganda in Ohio. What is this "Single Tax," that somebody is evidently so afraid of, and why do they fear it so? This amendment not only forbids the people to adopt the Single Tax, it also forbids them to classify property at all, for purposes of taxation. IN WHOSE INTEREST ARE THE PEOPLE FORBIDDEN to touch the existing system of taxation? If the Single Tax would really harm the State—which means the people of the State, as a whole—why is it necessary to forbid the people of the State to adopt it? For, note, that the Legislature is not forbidden to adopt the Single Tax, it is only the people who are forbidden to do so, by their direct action. The interests who dread the Single Tax are evidently confident that they can control the legislature. It is the people they are afraid of. Why is this? Why is just one subject picked out which the people themselves shall have nothing to say about, and that one the most important of all to every family in the State—taxation? They say to the people of Ohio "On all other subjects you may have a check on your representatives, but in this little matter of taxation you must deliver yourselves absolutely into your legislature's hands. IT may adopt the Single Tax (we'll risk that); but YOU must never do so. IT may classify property (we'll see that it doesn't); but YOU must never do so." What a touching confidence these friends of personal property taxation show in the justice of their cause, in the truth of their assertions that the Single Tax would ruin the farmers, the workingman with "just his little home," and the investor! The men who procured that amendment know that the leaven of the Single Tax idea is spreading rapidly throughout the world. They will trust their powers of persuasion on the Legislature—a legislature can be persuaded so quietly, without coming out into the open, but they doubt their ability to make the farmer, the workingman and the business man believe in the wickedness of the Single Tax much longer.—Duluth (Minnesota) Record

IS THE BEEF TRUST BIGGER THAN THE U. S. GOVERNMENT?

Made bold by its victory after a nine years delay in the courts in the famous "trust busting" suit started against it by former president Roosevelt, this trust has boosted meat prices to the highest figure ever known in this country, not even excepting war times. The trust gives a "shortage in the supply of live stock" as its reason for this increase in prices.

That this excuse is only a subterfuge is shown by the last report of the government bureau of statistics, which shows that instead of a shortage in the live stock supply, there has been a steady increase.

"The supply of cattle that reached the seven principal western markets in April was greater than in any April of the last decade," the report says. "The number of cattle shipped to Chicago last month was 13 per cent greater than for the same month last year, and 40 per cent greater than for April of 1910. There was a proportionate increase in the supply of hogs and sheep, also, and that the quality of these animals was fully up to the standard of former years is indicated that the supply of dressed [illegible] in [illegible] warehouses is greatly in excess of the amount held there last year."

This report shows that the beef trust has made up its mind to force the consumer to pay the cost of the nine years' suit it has just won. All the big fees paid out to lawyers for keeping the packers out of the penitentiary will be taken from the pockets of the consumers. Nothing must interfere with the trust's dividends!

A subcommittee of the Judiciary committee of the Democratic House of Representatives has begun an investigation of the beef trust, and its report will be an answer to the question as to whether the beef barons are more powerful than the United States government.

WILSON AND THE BOSSES

With former Senator James Smith, who is remembered only for party perfidy, James Nugent, the subservient tool of predatory corporations, and the whole motley crew of political pirates who have made the very name of Democracy a synonym for corruption in the state of New Jersey bitterly opposed to him, Woodrow Wilson has carried New Jersey by an overwhelming majority. Smith and Nugent did manage to get elected delegates to the Democratic national convention, but in that great assemblage they will be shunned and despised by every honest and true Democrat. They will be made to feel that their absence would be far more desirable than their presence. Such men are entirely out of place in a convention representing the will of the people and determined to eradicate predatory privilege and boss domination. If they were not absolutely destitute of every sense of decency, indifferent to every sense of honor, they would not pollute the Baltimore convention with their presence. Thanks to Woodrow Wilson, the Smiths and Nugents will soon be retired to the shades of private life and public life will be purer and healthier for it.

Gov. Wilson has every reason to feel gratified with the gains made in the last two weeks. Following so closely on his splendid run in Ohio where he made an almost equal division of voting strength with Harmon, the three great results in Texas, Minnesota and New Jersey place him easily in the lead of any other candidate for the Democratic presidential nomination.

Wilson has been placed at a great disadvantage in his state by having the machine bitterly opposed to him. Clark, Harmon and Underwood did not have to fight their state machines. They received the support of the machines instead. Furthermore, Clark, Harmon and Underwood seem to have unlimited financial resources, while Wilson is practically penniless. And yet Wilson has 323 votes to his credit, Clark 276, Underwood 82, Harmon 32, uninstructed 142, and scattering 94. In this compilation the 20 votes from Kansas are conceded to Clark, although the delegates favor Wilson and will probably support him on the second ballot. The nomination of Roosevelt now appears certain. If this should prove to be the fact, the Baltimore convention will be compelled to nominate either Wilson or Bryan. A weak or reactionary candidate is out of the question.

A BAD SIGN

Whenever you see a democrat devoting his time to warning the people against the "passion of the mob" and the "thoughtlessness of the multitude" and the "ignorance of the masses," beware of him. There are a great many dangers that are more menacing than any of these. The cunning of the greedy, the unscrupulousness of the predatory and the avarice of the beneficiary of special privilege these are real dangers, and a democrat who does not see them, confesses that he is among them while the man who warns the public against the people in effect declares that he does not consider himself one of the people. There is no doubt that the masses might err if they were called upon to act while angry or without time for investigation but does not the same objection apply to any faction of the public as well as to the whole public? Our elections are held at stated times or after a sufficient notice so that the people have a chance to act deliberately. If you can not trust the sense of justice among the people, there is nothing that you can trust. As Bancroft says, the universal conscience is the strongest approach that we have to the voice of God.

It is a bad sign when a democrat begins to hedge on the doctrine of popular government and to become frightened at the placing of power in the people's hands. Beware of him no matter what he calls himself and what [illegible] may have seen. —Bryan's Common

BREEDING ANARCHY

The battle for free speech has now forced its way into Massachusetts. In Wakefield, last Sunday, a group of working men tried to voice a protest against the imprisonment of Ettor and Giovannitti. They hired the G. A. R. hall, but the chief of police said they couldn't use it. They went to a vacant field and were dispersed. Then they went to a private house. What followed is thus described in the Boston Herald: "Chief Pollard has an idea that this house is headquarters of anarchists and has been watching it for some time. When he heard that a meeting was in progress there he went in with three patrolmen unannounced. There is a small hall connected with the dwelling, and it was filled when the police entered. William E. Trautmann and Elizabeth Gurley Flynn, national organizers, who were active at Lawrence, Joseph Schmidt and Polish and Italian speakers, were told that they would be arrested unless they left town immediately. Their argument that the police had no right to enter a private house and curb free speech, Chief Pollard answered by saying that the meeting was disturbing the peace. The speakers took a car for Lawrence at last. All the while they acted like ladies and gentlemen, according to the chief, but two of their sympathizers moved so slowly that they were bustled to a car by policemen. After the crowd had left under threats, the chief told Salvarti that he must lock the doors and not let anybody in." Remember, this, like the clubbing of children at Lawrence, didn't happen in Russia but in Massachusetts. Does Massachusetts stand for it?—The Boston Common

WHY COFFEE COSTS MORE

Within three or four years the price of coffee has doubled along with nearly everything else. Evidence has just come to light showing why the price of coffee has increased.

The remarkable feature of the situation is that the increase is not due to increased wages. This is not only remarkable, but phenomenal, especially when we consider that such things as coal and railroad rates and many others would never go up at all if it were not for the demands of the greedy laborer!

Coffee has advanced in price, although production has doubled, because the market supply has been artificially restricted!

A COST-OF-LIVING SECRET

In cold storage at Detroit, Mich., are 15,000 quarts of fresh berries. They are held out of the market to keep the price high. Thus capital uses refrigeration, invented to benefit man, for the purpose of exploiting man.

DEAFNESS CANNOT BE CURED

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars free.

Ah-Tish-Oo!

The only attention we pay to a sneeze at the present day is to endeavor to get rid of the chill which causes it, but a sneeze in the days of old Greece was a matter of great concern and import.

There was then a god of sneezing, and great undertakings would even be abandoned if a man sneezed at an inappropriate moment, the act being looked upon as the oracle of the god.

A sneeze between midnight and noon was looked upon as a fortunate sign, but between noon and midnight it betokened great misfortune. To sneeze to your right was lucky; to the left unlucky. Two or four sneezes were lucky, one or three very unlucky, and any undertaking in hand should, if possible, be abandoned; more than four sneezes did not count.

There is a saying in many parts of England today, "Once a wish, twice a kiss, three times a letter, four times something better." If people sneezed together it was a good sign, particularly if they happened to be discussing business.

RANDOM THOUGHTS
By Tom, Dick and Harry

Friday of last week the Senior Class of the Chardon High School held a picnic at the lake and in the evening, they came into town to hear the excellent concert of the Painesville Band. They were wearing their class colors, and feeling full of that school spirit which is the delight of all faculties. Painesville seniors and alumni also were among those who heard the concert, and having ears for good music had also eyes for good looks, and this got them into trouble.

Among the Chardon co-eds are a number very fair to look upon, and some of the boys were soon engaged in flirtations with them. This angered some of the Chardon swains, and soon high words were exchanged for fisticuffs between some of them. Other Painesville classmen hearing of the rival school's presence and wearing their colors, soon gathered and a class rush resulted, which terminated in the Chardon boys losing their cute little hats.

About this time the latter called in Officer Spink, and one of the boys was arrested, and fined. The Painesville boys were then ordered from the streets, and many of them went—out on Liberty street, where they ambushed the timid Chardon lads and a pitched battle ensued, hat pins, fists and some clubs were used by the Chardon boys, but fortunately no one was much hurt.

Accounts of the trouble sent out to the city papers and published by the local organ would lead one not accustomed to school fights to think that nothing short of murder was contemplated by the Painesville "gang," notwithstanding the fact that such so-called school spirit is carefully nurtured in every school and college in the land. Of course no faculty urges actual violence, but they all nurse the seed that breeds the violence.

The boys engaged in the brawl were not toughs, thugs, cut-throats, or anything of the sort. Some were from "the best families" and some were just "common people" but most are and will be good American citizens. The affair is regretable, but if not fostered by unwise newspaper stories, no lasting enmity will be engendered between the two schools.

Who "flunked" and who passed this week?

That is the question of more moment to the coming men of the world than ever Hamlet's soliloquy. With the passing of this week came the answer in most schools of Ohio and accordingly as the grade cards carried the words "promoted" or the fatal "not passed" came joy or sorrow to hundreds of thousands of young hearts.

Always it has been the custom to consider the disgrace of failure to pass an examination as belonging solely to the pupil, but in these later days men are going deeper into the cause of things, until now they have come to believe that the disgrace if disgrace there be, should be borne by both the pupil and his instructor. The student must average 75 per cent perfect, but the teacher is allowed to get off with 60 per cent. If a less number of pupils are found fit for advancement, the superintendent of today lays some measure of the fault to the teacher. And that seems reasonable. Under our system of grading, where every child is made to wear the same size shoe, so to speak, some blame must attach also to the system. Suppose we say that the teacher is 40 per cent faulty and the system another 10 per cent. That begins to look better for the pupil, and our wonder at the large number of failures is reduced, and we begin to feel like advocating a change in the system and teachers who are better adapted to the work in hand.

In no other walk of life requiring as thorough preparation do we find such low wages paid as in the school room. In no other business institution can we find so many people so totally unfit physically and temperamentally; who have so long passed the age limit as in the school room.

Age and youth have exceedingly little in common, save in disposition. The very young are impatient, short-tempered and positive. Those who have passed middle age are the same, and to these faults they have added "nerves." When a person has spent a lifetime teaching, it is but natural that he should become impatient with such as do not readily receive a new idea, forgetting that some of the things he now knows were equally slow in the acquirement. Exceptions to the foregoing there are, but they only prove the rule.

Were teachers better paid, a better class would be developed, as nothing has such attractiveness as a good salary. With better teachers at higher salaries the expense of schools would not be increased, as they would undoubtedly be able to "pass" a larger percentage of their scholars. The figures showing the cost of each year of schooling are not at hand but are available to those interested, and will bear out the assertion.

Who has failed, the pupil, the teachers or those who maintain the school on a niggardly basis?

A sprained ankle may as a rule be cured in from three to four days by applying Chamberlain's Liniment and observing the directions with each bottle. For sale by all dealers.

All of said bonds together with interest coupons are issued for the purpose of improving highways leading into said Township and are issued under authority of the General Laws of the State of Ohio, particularly Sections 3295, 3939, 3940, 3941 and 3842 of the General Code of Ohio, and in accordance with a resolution duly adopted by the Trustees of said Township at their regular meeting on the 27th day of May, 1912 entitled "To issue bonds for the purpose of improving highways leading into the Township of Willoughby, Lake County, Ohio."

All of said bonds to draw interest from the date of sale at the rate of 4 1-2 per cent per annum, payable semi-annually on the 1st days of April and of October of each year on and after the 1st day of October, 1912. Said bonds and interest thereon shall be payable at the Willoughby Branch of The Cleveland Trust Company, at Willoughby, Ohio. Said bonds will be sold to the highest bidder for not less than par and accrued interest. All of said bonds shall be delivered to the highest and best bidder at the office of said Trustees in the Village of Willoughby, Ohio. All of the above described bonds shall be dated the day of sale, and together with interest coupons, shall be issued and signed according to law, said interest coupons shall have the signature of the Clerk lithographed thereon.

All bids must state the number of bonds bid for, and the gross amount of the bid and accrued interest to date of delivery. All bids to be accompanied by a certified check on some solvent bank located in Lake County other than the one making the bid, payable to the Treasurer of said Township, for 10 per cent of the amount of the bonds bid for, upon the condition that if the bid is accepted the bidder will receive and pay for such bonds within ten days from and after the time of the award, said check to be retained by said Township if such condition is not fulfilled.

Said bids will be opened and publicly read and sale of said bonds will be made at the regular meeting of the Trustees of said Township held on the 6th day of July, 1912, at 2:30 o'clock P. M., at the usual place of meeting at the Town Hall in the Village of Willoughby, Ohio.

The Trustees reserve the right to reject any and all bids.

By C. C. JENKINS, Clerk.

IN GETTING AN ELECTRIC SUCTION CLEANER

DON'T BE DECEIVED and buy one with a cheap motor, a small vertical shaft which will soon wear and drop, especially when in connection with a small fan which must necessarily be run at high speed in order to get sufficient power. Such machines make a neat appearance and may do good work while new, but are SHORT LIVED.

When you buy the MAGIC ELECTRIC you have a cleaner with a five year guarantee certificate, a motor designed especially for it by the WESTINGHOUSE ELECTRIC MFG. CO., having a large horizontal shaft, a good sized fan which even at low speed gives sufficient power.

The MAGIC is the most simple in construction, having no pumps, valves, connecting rods, gears, belts, etc., to give out.

After three years' experience with various makes, we sell the BEST the market affords.

MENTOR

The weather still continues very cold for this time of year; many of the small stoves are still doing business as are also all the furnaces that burn soft coal and so can have a fire built in them on short order. There is considerable sickness around here of course, the cases of whooping cough still holding the precedence.

Miss Newell, the only sister of Mrs. John Newell has recently sailed for Europe where she will spend the summer at least, and possibly a year or more.

Mr. and Mrs. N. C. Frost were guests of Mr. and Mrs. Bert Warren over in Concord for the day recently.

Miss Virginia Sawyer is at home from the Catholic Convent at Nottingham, for the summer vacation.

Mrs. Margaret Macomber Burridge the widow of Capt. Eleazer Burridge, was here a few days ago visiting her children, and is at home with her daughter, Mrs. Dr. Hawley in Painesville for the summer.

Mr. Charles Radcliffe of Detroit was called to Mentor by the death of his brother, Mr. Robert Radcliffe and remained over for the funeral.

The summer home of Mr. and Mrs. H. W. Corning is opened for the summer. Mr. Corning now owns the old Webster place, more recently owned and occupied by Mr. George Ingersoll of Cleveland, and his family.

The pretty home of Mrs. Nettie Kerr Saxtar on Hart street has just been bought by Dr. LaDue the Lake Shore ticket agent, and he will move his household effects and his family in at once.

Mrs. Agnes Woodford Higgins has broken up housekeeping since the death of her husband, and gone home to her mother's house at the Center, for the present, and expects to have a private sale of furniture later on in the summer. The many friends of Mrs. Higgins will be pleased to learn that since the Board of Education passed the rule that no married women should be engaged to teach in the Painesville schools, she has been offered the principalship of the Wickliffe schools, a much better position than she held in Mentor or Painesville.

Mrs. A. G. Woodgerd of Geneva has been back here recently visiting some of the many friends she made while living here.

Mr. and Mrs. M. V. Hopkins are settled for the summer over in Kirtland at the pleasant home of Mr. Isaac Wright, the only brother of Mrs. Hopkins.

Mentor friends of Miss Alice Harrison are very sad to learn that her father, Mr. J. J. Harrison, is no better, that his family have no hope of ever being able to come North again with him, and are just waiting!

Mrs. John Northcote has been enjoying a visit from her cousin, Mr. Newell Chase of Syracuse, N. Y., for a few days recently.

The Mentor people are very interested in the present graduating class of the Painesville High School, as there are a number from here who are just completing the course of study there, and all are very much pleased with the advantages offered them at the County Seat. The following are Mentor students: Emily Barber, Karl Justus, Dorothy Foss, Lynn Carleton, Martha Spindle. We understand that Miss Alice Stocking of Painesville, the youngest daughter of C. H. Stocking, has carried off the highest honors of the class of forty-four, which certainly was something for which to be proud.

Mr. Clinton Parker died quite suddenly last Thursday, funeral services being held at his residence at 2 p. m. on Saturday afternoon. Mr. Parker was born in Mentor 85 years ago, and his parents were Mr. and Mrs. Washington Parker, who were among the earliest settlers of the township. For a number of years he lived in Munson but has made his home here for several years past, until he had become quite at home in Mentor again. Mr. Parker was a quiet man, but one who kept the confidence and friendship of those who had known him well, during the long years of his busy life.

The Missionary meeting of the M. E. Church is to be held at the home of Mrs. Charles Church on Thursday of this week, when Mrs. Albert Hanson and Mrs. Robert Case will have charge of the program, and a new innovation is to be adopted, namely the "roll" will be called, but what is to happen to those members who are absent—has not been made public as yet.

Many gypsies are passing through here on their way east for their summer haunts, and are showing the usual number of handsome horses.

Mrs. B. A. Smith goes to Akron today for a week's visit with friends down there, and a little vacation.

Mr. Frank Smith has returned from the hospital in Cleveland, and is at home here, getting along finely at present.

Mr. Schauffner has gone to Union City, Pa., after his bride, and is expecting to be away most of the next two weeks. When speaking to his people about this trip, he said he was "going east to get a Presbyterian, who would come back and help in the work of the church here." Of course everybody smiled sympathetically and it does seem as if everybody likes everything the young minister says or does, which certainly is a delightful state of affairs. (Hope it will last).

The Mentor friends of Mr. Will Radcliffe whose home is now in Detroit, will be pleased to learn that he has just accepted a fine position in Birmingham, Ala., where he will be Secretary of the Board of Trade in that enterprising city, going on very soon to begin his work there.

Mr. J. C. Jackson is to start for Kansas this week, we understand; and that he will be accompanied by his niece, Miss Hazel Sperry who will spend her summer vacation out there among her former school mates and friends.

Mrs. Worley, accompanied by her two small sons, Thompson and Robert, are in Bloomington, Ind., among friends, where they will spend most of the summer vacation.

Mrs. Paul Aldrich of Painesville and her two children, have been out here at the home of her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Traxler, for some days now.

Mrs. Dr. Gerould, nee Julia Clapp, of Cleveland, has recently been on a visiting trip down here, having been called down at the first by the death of Mr. Radcliffe, who was an old neighbor and friend.

Mrs. Anna Young Wilcox of Chicago, has been here for a short time and called on a few of her schoolmates of ye olden time.

Mrs. John Nott and two children, have gone to the Pacific Coast, where they will visit Mrs. Fred Henning, in Seattle, and other relatives in California, before returning home in the early fall.

Mrs. John Brooks of Warren, and daughter, Margery, have been recent guests at "Lacwood" the home of her father, Mr. Edmund Cadle.

The Standard Oil wagon, we hear, has done the job of putting oil on the main street of the village, and really they have done a mighty thin and skimpy job of it, but enough to suit some of the residents who have to wade through the stuff whenever they stir out of their homes and attempt crossing the street! Ugh!

Mrs. Frank Wing of Cleveland and her daughter, Marie, are spending some little time down here with her mother, Mrs. Samuel Remington at the pleasant old home here on Maple street.

Mrs. Jennie Ingersoll Dotey of Painesville has been spending a few days out here with her sister, Mrs. Col. Parker and her mother, Mrs. Amelia Fiske Hudson.

Miss Josephine Baker has been a recent guest of Painesville friends.

De Forest Brooke has recently graduated from the Case School, has been here in our village somewhat during the years that are passed, and has just been making farewell calls, before going on to New York City where he has a fine position waiting for him. Mr. Brooke is a nephew of our mayor, T. P. Cadle, and a young man who has won for himself high honors in the electrical department of the Case school, so we understand.

The Village Council are about to take stringent measures toward stopping some of the scorching through our streets, for really it has become as much as one's life is worth to try and get across before being run over.

Each age of our lives has its joys. Old people should be happy, and they will be if Chamberlain's Tablets are taken to strengthen the digestion and keep the bowels regular. These tablets are mild and gentle in their action and especially suitable for people of middle age and older. For sale by all dealers.

Flowers.

Flowers seem intended for the solace of ordinary humanity; children love them; quiet, contented, ordinary people love them as they grow; luxurious and disorderly people rejoice in them gathered; they are the cottager's treasure, and in the crowded town mark, as with a little broken fragment of rainbow, the windows of the workers in whose hearts rests the covenant of peace.—Ruskin.

There is no real need of anyone being troubled with constipation. Chamberlain's Tablets will cause an agreeable movement of the bowels without any unpleasant effect. Give them a trial. For sale by all dealers.

WOMEN FOLLOW THE HOUNDS

In No Country Is the Sport So Well Beloved by Woman as It Is in Ireland.

Hunting absorbs keen sportswomen in Ireland, and it is seldom that a frost drives the Irish follower to hounds from the countryside. Irish women are renowned for their fearless prowess in the hunting field, where the terrible obstacles to be negotiated call for nerves of steel, and it is neck or nothing in the distressful country, says the London Daily Graphic.

The fearsome stone walls, sometimes overgrown with turf and masking a brook, appal all but the stoutest hearts, and even the most hardened sportswoman is known to quail at the commencement of the hunting season, experiencing the sensation of the heart in the mouth when called upon to face the stiff going. She finds her nerve returning, however, after a day or so in the saddle.

The late empress of Austria used to hunt regularly in Ireland, where her reckless and brilliant horsemanship is still spoken of. With the late Bay Middleton to give her a lead, she was always in the first flight and stuck at nothing. The famous happy-go-lucky hospitality that marks the Irish temperament is exemplified in matters sporting, and open house is kept by those having accommodation in a good hunting district.

The Irish colleen will dance all night at a hunt ball and turn up at a distant meet as fresh as paint without going to bed at all, full of life and spirit, with wit and repartee bubbling like a font. The Irish country brings out all the dare devil Irish nature, and there is little searching for gaps or gates when the blood of Irish horse and rider is up.

Ireland is not overrepresented in the matter of hunting, and Irish packs are not by any means numerous, and may be reckoned to number a couple of dozen. Some only possess quite a restricted number of couples, and but few hunt four or five days a week, though an occasional by-day may bring the total up. The Meath hunts five days a week and is one of the famous hunts of the United Kingdom, and the County Galway, the Blazers, has four days a week.

Dickens' Care for His Guests.

If Dickens was particular regarding the equipment of his own bedroom he was equally careful for the comfort of his guests. Charles Dolby, in "Charles Dickens as I Knew Him," says of the bedrooms at Gad's Hill: "Each of these rooms contained the most comfortable of beds, a sofa, an easy chair, cane-bottomed chairs—in which Mr. Dickens himself had a great belief, always preferring to use one himself—a large-sized writing table, profusely supplied with paper and envelopes of every conceivable size and description, and an almost daily change of new quill pens. There was a miniature library of books in each room, a comfortable fire in winter, with a shining copper kettle in each fireplace; and, on a side table, cups, saucers, tea caddy, teapot, sugar and milk."

A peculiarity of the household, adds Mr. Dolby, was the fact that, except at table, no servant was ever seen about.

His Dreams Come True.

A number of interesting stories are told of F. F. Nicola, Pittsburg's most dazzling operator, by Isaac F. Marcosson in his article, "The Millionaire Yield of Pittsburg," in Munsey. One of them deals with the erection of his famous hostelry, says the writer.

"About 12 years ago Nicola built a million-dollar hotel in an out-of-the-way corn-field. People thought he was insane. Now he has reared about it a whole civic center, which includes a memorial hall, an armory, and fine clubs, and will in time embrace the new University of Pittsburg. It was Mr. Nicola who vivified a string of decrepit railroad properties, and sold them to George J. Gould as the nucleus of the Pittsburg division of the Wabash system. He is a dreamer of indomitable will, and he has seen some of his big dreams come true."

TEACHERS' EXAMINATION

The Lake County board of examiners will offer examinations for teachers' certificates on the first Saturday of each month in the year 1912. If first Saturday falls on holiday, examinations will be held one week later. Boxwell pupils will be examined the third Saturday in April and the third Saturday in May, 1912. All examinations will be held in the old High School building, Painesville, beginning at 8:15 standard time.

By order of the board.

The GIRL from His TOWN

by Marie Van Vorst

ILLUSTRATIONS by M. G. KETTNER

COPYRIGHT 1910 by The Bobbs-Merrill Company

SYNOPSIS.

Dan Blair, the 22-year-old son of the fifty-million-dollar copper king of Blairtown, Mont., is a guest at the English home of Lady Galorey. Dan's father had been courteous to Lord Galorey during his visit to the United States and the courtesy is now being returned to the young man. The youth has an ideal girl in his mind. He meets Lily, Duchess of Breakwater, a beautiful widow, who is attracted by his immense fortune and takes a liking to her. When Dan was a boy, a girl sang a solo at a church, and he had never forgotten her. The Galoreys, Lily and Dan attend a London theater where one Letty Lane is the star. Dan recognizes her as the girl from his town, and going behind the scenes introduces himself and she remembers him. He learns that Prince Poniotowsky is suitor and escort to Letty. Lord Galorey and a friend named Ruggles determine to protect the westerner from Lily and other fortune hunters. Young Blair goes to see Lily, he can talk of nothing but Letty and this angers the Duchess. The westerner finds Letty ill from hard work, but she recovers and Ruggles and Dan invite her to supper. She asks Dan to build a home for disappointed theatrical people. Dan visits Lily, for the time forgetting Letty, and later announces his engagement to the duchess. Letty refuses to sing for an entertainment given by Lily. Galorey tells Dan that all Lily cares for is his money, and it is disclosed that he and the duchess have been mutually in love for years. Letty sings at an aristocratic function, Dan escorting her home. Dan confronts Galorey and Lily together.

CHAPTER XX.—Continued.

"For God's sake!" he heard her murmur, and she impatiently drew her cloak around her shoulders. Poniotowsky put out his hand to help her, but she drew back from him, exclaiming violently "Oh, no—no!" Before he was aware what he was doing, Dan was holding his hand out to Miss Lane.

How she turned to him! God of dreams! How she took in one cold hand his hand, just the grasp a man needs to lead him to offer the service of his life. Her hand was icy—it thrilled him to his marrow.

"Oh—you!—" she breathed "Hello!"

No words could have been more commonplace, less in the category of dramatic or poetic welcome, but they were music to the boy, and when the actress looked at him with a ghost of a smile on her trembling lips, Dan was sure there was some kind of blessing in the greeting.

"I am going to see you home," he said with determination, and she caught at it.

"Yes, yes, do! Will you?"

The third member of the party had not spoken. A servant fetched him a light to which he bent, touching his cigar. Then he lifted his head—a handsome one—with its cold and indifferent eyes, to Letty Lane.

"Come," said the actress eagerly, "come along, my motor is out there and I am crazy tired. That is all there is about it. Come along."

Snatched from a marriage contract, still bitter from his jealous anger, this—to be alone with her—by the side of this white, fragrant, wonderful creature—to have been turned to by her, to be alone with her, the duchess of Breakwater out of his horizon, Poniotowsky gone—Oh, it was sweet to him! They had rolled out from the Carlton down toward the square and he put his arm around her waist, his voice shook:

"You are dead tired! And when I saw that brute with you tonight I could have shot him."

"Take your arm away, please."

"Why?"

"Take it away. I don't like it. Let my hand go. What's the matter with you? I thought I could trust you!"

He said humbly: "You can—certainly you can."

"I am tired—tired—tired!"

Under his breath he said: "Put your head on my shoulder, Letty, darling."

And she turned on him nearly as violently as she had on Poniotowsky, and burst into tears, crouching almost in the corner of the motor away from him, both her hands upon her breast.

"Oh, can't you see how you bother me? Can't you see I want to rest and be all alone? You are like them all—like them all! Can't I rest anywhere?"

The very words she used were those he had thought of when he saw her dance at the theater, and his heart broke within him.

"You can," he stammered, "rest right here. God knows I want you to rest more than anything. I won't touch you or breathe again or do anything you don't want me to."

She covered her face with her hands and sat so without speaking to him. The light in the motor shone over her like a kindly star, as wrapped in her filmy things she lay, a white rose blown into a sheltered nook. After a little she wiped her eyes and said more naturally:

"You look perfectly dreadfully, boy! What have you been doing with yourself?"

They had reached the Savoy. It seemed to Dan they were always just driving up to where some one opened a door out of which she was to fly away from him. He got out before her and helped her from the car.

"Well, I've got a piece of news to tell you. I have broken my engagement with the duchess."

This brought her back far enough into life to make her exclaim: "Oh, I am glad! That's perfectly fine! I don't know when I've heard anything that pleased me so much. Come and see me tomorrow and tell me all about it."

CHAPTER XXI.

Ruggles Returns.

Dan did not fall asleep until morning, and then he dreamed of Blairtown and the church and a summer evening and something like the drone of the flies on the window pane soothed him, and came into his waking thoughts, for at noon he was violently shaken by the shoulder and a man's voice called him as he opened his eyes and looked into Ruggles' face.

"Gee Whittaker!" Ruggles exclaimed. "You are one of the seven sleepers! I've been here something like seventeen minutes, whistling and making all kinds of barnyard noises."

As Dan welcomed him, rubbing the sleep from his eyes, Ruggles told him that he had come over "the pond" just for the wedding.

"There isn't going to be any wedding, Josh! Got out of all that last night."

Ruggles had the breakfast card in his hand, which the waiter had brought in, and Dan, taking it from his friend, ordered a big breakfast.

"I'm as hungry as the dickens, Rug, and I guess you are, too."

"What was the matter with the duchess?" Ruggles asked. "Were you too young for her, or not rich enough?"

Significantly the boy answered: "One too many, Josh," and Ruggles winced at the response.

"Here are the fellows with my trunks and things," he announced as the porters came in with his luggage. "Just drop them there, boys, they're going to fix some kind of a room later."

Blair's long silk-lined coat lay on a chair where he had flung it, his hat beside it, and Ruggles went over to the corner and lifted up a fragrant glove. It was one of Letty Lane's gloves which Dan had found in the motor and taken possession of. The young man had gone to his dressing room and begun running his bath, and Ruggles, laying the glove on the table, said to himself:

"I knew he would get rid of the duchess, all right."

But when Dan came back into the room later in his dressing gown for breakfast, Ruggles said:

"You'll have to send her back her glove, Dannie."

At the sight of it beside the breakfast tray Dan blushed scarlet. He picked up the fragrant object.

"That's all right, I'll take care of it."

"Is 'Mandalay' running the same as ever?" Ruggles asked over his bacon and eggs.

"Same as ever."

Ruggles saw he had not returned in vain, and that he was destined to take up his part of the business just as he had laid it out for himself to Lord Galorey. "It's up to me now. I'll have to take care of the actress, and I'm darned if I haven't got a job. If Dan colors up like that at the sight of her glove, I wonder what he does when he holds her hand!"

CHAPTER XXII.

What Will You Take?

When Dan in the minute of two went to the Savoy, Higgins, as was her custom, did not meet him. Miss Lane met him herself. She was reading a letter by the table and when Dan was announced she put it back in its envelope. Blair had seen her only in soft clinging dresses, in white vaporous clothes or in her dazzling part costume, where the play dress of the dancer displayed her beauty and her charms. Today she wore a tailor made gown, and in her dark cloth dress, in her small hat, she seemed a new woman—some one he hadn't known and did not know, and he experienced the thrill a man always feels when the woman he loves appears in an unaccustomed dress and suggests a new mystery.

"Oh, I say! You're not going out, are you?"

In the lapel of her close little coat was a flower, he had given her. He wanted to lean forward and kiss it as it rested there. She assured him:

"I have just come in; had an early lunch and took a long walk—think of [illegible] remem[illegible] walk had [illegible] only [illegible] of a flush [illegible] rose over her delicate skin, fading away like a furling flag. Her frailness, her slenderness, the air of good breeding her dress gave her, added to Dan's deepening emotions. She seemed infinitely dear, and a thing to be protected and fostered.

"Can't you sit down for a minute? I've come to make you a real call."

"Of course," she laughed. "But, first, I must answer this letter."

His jealousy rose and he caught hold of her hand that held the envelope. "Look here, you are not to write it if it is to that damned scoundrel. I took you away from him last night and you are never to see him again."

For the first time the two really looked at each other. Her lips parted as though she would reprove him, and the boy murmured:

"That's all right! I mean what I say—never to see him again! Will you promise me? Promise me—I can't bear it! I won't have it!"

A film of emotion crossed his clear young eyes and her slender hands were held fast in his clasp. His face was beautiful in its tenderness and in a righteous anger as he bent it on her. Instead of reproving him as she had done before, instead of snatching away her hands, she swayed, and at the sight of her weakness his eyes cleared, and the film lifted like a curtain. She was not fainting, but, as her face turned toward his, he saw it transformed, and Dan caught her to her dark dress, the flowers in her bodice, to his heart. He held her as if he had snatched her from a wreck and in a safe embrace lifted her high to the shore of a coral strand. He kissed her, first timidly, wonderingly, with the sacrament of first love on his lips. Then he kissed her as his heart bade him, and when he set her free she was crying, but the tears on his face were not her tears.

She clung to him, looking up at him just as his boy dreams had told him a girl would look some day. Her face was suffused and softened, her lips—her coral-red, fine, lovely lips were trembling, and her eyes were as gray, as profound as those seas his imagination had longed to explore. Made poet for the first time in his life, as his arms were around her, he whispered: "You are all my dreams come true. If any man comes near you I'll kill him just as sure as fate. I'll kill him!"

"Hush, hush! I told you you were crazy. We're both perfectly mad. I have tried my best not to come to this with you. What would your father say? Let me go, let me go; I'll call Higgins."

ELECTRIC POWER FROM WIND

Economical Lighting Plants Can Be Based on It, With Gasoline Motors to Help.

There has never been a time when the forces of nature were subjected to such searching scrutiny to determine their availability for the development of mechanical power as they receive at present. This arises mainly from the progressive use of electricity.

Among other things it is believed that the wind can be utilized to a far greater extent than in the past, especially for electrical lighting. With this object in view the average state of the wind has been investigated in England. It is found that for approximately half the time the mean wind velocity is ten miles an hour, and for about one-third of the time fifteen miles. In the winter the average is higher. The great difficulty arises from the calm periods which may last days or even a week, but it has been shown that economical lighting plants can be based upon wind power by providing gasoline motors to take up the work whenever the wind fails.

Change of Habits of Sea Gulls.

It is reported that the habits of sea gulls in some districts along the northeast coast of Scotland seem to be undergoing a remarkable change. It has been noticed that these birds have built nests in the heather and bushes a few miles inland, a fact never observed before.

A disturbing feature of this invasion is that the birds in forsaking the sea have abandoned their exclusive fish diet and have taken to eating corn, thus adding another to the many feathered foes with which farmers have to contend.

Health & Beauty Hints

By Katherine Morton

A well-supplied vanity box, which is still light enough to be carried about in the suit case or hand bag, is about the most precious thing the woman traveler can take along with her.

Many young ladies who have learned the economical tricks of beauty buy theatrical make-up boxes for the holding of the cosmetics and soft little rags that they will need, the girls getting these empty and fitting them up as they see fit. One will buy charming little celluloid boxes—the sort called "Parisian Ivory," for powder, rouge, nail paste, forehead plasters, and so on, putting the liquids she will require into bottles as dainty. Another will make use of any small cardboard boxes in convenient sizes she has on hand, employing ordinary vials, old or new, for the liquids. For the make-up rags, which are indispensable, tops of old white stockings are used, fine old handkerchiefs, bits of silk undervests, etc., and the maid who understands traveling will never fail to fasten all the tops of the boxes on with a rubber band.

Now traveling by land and sea have differing consequences, but both methods of transportation threaten enough hurt for the complexion to make a complexion cream and a skin wash most valuable things to have in the vanity box. Then as many young women are unaware of the fact that the soap supplied travelers is never of the best sort, and that sometimes there is none at all, I would advise including a cake of some familiar sort. Grease paint is better, too, for traveling use than the dry sort, this hurting the skin less and keeping on better, and for powder I would suggest a little scented talcum which could be sewed up for convenience into a little cheesecloth bag.

Dust is inevitable with travel by train and as it is not always possible to obtain the means of a face bath and if left on long the dust will seriously hurt the skin, the face should be cleansed at least twice a day with cold cream and a little of the wash carried along. For the last benzoin will be found excellent, a teaspoonful of this in half a cup of water supplying quite a good face bath. Pour the diluted benzoin on a soft bit of rag and go over all the face with wiping movements, doing this after the skin has been first cleansed with cold cream. After the face has dried, powder as usual.

In place of the benzoin it is possible to employ orange-flower water or alcohol—or any good cologne or toilet water—for taking off the grease after the cream cleansing or even for the soil itself, but it is never wise to use too much of any of these things, as they all scorch the skin after a while.

Upon arrival anywhere the face should be washed immediately with warm water and a bland soap, and since one cannot count always on soft water a small box of borax would be another precious adjunct for the vanity box. Dust, by the way, is curiously destructive to the delicacy of the skin, inflaming it and sometimes setting so deeply into the pores that blackheads ensue. The hygienic soaps of French manufacture are all good, these being healing as well as cleansing to the skin. Old castile is another good soap more easily procurable, as it can be found in every drug store and in many little country groceries.

The injuries of the sea trip come through the influences of salt air and wind, many complexions taking on sudden eruptions or tanning badly. Sometimes the pimples come from neglect of the bowels, as salt air is constipating to some constitutions; so a little box of some mild laxative could be included in the supply of beautifiers. Take one of these every night as long as is necessary, and help the good work along by taking a warm sea bath every day. If your eyes are used to glasses keep them on, for you will be more susceptible to seasickness if you leave them off.

For protecting the skin from wind burn, prepare it before putting on the powder with cold cream, rubbing this well down into the pores and wiping off the surplus. Wear a red-brown veil on the ship's deck, or when taking the little boat sail, as this color is about the only one that will resist the tanning agents of Dame Nature, but if you can go without the veil without serious injury to your skin, do so, as air, just air itself, is one of the body's most important beautifiers.

Hints on Health and Beauty.

Camphor water is an astringent good for an oily skin.

Ink and other stains may be removed from the hands by a solution of rose water and acetic acid in the proportions of eighteen parts rose water to one of acetic acid.

Don't sleep facing the light, it will weaken the eyes.

Light hair is brightened by adding a teaspoonful of salts of tartar and the juice of a lemon to the shampoo water. Frequent use of this is not recommended, as it will in time make the hair harsh.

Hot lemonade without sugar is excellent for biliousness and bilious headaches.

Sleeveless Waists of Chiffon.

Sleeveless kimono waists of chiffon, over lace or embroidered blouses, are one of the pretty styles of the moment. The edges at neck and arms are finished with hemstitching and sometimes a narrow lace frill or a quilling of ribbon. Whatever is the finish it must be as flat as possible, otherwise the effect is bad.

Social Forms and Entertainments

Very Impolite.

Your valuable advice have helped me before, so I come to you again.

This is a small town with but one play-house which changes programs every other night, or three performances a week. I took a couple girl friends there one evening and during the show they said they attended the night before and saw the same show. Now these girls knew the rules of the house, and so knew it would be the same performance. Was it proper not to let me know before, or should they have told me at all?—"Stung."

If the girls you were kind enough to take to the show were so discourteous as to say they had seen it before, without your asking if they had, they certainly were lacking in good manners. If they had seen it and did not care to see it again they should have told you so and said they would be glad to go when the bill was changed, or they should have said nothing.

For an Announcement Party.

Will you kindly make a few suggestions for an announcement party. The announcement is to be made to a club of girls and I would be glad if you would make some suggestions for the lunch and some inexpensive favors.—Anxious.

Write an original story of the girl's life and wind up with the engagement, read this aloud as an interesting tale and "they" will all soon begin to catch on. Of course you use fictitious names. For favors have little baskets holding bon-bons tied with ribbons and a wee "wedding" bell tied to the handle. For luncheon have cream of asparagus soup, lamb chops, green peas, new potatoes, cherry salad, mint sherbet and small cakes.

Perplexing Question.

What should a girl tell a boy when he asks her if she loves him (if she really does love him) and he says he loves her but has never done anything to prove it?

How long should a girl of seventeen wear her dresses? How should she fix her hair?—"Country Girl."

I wonder how a seventeen-year-old girl knows if she really loves a boy or he her when they are both not much more than babies? Wait at least three years and then see how you both feel. Dresses should be just below the shoe tops and hair is very pretty in the Madonna braids around the head, either with or without bows.

Ideas for a Dinner Party.

Will you give me a few suggestions for a dinner party?
How many courses?
What to serve?
What sort of a center-piece?
I don't want anything elaborate and for about six persons.—Waiting Bess.

Use the flowers available in a basket for the center of the table. Serve sardine appetizers for the first course, then cream of pea soup, fried or broiled chicken, asparagus on toast, new potatoes with butter and parsley, tomato and mayonnaise for salad, with cheese balls, and a frozen dessert with after-dinner coffee either in the drawing room or at the table.

Correct Use of Cards.

Will you please tell me the correct way of using cards when calling?—Ignorant Bride.

All you have to remember is to leave two of your husband's cards and one of your own when calling upon a couple, one of each for each woman and one of your husband's for each man in the household.

Reply to "J. S."

Your letter was most excellent considering you have only been in this country two years. The best advice I can give you is to see the principal of your home school and see what studies are required. Tell him your hopes and ambitions and I am sure you will find the desired assistance.

Reply to Jane.

Look in the dictionary in the proper names to find out the meaning you wish to know. I think girls of seventeen are decidedly too young to marry. Wait two or three years, then think about it.

MME. MERRI.

Decorative Buttons.

Ivory ball buttons, plain or elaborately carved, are very modish, and real amber and jade buttons and white and colored ones are popular. A touch of white on a black button, or of black on a white one, is seen, and though the effect is bizarre it is also very smart.

Novelties in horn, bone and enameled wood, matching in color the general effect of the suit chosen, are liked, and the sweet stick buttons of a long shape cut across at the ends are quaint and highly decorative.

White Ratine for Lining.

White ratine, as a lining for black or colored faille or satin coats, is one of the smart things in handsome suits, says the New York Press. The white cloth comes out in collar and cuffs, with big buttons covered with silk or satin. Black gowns of the kind are used in half mourning.

To Match the Material.

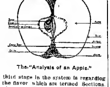
Some of the new side frills and jabots are attached to collars of matching material.

NAMES OF VARIOUS PARTS OF APPLE GIVEN AND DESCRIBED

While There are Great Ranges of Variation Within Individual Limits of Any Variety, There are Certain Characteristics Constant and Dependable for Classification.

One of the readers has asked me to analyze an apple, giving the names and descriptions of the various parts. To anyone who is interested in scientific pomology this is quite necessary to be well understood, writes H. E. Van Deman in the Rural New Yorker. For the benefit of the general reader, I will try to make the analysis as plain as can be, thus serving, if possible, both the scientifically inclined and the more ordinary worker with fruits.

An apple is known in science as a pome, which is a fruit that contains its seeds in capsules surrounded by a fleshy pulp. Other examples of the pomes are the pear, quince, wild hawthorn fruits and those of the rose. All of these have five capsules containing the seeds, which together compose the core. In making a scientific or pomological description of an apple we begin with the outward appearances. There have been various systems or methods of classification by pomologists for centuries past. Some of them have been very curiously, not to say absurdly, founded on certain real or imaginary characteristics, while others were quite reasonable and practical. The best of them all, according to my judgment, is the system devised and published by Dr. John A. Warder, of Ohio, in his American Pomology. The first divisions in his classification are based upon the shape of the vertical sections and are four in number: Class I, Oblate or Flat; Class II, Conical; Class III, Round or Globular; Class IV, Oblong. Next comes the shape of the cross or transverse sections, called Orders, of which there are two, Regular and Irregular. The third stage in the system is regarding the flavor which are termed Sections, of which there are two. Section 1 includes the varieties that are sweet and Section 2 those that are subacid or sour. The last set of this descriptive classification is made up of three Subsections. The first of these includes all varieties that are yellow or green and may be blushed and even quite covered with red in some rare cases, but never striped. By this system almost any apple may be properly classified, and if listed and described in detail might be identified by any careful student of pomology. While there was never but one edition of Dr. Warder's book on apples, American Pomology, and that was issued in 1867, and many valuable varieties have been introduced since that date, it is even now the best of all our books on apples, by which they may be studied and identified. While there are great ranges of variation within the individual limits of any variety, there are certain characteristics that are quite constant and dependable, and upon these any intelligent classification must be based. More alphabetical or other ordinary arrangement is of much less value.



The "Analysis of an Apple."

To describe an apple in such manner as will lead to an understanding of its individual peculiarities I have made a drawing of a specimen of the Delicious that was grown in California. The most important parts are named and pointed out in such a way that they may be studied. To begin with, the form, which is one of the first points that anyone will notice, may be flat, conical, round or oblong, as looked at from the side; and round, elliptical, irregular or even angular when observing from either end. The size may be large, medium or small. The depression in which the stem is set is called the cavity, and it may be regular, irregular, or lipped; large or small; deep, medium or shallow; with a steep, abrupt or wide slope; it may have russet markings that are large, medium or faint, or none at all. The stem may be long, medium or short; slender, stout or fleshy. Sometimes a variety will have stems of all these descriptions, but they are generally of one type. The depression at the calyx or blossom end of an apple is called the basin. It may be regular, irregular, waved, furrowed or knobby, deep, medium, shallow or wanting; wide or narrow; marked with russet either cracked or smooth. The calyx may be open or closed; with the sepals long or short, upright or reflexed. The surface is smooth, rough, bloomed or russeted. The color, yellow, green, blushed, red striped and with all possible variations of intensity and lightness of shadings, mottling, splashings and suffusions. The dots are very characteristic and quite constant. They are numerous or scattering; large or small; dark or light, round or pointed; with light, dark, green and sometimes on raised bases. The skin may be thick and tough or thin and tender. The flesh is yellow, white or stained with red and very rarely pink throughout; and its texture may be fine or coarse; firm, tender or soft; and in weight light or heavy. The core may be large, medium or small; conical, round or oblate, open or closed, meeting or separate from the tube. The calyx tube large or small; long or short. Axial diameter long or short. Seeds numerous or few; large or small, plump or narrow, light or dark brown. Flavor sweet, subacid or sour, rich aromatic or spicy. Quality good, very good, best or poor. Season very early, early, mid-summer, fall, early winter, mid winter and late winter.

Thus it is that a pomologist would describe an apple. Blanks for descriptions are prepared for the government records and also by some of the states. I have them for my own private use in keeping records of the varieties I have examined. Paintings, models and historical notes of all interesting fruits are also made and carefully preserved in the office of the U. S. Pomologist at Washington, which is work that I planned and instituted when I was in charge of that office over 20 years ago. These records are of inestimable value and will be more more so as time advances.

An Old Elm Tree.

An old elm tree was recently cut down near Oldtown, Me. The tree was four feet and four inches at the butt and 121 bateau knees were cut from its branches and sold for $27.50. Five more cords of wood from the tree sold for $5 per cord.

Ostrich Raising.

FLOOR PLANS FOR A DAIRY BARN

The accompanying illustration gives the floor plans of a modern dairy barn for 21 cows, as designed by the bureau of industry of the United States department of agriculture. The stalls are planned to be three feet six inches wide and from four feet eight inches to five feet long, depending upon the size of the cows. The manure gutter should be from 16 to 18 inches wide and about four inches deep. The manger is planned to be two feet wide and six inches deep, the bottom being two or three inches higher than the floor of the stalls. Patent stanchions may now be bought so cheaply (one to two dollars each) that it is scarcely worth while to bother about making them at home for a small herd of cows.

EXCELLENT FEED FOR THE CHICKS

Hard Boiled Infertile Eggs, Ground in Meat Chopper and Mixed With Bran are Good.

(By PROF. W. A. LIPPINCOTT, Kansas Agricultural College.)

An excellent food for the chicks is made in this way: Take the infertile eggs—those that have been tested out of the incubator—hard boil them, and grind in an ordinary meat chopper. Mix this with bran and moisten with water. If you have some old, dry bread which has not become moldy it may be crumbled and added to the bran and ground eggs. Do not make the feed sloppy or the chicks may gorge themselves.

Many other good feeds, such as fine cracked corn, cracked wheat, cracked kafir and steel-cut oats may be fed. Milk, curd and beef scraps make a good change in the feed. These two supply to the chick about the same food elements it would get by eating insects and worms.

Charcoal, fine grit or finely ground bone should be kept where the little chickens can get it. If it is possible, they should be kept on a grassy plot, and if not, green stuff should be supplied them. Alfalfa is the best for this, and may be given them occasionally.

Grafts Walnuts on Oak Trees.

A genius, who grows walnuts on oak trees, has been found in Calaveras county, California, in the person of E. M. Price. Price has grafted walnut branches on the oak trees throughout the hills on his place and has met with remarkable success, as all the grafts have grown wonderfully. Price has been experimenting with walnut trees for years, and the walnuts he has grown on ordinary trees are three times the size of those sold in the market.

Watering Horses.

A horse that is watered two or three times a day is apt to drink too much at one time.

Scope of Wireless Telegraphy Spreads Fast

TELEPHONE RECEIVER

SENDING OPERATOR

YEARS ago a fanciful writer took his readers on an expedition to the north pole. The explorer had been preceded to the region of perpetual ice by a party that had perished there. The hero of the story learned this one day when a torch that he was holding thawed part of a large shaft of ice and there came from this icy prison the voices of the men who had perished there years before.

Today the fancy of the novelist has become a fact of science. The air is filled with messages that may be heard by any one who has the simple means that are requisite. The man who stands in the noisy crowd of the city and the lonely sheep herder on a fenceless Australian prairie are alike surrounded by them, and it is possible for each to be made conscious of their presence.

This is the accomplishment of wireless. The system of communication without the use of wires to carry the electrical impulses has grown so intimately into the world's business that it takes something out of the ordinary to bring a realization of what is being done and what the outlook is. Wireless was more than ten years old when the ships Republic and Florida collided on January 23, 1909, and the jumping spark under the command of the wireless operator instantly made known that disaster to the world. The Republic, alone in the fog and dark, might have gone to the bottom without news of the disaster being known for days. It was two days after La Bourgogne sank before the story of the catastrophe became known. But a wireless operator, Jack Binns, flashed the news from the Republic to land and drew out of the dark half a dozen rescuing ships.

The story of Jack Binns, the first wireless hero of international fame, spread abroad, and the position of the new method of communication was assured. Wireless had been put to its first great test and passed through it successfully.

Another wireless call flashed out in the darkness some weeks ago and sent a thrill around the world. This was the message from the crippled, sinking Titanic. It saved the lives of more than 700 human beings. Harold S. Bride, assistant Marconi operator aboard the Titanic, and Harold T. Cottam, operator on the Carpathia—the one who was instrumental in sending the message and the other whose ship brought aid—have become heroes. Before the investigating committee of the senate the young operators have told their part in the rescue of the passengers.

Cottam on the Carpathia explained that he was on duty Sunday night and came off a couple of days later. He sat at his post all Sunday night, all day Monday and Monday night and during the day Tuesday. He caught a few hours of sleep on Tuesday or Wednesday night. Young Bride gave his testimony sitting in an invalid's chair, for one of his feet had been frozen.

Their action under the circumstances was one of the things that Cardinal Farley referred to when he said that one of the lessons which can be drawn from the disaster was the assurance it gave that man could be depended upon to play the part of heroes in any emergency.

The movement to increase the scope of wireless service, which had already commenced before the Titanic disaster, has received a new impetus and the dawn of the new era, which was predicted long before the loss of the Titanic, has been appreciably hastened, experts say.

In England the government has entered into a contract which will result in a system for connecting every part of the British empire. Arrangements are already in progress and in due course a system will be started, it was said in parliament, which will extend from England to Cyprus, from Cyprus to Aden, from Aden to Ceylon, from Ceylon to the Straits Settlements, from the Straits Settlements to western Australia and from western Australia to New Zealand, forming a series of six stations, the British dominions on the other side of the world. Official Marconi publications say that the agreement will be followed by others of a similar nature with other countries.

An interesting part of the extension of the wireless is an arrangement with the Marconi company which will afford a trans-Pacific wireless service for an American land telegraph company.

This company has entered into a traffic arrangement with the Marconi company whereby it will receive and deliver Marconigrams to and from Europe. The agreement provides for the extension of the Marconi system from the Pacific coast of the United States to Hawaii, China, Japan and the Philippines, thus giving wireless trans-Pacific service.

This agreement virtually gives the American company a large share of the wireless business. The English Marconi company is understood to be planning a long distance wireless apparatus for direct communication between New York and London, and it is said that a station near New York would permit messages to be sent to Cuba, Panama and South American countries.

The Arlington station will have three steel towers arranged in the form of a triangle. The aerial wires are to be strung from the taller tower to the other two on either side of it. The installation for transmitting wireless at this station will be duplicated at the others.

In picking out locations for these new stations many points have had to be considered. In most cases some sort of wireless equipment is already in operation at these stations and the advisability of erecting the larger plants has depended to a great measure on the success of those already working. This is evidenced by the Arlington station, which is across the Potomac from Washington and near the military reservation of Fort Myer.

From Arlington the north Atlantic ocean can be covered and the naval base at Guantanamo, Cuba, is within its radius, as is also San Francisco. This, it is pointed out, brings the canal zone into direct communication with Washington. The Pacific coast will be dominated by the station at San Francisco.

At the Brooklyn navy yard the sailors who are to take places in the wireless room of the battleships receive a training in their work. For this branch of the service a building 300 feet long, 60 feet wide and two stories high has been set apart. The course in wireless proper takes seven weeks. The first week is given over to the study of the theory of wireless communication and the next week sees the pupil at a sending key studying and practicing the continental code. Messages are sent by an automatic transmitter.

During the seven weeks of the wireless training the pupil receives instruction in making diagrams of transmitting sets and aerials and tries his hand at repairing and overhauling the various sets in use. At the end of the seventh week if he is able to send and receive fifteen words a minute he is stationed at a receiving booth, where he can have actual experience. Two weeks are allowed for review before the final examination.

Before actual wireless work is taken up by the students each one goes through a short course in the ground work of electrical equipment. He starts at the blacksmith shop, where he learns to build a fire properly. Then he is taught forging, welding and tempering iron and steel, and instructed in the use of soldering iron. In the machine shop he practices on the lathe, shaper, drill press, milling machine, emery wheel and bench.

Engine work follows, for the naval electrician is expected to be competent to repair any part of the ship's electrical equipment. Simple compound, turbine, oil and gasoline engines are taken apart and assembled, lined up and repaired. Valves, condensers, air and circulating pumps are mastered. There is also three weeks instruction in the work of interior communication and lighting of a ship which teaches the student how to install and inspect the entire electrical equipment of a battleship. The authorities of the navy yard believe that the student is not ready to take up the actual study of wireless communication until he has first mastered the details of the machinery that makes the electrical spark possible.

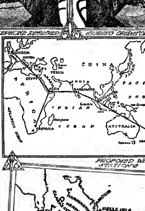
While everybody knows that wireless messages are being sent, it is not generally understood how this is done.

"To strip wireless of its technicalities and boil it down to the primal constituents is not hard," said an expert who has made a study of the theory and knows the practice. "It is simply transference through space of waves of electromagnetic energy.

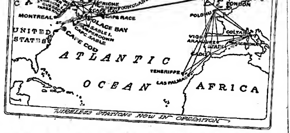
"When a wireless operator presses a key, a spark jumps between two pieces of metal. These two pieces of metal are connected with long wires, called antennae, that are strung on poles called aerials. The energy from this spark is spread on these wires and diffused in waves.

"These waves have definite length, which can be determined partly through the power of the sending station. The station that is receiving these is able to put itself in tune to receive wave lengths of the nature sent out by the sending station and exclude others."

Wireless relies on electromagnetic waves as the source of its communication. These waves are sometimes called Hertzian waves and were made use of for the first time in 1880 by Prof. Amos Dolbear of Tufts college. He applied for a patent on a wireless system that had every essential of the plan followed today. He got his patent in 1886, which was two years before Dr. Hertz's discoveries.



PROPOSED WIRELESS STATIONS



WIRELESS STATIONS NOW IN OPERATION

What these investigators found was that when an electric spark jumped between two poles there were started, in what the scientists call the ether, magnetic force lines. These force lines detached themselves and traveled on through space at a tremendous rate of speed. This speed has been reckoned at 186,000 miles a second. It was also learned that these force lines went through space in wave lengths that could be measured.

Doctor Hertz found that the presence of these waves could be detected across a room by means of a loop of copper wire. This was called the Hertz loop. The ends of this loop were slightly parted, and it was found that the electric spark on one side of the room caused a small spark to pass between the ends of the Hertz loop. Sir Oliver Lodge and William Marconi used the same spark gap and connected one side of it to a copper plate buried in the earth and the opposite side to wires strung in the air. When the apparatus was constructed in this way the electric spark caused oscillations on the aerial wires and created a wave that could be detected at a considerable distance.

The modern wireless station has appliances to regulate the length of the waves that carry the messages.

To prevent interference each ship installation operates on a different wave length and the receiving instruments either on the ships or the land stations are able to cut in or tune in on those lengths. The tuner enables an operator to change the wave lengths on the receiving wires and so get in touch with the office that is calling.

At the senate inquiry the operators from the Carpathia and the Titanic were repeatedly asked what S O S and C Q D means. The effect of these messages was very clear to the operators, but they were not entirely sure what the letters themselves meant. Inquiries at the Marconi offices brought the information that the letters have no significance in themselves and are simply agreed code signs.

The call C Q D is made by the symbols for the letters. C is dash dot, dash dot. Q is dash, dash dot dash. D is dash dot dot. The written danger call of the deep would look like this — — — — — — — . .

The S O S call is made up of S dot, dot, dot. O dash dash dash. S dot dot dot and looks like this . . . — — — . . .

The C Q D sign is a Marconi symbol. C Q is an agreed call for the attention of all stations. Frequently messages of importance are prefaced by these letters. D means danger. It was further stated that S O S was adopted by the Berlin convention in 1902. Every wireless operator understands these calls.

In some of the foreign ships, where the operators do not speak English it is customary to write the symbols of the message and have them translated.

Is Not Typical of France

"Parisienne" is Parisian, and in No Way Representative of the French Woman.

The Parisienne is not, and never has been, representative of the Frenchwoman, although she might be described as the distilled essence of all that is French. She is too volatile to be typical of the women of France. She is so bizarre, and the French woman, broadly speaking, never is. She is gay and morbid at one and the same moment. She is eternally young, yet born with the cynical wisdom of ages. She is brave to the point of folly, she is free from any taint of provincialism, and in a way stands on a small pinnacle apart from the rest of womankind, with a smile that has some fellowship with that of the Sphinx. Her charm is world renowned and indisputable, and of a peculiar kind.

She is not beautiful, and she is never merely pretty, but charm runs in her blood, and it is as natural for her to use it as it is for the sun to shine. Everything about her is witness to this attribute, and she herself accepts it as a law written by unseen hands, unchangeable as that which rules the "orderly procession of the stars," and powerful as that which brought her into the world, and will one day send her out of it.

"I'M ONLY A LITTLE GIRL"

Failing Eyesight Responsible for an Old Man's Mistake—Rebuke Hardly Effective.

A certain group of youngsters in an exclusive West Side residential section had been very noisy throughout the forenoon.

The children were still doing their utmost to imitate a bedlam, when a very angry old man appeared at the door of a nearby apartment house. He was quite old, and it was evident that his eyesight was not the best but he finally succeeded in picking out a youngster who was aiding very strenuously in the noise making.

The aged man walked over to the back to the apartment. When he reached the doorway he turned to the child and said:

"Don't you know it's against the law to make so much noise?"

"Yes, sir," was the meek reply.

"Well, don't you know that you'll be arrested and put in jail and then you can never be president of the United States?"

"Please, sir?" replied the child, "I don't care; I'm only a little girl."—New York Mail.

IT IS CRIMINAL TO NEGLECT THE SKIN AND HAIR

Think of the suffering entailed by neglected skin troubles—mental because of disfiguration, physical because of pain. Think of the pleasure of a clear skin, soft, white hands, and good hair. These blessings, so essential to happiness and even success in life, are often only a matter of a little thoughtful care in the selection of effective remedial agents. Cuticura Soap and Ointment do so much for poor complexions, red, rough hands, and dry, thin and falling hair, and cost so little, that it is almost criminal not to use them. Although Cuticura Soap and Ointment are sold everywhere, a postal to "Cuticura," Dept. L, Boston, will secure a liberal sample of each, with 32-page booklet on skin and scalp treatment.

Slow Travel.

Down in Oklahoma they have a railroad called the Midland Valley, which is noted for its slow trains. It is told that a young man of Tulsa asked the hand of a daughter from her parents and was refused on the ground that the daughter was too young.

"My daughter is going to Pawhuska tomorrow for a visit," said the father, who is a traveling man, "and if she doesn't remain more than a day or two she will be old enough when she gets back."

"But she may be an old maid by that time," protested the young man.—Kansas City Star.

Heard on the Waterfront.

Some ancient mariners were sitting in a seaport tavern relating their experiences of fogs.

"Ah!" said one old salt. "I've seen some pretty thick fogs in my time. Why, off the coast of Newfoundland the fog was sometimes so thick that we used to sit on the deck rail and lean against it! We were sitting one night as usual, with our backs to the fog, when suddenly the fog lifted, and we all went flop into the sea. A bit thick, wasn't it?"—San Francisco Chronicle.

Less and Less.

"This is a great age we are living in," said Brinkley. "We have smokeless gunpowder, horseless wagons, wireless telegraph—"

"Yes," interrupted Cynicus, "and we have moneyless foreigners coming here and contracting loveless marriages with heartless heiresses."—Judge.

Not Reliably Informed.

The gentleman who wore evening clothes and the remnants of a jag at 9 o'clock in the morning was clinging to the footboard of a crowded surface car in Chicago. As the car rounded a sharp curve with a jerk the person in incongruous apparel fell quickly and heavily to the cobblestones. He was picked up by the strong hands of the conductor and about twenty passengers.

"Collision?" he asked in a dignified tone of voice.

"No," said the conductor.

"Off the track?" further questioned the victim of the accident.

"No," said the conductor.

"Well," concluded he of the jag, "if I had known that I wouldn't have got off."—Popular Magazine.

What She Wants.

"I want you to build me a fashionable home."

"Have you any special ideas as to the style of house you want?" asked the architect.

"Not exactly. I want one of those modern places. You know the kind I mean—one with a living room too big to keep warm, and a kitchen too small to cook in."—Detroit Free Press.

Heavy Hitting.

(From the Philadelphia Star)

"Oh, it was a perfectly lovely game," she said that evening to a male friend.

"That so? What was the score?"

"The score was: Detroit, two hundred and one million, one thousand and one; and Cleveland, one hundred and ten million, two thousand and one."

This is the score she had copied from the board on the back fence of the park

Detroit 2 0 1 0 0 1 0 0 1
Cleveland 1 1 0 0 0 2 0 0 1

Marriage License

As a Man Is Known.

"A man, like a watch, is known by his works," observed the epigram maker.

"And by the hours he keeps," added the wife.

"And by the spring in him," said the athlete.

"And by his being sometimes fast," remarked the reformer.

"And by his not always going when we want him to," finished the girl who'd been robbed of her beauty sleep.

Conducts Sunday School in Jail.

Isaac Jonas, retired whaler, steamboat man and soldier of Somerset, Pa., teaches what is probably the most unique Sunday school class in the country. For 20 years he has taught a class in the Somerset county jail. During that time six of his pupils, he is quoted as saying, have been hanged and one other has been convicted of murder.

Vicar Proved a Miser.

A vicar in Oxfordshire, England, who dressed so carelessly that he might have been mistaken for a tramp, and who was supposed to have died penniless, was found to have left a fortune of many thousands of pounds invested in London property.

LUCKY ACCIDENT FOR MINER

What at First Seemed Adverse Stroke of Fate Turned Out a Caprice of Fortune.

Where hundreds of men are "prospecting" one of them is liable, of course, to stumble upon a ledge that "pans out" in paying gold or silver. That lucky "find" gives birth to a dozen stories about millionaires who have become "rich beyond the dreams of avarice" by some fortunate accident. The following story is such a one.

A miner named Adams was prospecting in a northwestern state. While trudging along, one hot day, through a gulch, where the sun had a good chance at his back, he suddenly smelled smoke. He glanced quickly in every direction to ascertain the origin of the smoke, but seeing nothing resumed his journey. A moment later the smell returned stronger than ever. A light wreath of vapor curled about his ears and gave him to understand that his haversack was on fire. Like all miners, he carried a large lens for the purpose of examining the specimens of the sand in his pan and the truth flashed upon him. For want of room he had hung the glass on the outside and the rays of the sun had been concentrated on his haversack, which was thus set on fire. As among its contents were 12 or 15 pounds of powder he lost no time in dropping the burden.

The haversack fell between two huge stones, out of sight. Adams reached a safe distance and watched the smoke rising from his worldly possessions. Suddenly there was a deafening report. The ground trembled and Adams dodged behind a huge stone. Rising, he went to the spot to gather up what he could find, when his eyes almost started out of his head at seeing the quartz that had been blown up fairly glittering with gold. His powder had done better on its own account than it had ever done on his, and had literally blown open a gold mine for his benefit. He was made a rich man and named his mine the "Nick o' Time."

The Child's Toys.

Cloaked under a pretense of making the children happy, our sins have been many. In the first place, we have been giving them too many toys and have made the recipients blase and unappreciative. One at a time is enough. In our secret souls most of us have been conscious of that mistake. In the second place, in our desire to produce something new and wonderful at frequent intervals, something that would do us credit in the eyes of our young admirers, we have been getting the wrong kinds. The imported mechanical toys upon which we have fallen with gusto and played happily ourselves until obliged to hand them over are far better for us, it seems, than for them. They do the work for the child instead of making him do it.

Here we have in a nutshell the main principle underlying the selection of toys. The child's toys should stimulate his imagination and make him work. If he has too many he has nothing left to imagine; if they respond to the magic of a key, he can only stand by and watch.—Martha Cutler, in Harper's Bazar.

Biddy's Slunder.

Mrs. Howard Hinckle has recently had a remarkable experience with a new Irish girl:

"Biddy," said she, one evening, "we must have some sausage for tea this evening. I expect company."

"Yes, ma'am."

Tea time arrived, and with it, the company; the table was spread, the tea was simmering, but no sausage appeared.

"Where are the sausages, Biddy?" inquired Mrs. Hinckle.

"And sure they're in the tay-pot, ma'am! Didn't you tell me we must have 'em for tay?"

COMMENCEMENT

FORTY-FOUR GRADUATES FROM PAINESVILLE HIGH SCHOOL

Exercises of Evening Were Unique and of Greatest Interest to Large Audience

The commencement exercises of the graduating class of Painesville high school was held in the high school auditorium, Friday evening, June 14.

The large class graduated, the high standard of work done by the class, and the interest shown by the patrons of the school, are all complimentary to the good work of the high school in general. The exercises of the evening were unique and of so much interest and real value to the audience as to call forth more favorable comments than any other event in connection with the public schools for years.

This year the voters of Ohio must accept or reject the work of the Constitution Convention. We may have a new constitution, or the present constitution may be changed in part. Any changes made will undoubtedly remain in force for twenty years, or possibly longer, as has been the case with our present Constitution which was adopted in 1851. What could be more appropriate than that these young girls and boys, having come into possession of the best that our public schools could give them, enter upon a discussion of the vital principles of our basic law?

The questions discussed by members of the graduating class during the evening were the following: The Recall, The Initiative and Referendum, Direct Primaries, Municipal Government, Woman's Suffrage, Short Ballot, Good Roads and Public Playgrounds. Every member of the class who spoke upon these questions showed the result of careful study and the art of presenting their arguments in plain concise language that was indeed gratifying to every friend of our schools.

The members of the class of 1912 are as follows.

Latin Scientific Course—Emily Eunice Barber, Katherine Abigail Bedell, Darwin Burton Buell, Mary Agnes Cawley, Robert Henry Deibler, Anna Frances Gill, Ella Permelia Hadden, Arthur Karl Justus, Marion Louise King, Letty Mildred Knapp, Florence May McGwinn, William Donald Monroe, Edith Beryl Moreland, Norman Ethelbert Phillips, Emmett Dean Shupp, Martha Jennette Spindle, Alice Elizabeth Stocking, Ina Mary Story, John Woolsen Tear, Esther Elizabeth Waite, John Quincy Winsor, Jr.

VETERAN DIES

An Aged and Respected Citizen of Bank Street Has Departed.

Another one of the old soldiers of the Civil War has passed to the Great Beyond. George Wass, at the ripe age of 74 years, a member of Byer Post, G. A. R., died Sunday afternoon at his home on Bank street, after a lingering illness of two years. He was well known here where he had made his home for many years. Four children, two daughters, the Misses Hattie and May, and two sons, William and Charles Wass, survive. The funeral services were held Tuesday afternoon at 2 o'clock from the late residence.

JACK MAC NAUGHTON

Former Employee of The Educational Supply Co. Is Dead.

Jack MacNaughton died in Canada last Sunday night. He was well and favorably known here in Painesville, having been in the employ of The Educational Supply Co. for some time. The particulars of his death have not been learned here by his former associates.

Mr. MacNaughton married a Painesville girl, Miss Grace Freeman, also well known here.

IMPORTANT MEETING

The annual meeting of the Lake County Humane Society will be held at the Court House in Painesville, on Saturday, June 22, 1912, at 1:30 P. M., to elect officers and other business.

Everyone interested in neglected children and cruelty to animals should certainly be in attendance. Ladies especially invited.

ABOUT PEOPLE AND PLACES

John C. Ward has a new Hupp automobile.

—o—

Strawberries, nice ones too, are now selling at retail for 8 cents per quart.

—o—

Some fellows don't believe in boosting unless it gets them a meal ticket.

—o—

Miss Gladys May is in the employ of Carl Hagenburger at the St. Clair street store.

—o—

Mr. and Mrs. Jesse Richardson left Tuesday for an extended trip through the South and East

—o—

James McVitty of Perry is laying a new cement walk in front of his elegant residence place

—o—

Dan D. Casement left Monday evening for Chicago, Ill., where he will attend the Republican convention

—o—

Perry is now shipping many hundred crates of strawberries and cherries to Cleveland and other points every week

—o—

Mr Dryan is not likely to be nominated until after the favorite sons have been paid a little compliment on the first ballot at Baltimore.

—o—

Mrs R. E. Jackson and Mrs. T. B. Fitts left Monday morning for Springfield, Ohio, to attend the W. R. C. convention held there this week

—o—

As the weather grows warmer the ice cream trade will increase. Painesville is noted for the manufactory of the best cream sold any where in the state. It is good to eat

—o—

Mr Isaac Mattison of Fairport was in Painesville Wednesday. Mr Mattison usually takes a good deal of interest in politics, but the scrap at Chicago is not at all to his liking

—o—

Mrs Kate W. Barrett at the Congregational church Sunday night, and Miss Jane Addams at the College Monday afternoon, both before good sized audiences, awakened great interest in social problems

—o—

J. F. Browe of Perry, Hiram Kennedy of Willoughby, and Wm. M. Wood of Fairport, were among the visitors to our city, in connection with business matters, during the middle of the week

—o—

On Monday of this week Perry fruit growers shipped away between 1000 and 1100 crates of strawberries. This is a record for Perry, and of course beats any other fruit shipment ever made from the county.

—o—

The new green house on W. Jackson street is now taking shape and from present indications is to be no small affair. Tons and tons of glass will be used in the construction of the buildings, and this one item of expense will amount to a large sum. Undoubtedly the green houses will be in use by early fall.

—o—

On Sunday, June 23, the various lodges in the city and the Citizens' band will hold a memorial service at Evergreen cemetery in memory of their deceased members. All former members of the band are requested to meet at the band hall on June 23, at 2 o'clock, to join with the band in the services.

—o—

If a man has a place of residence in Lake county he should be a little careful about selling liquor. County Auditor W. Albert Davis has placed a Dow tax and penalty of $1200 on the Charles Geheau property at Richmond, owned it is claimed by Otto J. Loisy of Cleveland. Geheau has been found guilty of selling liquor in conflict with the law of the state.

—o—

Here is what a prominent republican has to say about President Taft: "The plain truth is that the people didn't want Taft in 1908 and, after more than three years' trial, they want him so much less now than they did then that they won't have him at any price in 1912; if they can't get Roosevelt, mark my word, they'll take a democrat."

—o—

Most everyone delights in saying funny things about the high school and college graduates. Of course there are many things for these graduates to learn by experience, but it is well to remember that these young people are none the worse off because they have "been learning." It is quite safe to predict that in a few years these same young people will be the leaders in industrial, social and political affairs.

WICKLIFFE

MAIN STREET WILL SOON HAVE THE APPEARANCE OF CITY Street.

Paving Will Soon Be Completed Through the Town. Other Improvements to Follow.

Wickliffe is so near to Cleveland and so near to Lake county's western boundry line that many forget that this lively little town is really part of our county. This place is growing and is certain to continue to grow and improve. Every indication points that way.

Wickliffe is fortunate in one respect and that is in the class of young business men who are now located there, they are all wide awake progressive and from all indications are doing well. Wm F Wollpert, W. F. Means, T. E. Rice, Provo Bros., C. A. Ashcraft, J. W. Fuller and the man- Ashcraft, M. Horowitz, J. W. Fuller and the managers of Wickliffe Supply Co., are all comparatively young men who have the inclination and energy to make the very best of their opportunities.

Wm. F. Wollpert is taking the lead in advertising and is setting an example that others will find it necessary to follow. He has a large, new stock of general merchandise, and he knows by experience that it pays him to let people know about it. He knows how to use printers ink to the best advantage and in drawing trade to his store he also helps every other business in Wickliffe.

There is no real need of anyone being troubled with constipation. Chamberlain's Tablets will cause an agreeable movement of the bowels without any unpleasant effect. Give them a trial. For sale by all dealers

CELEBRATION

FAIRPORT WILL CELEBRATE THE FOURTH OF JULY

Committee Decides to Celebrate the 100th Anniversary on Nation's Natal Day

Fairport is becoming noted as a place where they do things. One reason for this is that the business men all pull together.

With $200 already subscribed and a lot more money in sight Fairport promises to celebrate her one hundredth anniversary on July Fourth in a most befitting manner. The committee has already outlined a program that will furnish plenty of amusement to the big crowd that is expected

The day will open with an amateur ball game at 9 and with life saving drill up to 10:30. From 11 to 12 there will be games and races on the park. From 1 to 2 the big parade will be given with speeches by prominent men from 2 to 2:30. The regatta on the lake will occupy the time from 3.30 to 8 o'clock with the scow tableaux from 7 to 8. The fireworks display has been planned from 8 to 10

In the parade will be the Fairport lodges, floats and the school children headed by the bands. The parade will assemble at the new school building at 1 o'clock

Two professional ball games have already been arranged for the afternoon

THE MOTHER

Elizabeth Gibson Cheyne in "The Way of the Lord."

There are two mothers in the country where I live—
Another mother, and myself.
I am the mother of the rich children,
And the other mother is the mother of the poor children
I am not jealous of the other mother—
Because my children have everything,
And hers have nothing.
I am not cruel to her;
I allow her to come and work for me,
As a nurse, a sewing woman and a charwoman,
And I pay her as much a day as my own breakfast costs me,
For that should feed and clothe herself and her children handsomely;
I give her my children's clothes,
And sometimes I give her their rejected food,
If their particular pet animals do not need it;
I speak civilly to the other mother, because I am covertly thankful
I am not she,
And because I am afraid that if I spoke otherwise
She might strike me or my children,
And demand hers and their share of everything,
Or steal it when we are not looking.
I think that when people are poor it is their own fault,
And that it is because they are lazy or drunken or both.
It is a shame that I have to pay for the poor children's education,
As it takes all I can afford to send my own children
To the public school and the university.
It is a greater shame that I have to pay for their school dinners and their medical inspection,
As it takes all I can afford to feed my own children on epicures' food,
And send them to the best eye specialists and physicians
I take all that is given to me and my children,
But I am afraid of pauperizing the poor mother and her children.
I think that she ought also to save up for her old age pension.
One day, when I was explaining these things to her politely,
She retorted that it was I who am the pauper:
And that her children must go ragged
That mine must be smart;
That hers must be hungry that mine may be pampered;
That hers must die that mine must live
So I told her that she was talking politics, which is not woman's business,
And that the Socialists had been perverting her
I shut the door in her face, and gave her no more work
Till I could do without her no longer,
And had to send for her to come back.
She said that some of her children had died in the meantime,
As she had had no money to buy food for them.
So I said: "That will teach you to keep your place, and not to call me a pauper."
Now she comes and cleans my nurseries,
And feeds and tends my babies,
And makes elaborately embroidered clothes for them;
But she says nothing,
And I wonder why she is silent.
One night I dreamed that I asked her why,
And she said:
"My dead children are crying to me to kill you,
And my living children are crying to me to forgive you,
And I have not yet decided which to do."

AMENDMENTS TO CONSTITUTION

Text Officially Corrected and Revised

The first installment of the 42 Amendments, to be voted on at the coming election this fall, appears in this issue of the Herald

Cut them out and preserve them for future reference.

Balance of Amendments in next week's issue.

The Democratic Two-thirds Rule.

(By Col. J. H. Newton of Newark, O.)

When, how and why was the two-thirds rule adopted by the Democratic party in the making of Presidential nominations at its National Convention? Answer and explanation of this question are of special significance at this time when there is so much talk about political progression

The two-thirds rule was in the interest of the up-to-date political progression of its day. It was adopted at the National Convention of the Democratic party which met at Baltimore, May 27, 1844. The reason for its adoption was to prevent the re-nomination of Martin Van Buren, who had suffered such a crushing defeat by the Whigs in 1840.

In the year 1844 the most vital issue was the annexation of Texas. Although Abolitionists opposed it because they claimed it meant the extension of slavery and the Southern people favored it because they deemed it their manifest destiny, progressive Democrats, north and south, espoused the cause of territorial expansion

When the National Democratic Convention met at Baltimore that year it was known that Martin Van Buren had obtained a majority of pledged delegates by a method which would now be known as a political machine, but having declared himself against the annexation of Texas, the party leaders, representing a majority of the states, adopted the rule that required a two-thirds vote of the convention to nominate the candidates for President and Vice President

The adoption of this rule resulted in the nomination of James K. Polk, of Tennessee, who received the unanimous vote on the eighth ballot, though he did not receive one vote on the first ballot

Polk was elected over Henry Clay by a popular vote of 1,355,834 to 1,297,033 and an electoral vote of 170 to 105.

The annexation of Texas, which brought on the Mexican war, resulting in the acquisition of territory amounting to 800,000 square miles including the grand domain of California and the Pacific Coast, and millions of wealth that have benefited so many millions of people, are evidences today of how signally progressive the two-thirds rule was at the time of its adoption, 68 years ago

The two-thirds rule today, which is just as progressive as it was in 1844, means that the Democratic National Convention will be, as it should be, a deliberative body.

In this year of our Lord 1912, the two-thirds rule will distinctly mean that no candidate for President will receive the nomination by a stampede of the convention.

Their Own Word For It.

Who will nominate the republican candidate for the highest office and dignity in the power of these United States to confer?"

"Liars" — "frauds" — "varmints" —"betrayers of 90,000,000 people" —"traitors" — "grand larcenists" — "party wreckers" — "passion-drunk committeemen" — "crooks joy-riding on a steam roller" — "hand-picked machine puppets"—"discredited, repudiated bosses"—"men who have no respectability to lose"!

How will they do it?

By "theft"—"treason"—"corruption"—"betrayal of the people's interests"—"brazen offers of money"—"graft"—"open bribery"—"talking to the galleries"—"appealing to the lowest passions"—"accepting stolen goods"—"getting away with the swag"—"damnable outrage"—"buying the nomination"—"violation of the precepts of decency and honor"—"going the limit"!

To what will the successful candidate owe his nomination?

Either—

To "the perpetration in the convention hall of a system of intimidation and terrorisation which might easily culminate in a full-fledged riot"!

Or—

To "the dirtiest, most despicable, most dastardly steal in the history of American politics"!—N. Y. World.

Each age of our lives has its joys. Old people should be happy, and they will be if Chamberlain's Tablets are taken to strengthen the digestion and keep the bowels regular. These tablets are mild and gentle in their action and especially suitable for people of middle age and older. For sale by all dealers.

ROAD OIL

I am in the road oil business again this year. Can furnish oil in any quantity or applied to the road either by the gallon, barrel or the foot front of your street. For prices and terms apply to C. H. STOCKING, Phone Main 147. 611 South State St.

OFFICIAL REPORT

Of the Ohio Department of Agriculture on Crops and Live Stock

June, 1912.

The following report is compiled from returns received from 1113 official correspondents of this Department:

Wheat, prospect compared with normal yield, 45 per cent; original area seeded, 1,918,750 acres; area abandoned this spring, 44 per cent; area remaining for harvest, 1,079,894 acres

Oats, prospect compared with normal yield, 95 per cent.

Rye, prospect compared with normal yield, 76 per cent.

Winter Barley, prospect compared with normal yield, 55 per cent

Clover, prospect compared with normal yield, 84 per cent.

Timothy, prospect compared with normal yield, 80 per cent, damage by grub worm, 4 per cent.

Hogs, fed for summer markets, 43 per cent; condition compared with an average, 91 per cent.

Sheep, condition compared with an average, 92 per cent.

Fruit, prospect compared with normal yield, 63 per cent.

Average Prices

| | |
|---|---|
| Wheat, per bushel | $ 1.12 |
| Corn, per bushel | .81 |
| Barley, per bushel | .93 |
| Oats, per bushel | .59 |
| Rye, per bushel | .90 |
| Potatoes, per bushel | 1.53 |
| Hay, per ton | 24.84 |

Ohio's 1912 wheat production will be the lowest in a number of years. Present prospect indicates that the average production per acre will be less than 7 bushels. Under normal conditions general state average production per acre should be 15 bushels. Not only will the production per acre be low, but the report shows that 44 per cent of the original area seeded last fall has been abandoned. This leaves but 1,079,834 acres remaining and as many fields are in such poor condition that they will not pay for harvesting, the area will show a further decline from the acreage above quoted. Many of these fields were left standing on account of the high priced grass seed sown with the wheat, and will be cut for hay. The total harvest will not far exceed seven million bushels. In 1911 the total wheat production was 31,092,382 bushels. The present average price of wheat per bushel is $1.12. Following we quote some of Ohio's lowest wheat productions per acre: 1883, eight and one-half bushels, 1875, nine bushels, 1884, ten bushels; 1895, twelve bushels; 1888, eight and one-half bushels; 1900, six bushels

Oats prospects is satisfactory, being estimated at 95 per cent, based upon 30 bushels per acre representing 100 per cent. Dry weather during the past three weeks has retarded its growth and some fields are showing yellow spots.

Corn planting is late. A large acreage remains to be planted. Many early planted fields are being replanted owing to poor seed and some rotting of seed. Correspondents note damage by chinch bugs

The hay crop will be short, last season's drouth killing many new meadows, and some of the old meadows are now overrun with white top and sorrel.

Owing to high price of feed, pigs are scarce. Many farmers are selling off their hogs, due to cholera scare.

Generally, fruit prospects are good. In some localities apples are dropping badly

Australia and New Zealand

In Australia and New Zealand woman suffrage is no longer an experiment and concerning it the senate of Federated Australia recently passed the following resolutions.

1. That this Senate is of opinion that the extension of the suffrage to the women of Australia for States and Commonwealth Parliament, on the same terms as to men, has had the most beneficial results. It has led to the more orderly conduct of elections, and, at the last federal elections, the women's vote in a majority of the States showed a greater proportionate increase than that cast by men. It has given a greater prominence to legislation particularly affecting women and children, although the women have not taken up such questions to the exclusion of others of wider significance. In matters of defense and imperial concern, they have proved themselves as farseeing and discriminating as man. Because the reform has brought nothing but good, though disaster was freely prophesied, we respectfully urge that all nations enjoying representative government would be well advised in granting votes to women.

2. That a copy of the foregoing resolution be cabled to the British Prime Minister.

Other testimony to the same effect is given by the Bishop of North Queensland who says, in a letter recently published in the London Times "Australia is rightly becoming more and more regarded by Englishmen as the testing shop for social and political experiments. We have tried the experiment of women's franchise for several years. Certainly in the Commonwealth and in Queensland, I believe also in other States, women have exactly the same electoral privileges as men. From my own observation, I can unhesitatingly assert that such electoral privileges have been used quite as well, if not slightly better, than by the men."

Favor Woman Suffrage

The Catholic church is sometimes considered the bulwark of Conservatism. This is often true but quite as often it leads in social reform.

Rev. Father McMahon, pastor of the Catholic Church of Our Lady of Lourdes, New York, on May 31st preached a powerful sermon in favor of woman suffrage and equal pay. In the course of his remarks Father McMahon said: "The Church has always stood for the betterment of women. As early as the fourteenth century women voted on equal terms with man, and there is nothing unwomanly or immodest in it now. Anyone reading opposition to the franchise for women in the doctrines of the Church is not well informed to regard to them."

PERRY

Mr and Mrs F. J. Sickle of Cleveland were visiting their parents here Sunday

Mr Harry Belknap and friend of Cleveland were home over Sunday.

Miss Mildred Hadden was visiting in Perry last Wednesday.

Miss Nancy Perry was the guest of Mrs. Ellen Mitchell on Monday.

Mr Harold Buckles employed as chauffeur in Conneaut, was home over Sunday

Mrs. F. E. Bartholomew was in Painesville and Madison Monday on business

Mrs. Wright of Cleveland is visiting her friend, Mrs. Mace.

One hundred and seventy-two attended prayer meeting last Thursday evening. Two hundred should attend next Thursday.

Miss Lillian Davies terminated her visit in Perry and returned to Cleveland Monday.

The storm that did such great good Saturday evening was (in the language of street) a "killer." The lightning struck two of Mrs. Watt's best cows, killing them immediately. The loss is partly covered by insurance

Children's Day services were held at the M. E. church Sunday morning. On account of the uncertain state of the weather, a large part of the congregation remained at home, thus missing a good program.

Dr. Black is in Pennsylvania on a week's vacation. Drs. York and Quail are caring for his patients during his absence.

Mr. and Mrs. Jones will reside in the Orcutt house on Thompson St. Mr. Jones is the new barber working with Mr. Wm. Freeman.

Miss Moore of Collinwood is spending her vacation with her aunt, Miss Brown.

Another robin has flown into the nest in the Old Mansion. A son was born to Mr. and Mrs. Robin last week increasing the family to eleven.

June 26th bids fair to be a memorable night in Perry history. The Volunteers and Willing Gleaners of the Christian Church will give a fete and Fair that evening on the church lawn. The attractions are numerous there will be a fortune teller, a melancholy specialist, Doctor Dopem, an entertainment entitled "Primitive Perry Pastimes," besides the usual Fete features lemonade, ice cream, peanuts, etc. All this on Wednesday, June 26.

Perry folks were in Painesville Friday evening. A large number attended the commencement exercises of Painesville high school and a Perry boy, Clifford Stephens, was one of the speakers of whom Perry is very proud

Strawberries came in Monday afternoon in every kind of vehicle from a great auto truck to a little wheelbarrow—not mentioning the wagon loads that were constantly unloaded at the depot. Perry is no onion raising country, but it is more a strawberry garden.

The many friends of Mrs. John Fairchild will be sorry to learn of the fall she had receiving bruises and sprains, and is suffering much pain. Doctor reports no broken bones.

Teacher, to a roomful of pupils: "And just think! One of you may be president some day. All of you who would like to be president, please rise."

All rose except little Willie.

"Well, Willie, what's the matter? Wouldn't you like to be president?"

"Y-yes'm," stammered Willie, "but I ca-ca-can't."

"Why not?" asked the teacher, astonished.

"Because—because I'm a D-d-democrat," said Willie, bursting into tears.—Unknown.

THE INGRATITUDE OF WOMAN.

Paul Begged in Order That His Wife Might Feast—What He Got For It.

Federico Paul—which is a composite rendering of his name as reported in the various New York papers—was dragged out of a subway station in the Bronx by an ironhanded copper the other day. The copper took poor Paul's two canes away from him and prodding him with one of them, made him walk briskly to the station house. During the walk the spinal curvature that had bothered poor Paul for several years past disappeared completely and he forgot the cruel limp. At the station house they peeled Paul and found him armour plated with small coins. He melted down something like $18 in jingles. When he was arraigned in court that night for begging his wife arose.

"He doesn't have to beg, judge," said she. "He has a good business as a chiropodist uptown. He has a nice little office of his own; he employs several helpers, and we own our own home. But he insists on making up in rags and dirt and taking his two canes and going out at night to beg. I am dying of shame."

She was well dressed and seemed thoroughly respectable. She sank back in her chair sobbing. Paul looked at her with an enigmatic smile and kept his own counsel. After he had been toasted upon the judicial coals he was led away to give bail for his good conduct during the next six months. Later—bathed, shaved, dressed up in well pressed clothes and wearing polished shoes—Paul gave his own story of his double life.

"I worked hard," said he. "I made a good living and I was happy and content, until I married. My income from my business is sufficient to maintain us in comfort. But my wife wanted more than that. In desperation one night I made up and went out to beg. I made so much money that I begged by preference afterward. It is an easier way of getting money than of working—and I made my wife happy because I could give her the money she wanted, and which I could not make by honest work. Now she objects to my begging. Is it not somewhat unreasonable? Must I carpenter too eighteen hours a day to provide her with luxuries when I can get more money in six hours by sitting on a cold stone floor and crying into my beard?"

Life and Dickens.

Some one has said of Charles Dickens that he was not afraid of being melodramatic. Is it not one fault of our more modern literature that it is too faultless? There is a certain snobbish tyranny of taste which palls. Woodrow Wilson has said that taste is undemocratic. The culture which cannot bear contact with coarseness is much to blame for our social maladjustments, he said. So the literary taste which sympathizes not with Rabelaisian humor and disdains redundant emotion, is at odds with life.

People live not by repression. Asceticism forms but a very small part of life. And it is asceticism to cut out emotion, even excess emotion, with its boisterous laughter and too easy tears.

Heaven forbid that from the one extreme of chastened, white corpuscled "style" the other extreme of affected forcefulness—of slang and unreal realism—should be reached. There is too much of that now. It will never satisfy. It will not set a true standard or mark a literary epoch. But may we have more of the big artist work which is not afraid to be as untrammeled and as filled with caricature as life itself is!—Kansas City Star.

Origin of Life.

No one has the faintest idea how, when or where life began. There are all sorts of theories, but no absolute certainty on the subject. So far, no experiment has succeeded in producing life from non-living matter. Almost the last words that the great Huxley wrote was to the effect that the theory of "spontaneous generation" was a failure. Many claims have been advanced by those seeking to produce life in the laboratories from various sorts of inanimate matter, but in every case the claims have gone up in smoke. We do not know what life is or how it originated. And the probability is we never will know.

Well Bred Customer.

In the privacy of his home the village butcher was telling his wife of the arrival of a new summer resident.

"She came in today," he said, with enthusiasm, "and I can tell you she's a real lady, brought up select and exclusive. She don't know one cut o' meat from another nor veal from mutton."—Youth's Companion.

Ha! Ha! So He Did.

"Indians, you know," said the widely-read man, "are very stoical. They're never known to laugh."

"Oh, I don't know," replied the flippant person. "The great poet Longfellow made Minnehaha."—The Catholic Standard and Times.

Quite Right.

"Why does that piano man want his business treated like an infant industry?"

"Well, isn't it, when he manufactures baby grands?"

Success at Last.

"I made all kinds of excuses to get off to see them play ball this afternoon."

"Wouldn't any of them work?"

"Yes. Finally I touched the boss' heart by telling him I wanted to go to the ball game."

Hard Lines.

"Did you see where a judge in the west says a wife is entitled to a regular salary for her household services?"

"The deuce he did! Where, then, is the economy of getting married?"

ROOT ADDRESSES BIG CONVENTION

SENATOR DEVOTES HIS OPENING SPEECH TO A DEFENSE OF TAFT ADMINISTRATION.

COMMENTS ON THE TARIFF

New York Men's Prediction of Republican Success in the Fall Election Brings Forth Applause From Hearers in Coliseum.

FIRST DAY'S PROCEEDINGS.

The Republican national convention called to order by Chairman Victor Rosewater at Chicago Coliseum at 12:01 p. m. More than 10,000 present.

Prayer was offered by Rev. Father J. S. Callaghan, which was followed by the reading of the call for the convention by Secretary William Hayward. Governor Hadley of Missouri, a Roosevelt man, started the fight against Taft by moving the adoption of a Roosevelt roll call to take the place of the one reported by the national committee.

Question debated by opposing elements 40 minutes. Chairman Rosewater decided the motion out of order.

Chairman Rosewater announced that Elihu Root had been selected by the national committee for temporary chairman. He was the Taft candidate. Henry Cochems, a Wisconsin delegate, nominated Gov. Francis E. McGovern of his state as the Roosevelt candidate for temporary chairman.

Many fiery speeches made for both candidates. It was charged by the Roosevelt speakers that 80 men were sitting in the convention who had been illegally steam rolled in.

Convention frequently in an uproar.

Sergeant-at-arms announced that unless Francis Heney was allowed to proceed with his speech that the disturbers would be removed from the hall.

There were over 2,000 policemen and sergeants-at-arms on hand to keep the peace.

Speeches took up most of the afternoon. Then came roll call by delegates. This finished at 6:10 p. m.

This was the result of the first vote in the convention: For Root, 558; for McGovern, 502; for Louder, 9; for Houser, 3; for Gronna, 1; not voting, 6.

Root began his speech at 8:18.

* * *

Chicago.—Senator Root, after defeating McGovern for temporary chairman of the national Republican convention, was escorted to the platform and delivered the keynote speech. He devoted his opening address to a defense of the Taft administration.

Here and there Root elicited a ripple of applause, particularly when he touched upon the trust prosecutions of the Taft administration.

Senator Root's tariff comment evoked a little cheer. Predicting a Republican success in the fall election, he was given a hand of applause.

"We need not despair of American institutions," he said, and delegates and the meager crowd in the galleries cheered the sentiment roundly.

Senator Root concluded his speech at 7:35 p. m. and was applauded. The formal appointment of the minor temporary officials followed. Senator Root spoke in part as follows:

Root Delivers Speech.

The struggle for leadership in the Republican party, which has so long engrossed the attention and excited the feelings of its members, is about to be determined by the selection of a candidate. The varying claims of opinion for recognition in the political creed of the party are about to be settled by the adoption of a platform.

In the performance of this duty by the convention and in the acceptance of its conclusions by Republicans is to be applied the ever-recurring test of a party's fitness to govern, its coherence and its formative and controlling power of organization.

And these depend upon the willingness of the members of the party to subordinate their individual opinions and postpone the matter of difference between them in order that they may act in unison upon the great questions wherein they agree, upon their willingness and capacity to thrust aside the disappointment which some of them must always feel in failing to secure success for the candidates of their preference, upon the loyalty to party members to the party itself, to the great organization whose agency in government they believe for the best interests of the nation and for the continuance in power their love of country constrains them to labor.

Are Necessities.

Without these things there can be no party worthy of the name. Without them party association is a rope of sand, party organization is an ineffective form, party responsibility disappears and with it disappears the right to public confidence.

We claim that we are entitled to a popular vote of confidence at the coming election because we have demonstrated that we are the party of affirmative constructive policies for the betterment and progress of our country in all the fields upon which the activity and influence of government can rightly enter. We claim it because we have shown ourselves a party of honest, efficient and capable administration in which public moneys are faithfully applied, appointments are made [illegible] merit, efficient service [illegible] graft is reduced to a minimum, [illegible] and a high standard [illegible] is maintained.

Praises Taft.

We claim it because we have maintained [illegible] peace with the world and the dignity, honor and just interests of the United States among the nations. We claim it because our party stands now, as it has ever stood, for order and liberty and for the maintenance of the constitutional system of government through which a self-controlled democracy for more than a century has established against all detractors the competency of the American people to govern themselves in law abiding prosperity.

We challenge the judgment of the American people on the policies of McKinley and Roosevelt and Taft.

President Taft, in his speech of acceptance on the 28th day of July, 1908, paid a just tribute to the great service rendered by his predecessor in awakening the public conscience, in inaugurating reforms and saving the country from the dangers of a plutocratic government. He instanced the railroad rate law, the prevention of railroad rebates and discriminations, the enforcement of the anti-trust law, the pure food law, the meat inspection law, the general supervision and control of transportation companies, the conservation of natural resources, and he proceeded to say:

Duties for Future.

"The chief function of the next administration, in my judgment, is distinct from a progressive development of that which has been performed by President Roosevelt.

"The chief function of the next administration is to complete and perfect the machinery by which these standards may be maintained, by which the law breakers may be promptly restrained and punished, but which shall operate with sufficient accuracy and dispatch to interfere with legitimate business as little as possible."

The Republican administration which is now drawing to a close has engaged in completing and perfecting the machinery, in applying the standards and working out the practical results of established Republican policies, including also the McKinley policies of a protective tariff and sound finance.

Service of this kind is not spectacular. It receives little public attention and little credit until the public mind is turned to a careful study of the subject, but it is of the highest importance. Great constructive national policies are not established by simple declaration or mere legislation or in a single day or in a single year. They always change conditions in order to better them. They encounter inveterate abuses. They are opposed and evaded in practice. They require to be applied and enforced by a strong hand.

GIRL IS GAGGED AND DRUGGED

Thirteen-year-old Miss, Attacked by Two Men in Yard, Is Found Unconscious by Father.

Elyria, O.—Unconscious from the effects of some drug, most probably chloroform, and bound and gagged, Gladys Parmly, the 13-year-old daughter of Clarence Parmly, a farmer living just outside of the city on Lake avenue, was found by her father in the yard.

Gladys went to the barn a little after 7 to gather eggs and was attacked by two men. One of the men held his hand over her mouth to prevent her from screaming while the other bound her. He tied her hands with a cord and tied handkerchiefs over her mouth and eyes. The girl was rendered unconscious by something she says the men had on the handkerchief which they tied over her mouth. She thinks it was chloroform. In struggling to get free the girl broke away from her assailants and ran out of the barn. The men followed.

TAFT IS PLEASED BY NEWS

President Says "Good" When He Hears That Root Has Been Made Temporary Chairman.

Washington, D. C.—President Taft is pleased with the work of the national Republican convention June 18. He admits the margin between the votes between Senator Root and Governor McGovern is narrower than he hoped it would be, but the line-up of delegates is about as he expected.

"Mr. Taft is very much pleased with the majority given Mr. Root and the line-up," said one of the president's close friends at the White House.

President Taft had just returned from the baseball grounds, where he had seen the Washington Nationals defeat the Philadelphia Athletics in a close and exciting game, when the news of Mr. Root's election as temporary chairman was announced to him by one of his office force.

"Good," said the president, his face wreathed in smiles.

TORNADO IN OHIO FATAL TO THREE

SEVERE STORM KILLS BUCKEYE PEOPLE WHILE THEY WORSHIP IN CHURCH.

MANY HOUSES ARE UNROOFED

Wind Damages Property in State to an Extent That Can Be Estimated Only in Millions—Priest Proves Himself Hero.

Columbus, O.—Ohio suffered a wind and rain storm that caused at least three deaths and damaged property to an extent that can be estimated only in millions.

The wind, which had much the form of a tornado, was most severe in Zanesville, where it killed three people in St. Thomas Catholic church while services were in progress.

In Dayton, Delaware and Columbus, houses were unroofed and trees and telegraph poles broken down. Plain City, 17 miles west of Columbus, was almost demolished and several persons are reported to have been injured there.

Sends Spire Through Roof.

When the tornado, cutting a path a block wide through Zanesville, struck St. Thomas' church, it tore the spire loose and sent it crashing through the roof on the heads of the congregation.

There a priest, the Rev. Father Roach, became a hero. As huge blocks of masonry hurtled down from the broken walls and timbers fell from the roof among the worshipers, he stood calmly in his place and directed the flight of his panic-stricken congregation. The spiritual shepherd became the physical guide of his flock whose members he saw conducted safely through a rear door of the church.

But there remained two of that flock stricken to the floor of the church. To them the priest turned his attention, heedless of the debris falling about him every second, and of the furiously lashing rain which followed the sudden roar and crash of the quickly passing tornado.

Stays to Administer Sacrament.

Thomas Skinion he found dead. The man's head had been crushed by a stone. But in John F. Dinan there was life, and for the sake of the soul that lingered in the broken body the priest administered the last sacrament. Two hours later Dinan died in a hospital.

It is estimated that 500 houses in Zanesville were damaged, 50 families rendered homeless, and that the loss is $500,000. Hattie Lee Huff was in bed when her home was taken up and smashed down in a pile of debris. She was thrown to one side and struck by bricks. Her condition is serious.

Skylights all over Zanesville were broken by the enormous air pressure and 4,000 trees were torn up by their roots.

At Kent, O., lightning struck in several places. The United Brethren church was struck, the firemen coming to the rescue in time to save the building from total destruction.

In Dayton 20 houses were wrecked and $50,000 damage done by the storm. In Union county scores of houses were blown down.

BRIDE AND GROOM DROWN

Couple Who Had Been Married But Six Weeks Lose Their Lives When Rowboat Tips.

Erie, Pa.—Thomas Clune, aged 22, and Mrs. Clune, 21, of Titusville, Pa., bride and groom of six weeks, who were spending their honeymoon with friends in this city, lost their lives when a boat being rowed to a picnic on Presque Isle peninsula was capsized. The picnic party of ten departed from the city in two rowboats, while a storm threatened. In the first boat were Mr. and Mrs. William Munn, Mr. and Mrs. H. H. Davis and baby of this city. The second boat was taken by Mr. and Mrs. Clune, Mr. and Mrs. Henry Cartwright of Titusville and Edward Munn of this city. When the first boat had nearly reached the peninsula the occupants heard cries behind them, but thought the others were informing them that they were going to try to overtake them. The oarsmen in the first boat rowed all the harder.

After reaching shore and when the second boat failed to put in an appearance, Munn and Davis turned back to learn the cause. They found the second boat overturned with Cartwright, his wife and young Munn clinging to it. Clune and his wife had gone down locked in each other's arms. The boat had taken water in the heavy sea and sank before they could bail it out.

Fifteen Killed by Tornado.

Kansas City, Mo.—Fifteen are known to be dead and many injured in Bates county, Missouri, where a tornado mowed down giant trees and destroyed all homes in its path. The twister dipped in earth near La Cygne, Kas., and ended five miles northeast of Drexel, Mo., a distance of 50 miles.

A Kansas City Southern work train of nine cars was blown off the track near Drexel. The train was filled with Greeks. One was killed and 17 hurt.

Terrific Blast Plays Havoc.

Lindenhurst, N. Y.—A terrific explosion of nitroglycerin, believed to have been caused by thieves, destroyed 14 high powered automobiles in the Sands garage at Farmingdale, near here, wrecked several buildings and damaged others. Windows were broken in the residence of B. F. Yoakum, the railroad magnate, two miles away. The Kuerers hotel, which stood only a few feet from the wrecked garage, was completely demolished. The loss of the garage automobiles alone is placed at $40,000.

AVIATRIX MEETS DEATH

WOMAN IS KILLED WHEN HER BIPLANE UPSETS.

Craft Catches in Trees and Falls—Driver Is Dashed to Ground Under Wreckage.

Springfield, Ill.—Miss Julia Clark, the third woman in America to obtain a license as an aeroplane pilot, was killed here in the wreck of her biplane. She is the first woman in America to be killed while flying and the second woman in the world to meet death while driving an aeroplane. Apparently her death was due to inexperience in handling aircrafts. From all accounts, it seems to have been avoidable.

In the face of advice to the contrary, she went up when it was almost dark and attempted a short turn. Her craft caught in the trees near the field and was upset, dashing the woman to the ground under the wreckage. Her skull was crushed. She died in an ambulance.

Miss Clark was 23 years old. In a note which she left in anticipation of an accident she asked that her body be sent to Denver for cremation. She had been interested in aeroplanes ever since she heard that Miss Quimby was flying at Mineola last year. For the past two years she saved the money she earned as a stenographer in Denver and determined to become an aeroplane pilot.

Early in January she turned up at the Curtiss aviation school in San Diego and asked Instructor McClaskey to let her join the school. Curtiss is very strenuously averse to women aviators and told McClaskey to refuse. But Miss Clark persisted and through the friendship of Mrs. Curtiss managed to overcome Curtiss' objections and on May 19 she took her license and flew at an altitude of more than 1,000 feet. Later she joined William Pickens Wright-Curtiss three-ring aerial circus, with which she was performing at the time of her death.

TAFT VETOES ARMY MEASURE

President in Message Indicates Disapproval of Provision Which Would Oust Maj. Gen. Wood.

Washington, D. C.—The president has just vetoed the army appropriation bill. He returned the bill to congress with a message indicating his disapproval of the legislative provision which would oust Maj. Gen. Leonard Wood of the office of chief of staff on March 4 next. In his message the president said:

"The army of the United States is far too vital an institution to the people of this country to be made the victim of hasty or imperfect theories of legislation. As was pointed out by the chairman of the senate military committee it is well known that the war college and the general staff have been for many months engaged upon a comprehensive plan of army reorganization. At the present time, therefore, it is especially inappropriate, in my opinion, to force upon the statute books legislation enacted without the usual deliberation and care. I cannot conscientiously surrender the responsibility in shaping such laws with which I am vested under the constitution. I therefore return to your honorable body without my approval the said bill."

BEEF TRUST TO DISSOLVE

Representatives of National Packing Co. Inform District Attorney That It Will Quit Business.

Washington, D. C.—The attorney general has just announced that he had been notified by District Attorney Wilkerson of Chicago that representatives of the National Packing Co., which is the beef trust, had told him that it is the purpose of the Armour, Swift and Morris interests, which jointly own the company, to wind up its business.

The beef men say they expect to have a definite plan of dissolution ready by August 1, or, if unable to agree, they will notify the attorney general of that fact by August 1. Under these circumstances, Wickersham will withhold until August 1 the civil suit which he had proposed to bring against the trust to compel its dissolution.

Millionaire and Wife Killed.

Erie, Pa.—Thomas S. Snyder, the millionaire catsup manufacturer of Cincinnati, and his wife, to whom he was married only three months ago, were killed by a fast train on the Lake Shore railroad, which crushed their touring car to pieces at the Harbor Creek crossing near this city. Mr. Snyder was making a transcontinental tour in his machine. It was his honeymoon trip and, although he was 70 years old, he had just completed a long jaunt through eastern Canada.

Wright Will Continue to Fly.

New York City.—In spite of the wishes of his multi-millionaire friends on the directorate of the Wright Co., Orville Wright will continue to fly whenever his own sweet will dictates. He came to New York, was elected president of the company in place of his late brother Wilbur, smilingly told the directors who asked him to quit endangering his life that he would have to fly whenever he thought it necessary and quietly stole out of the city again before scarcely anyone knew that he was here.

MacVeagh at Chicago University.

Chicago, Ill.—The convocation exercises of the University of Chicago here June 18 were marked by an attendance unsurpassed in the history of the institution. Thousands of students and visitors crowded into every available inch of space on the great campus to hear the speakers. The throngs were addressed by President Judson of the university and a number of other prominent men, among whom was Secretary of the Treasury MacVeagh, who delivered the principal address of the day.

One or the Other.

A very plain, although somewhat famous woman, was traveling the state of Florida, lecturing on woman's suffrage. She addressed the school children of a little town one afternoon, and prefaced her lecture with the following:

"I am a native of Baltimore, the city made famous by its oysters and beautiful women."

A small boy said to another, in a stage whisper:

"If that's true, she must be an oyster."

Going Further Back.

A man who had suddenly become very rich went to live in New York and began to spend money with a lavish hand. He decided that his name needed advertising, so he visited a genealogist.

"I suppose," he said, "if I pay you enough you can trace my family back to Adam."

"My dear sir," replied the genealogist, "if you're willing to put up the money we can prove by evolution that your family existed before Adam."—Lippincott's Magazine.

He Could.

A northern visitor in the south tells the following story to illustrate the taciturnity of the southern negro.

He had asked Steve, a typical darky of the region, numerous questions concerning a certain plantation, and to each the negro gave the invariable reply of "Yahs, sah."

"Steve," asked the somewhat exasperated northerner, "don't you say anything but 'Yahs, sah?' Can't you say 'No sir'?"

The negro blinked his eyes indolently for a moment and replied, "Yahs, sah."—Judge.

OUTDOOR LIFE.

Will Not Offset the Ill Effects of Coffee and Tea When One Cannot Digest Them.

A farmer says:

"For ten years or more I suffered from dyspepsia and stomach trouble, caused by the use of coffee (Tea contains caffeine, the same drug found in coffee), until I got so bad I had to give up coffee entirely and almost give up eating. There were times when I could eat only boiled milk and bread; and when I went to the field to work I had to take some bread and butter along to give me strength.

"I doctored steady and took almost everything I could get for my stomach in the way of medicine, but if I got any better it only lasted a little while. I was almost a walking skeleton.

"One day I read an ad for Postum and told my wife I would try it, and as to the following facts I will make affidavit before any judge:

"I quit coffee entirely and used Postum in its place. I have regained my health entirely and can eat anything that is cooked to eat. I have increased in weight until now I weigh more than I ever did. I have not taken any medicine for my stomach since I began using Postum.

"My family would stick to coffee at first, but they saw the effects it had on me and when they were feeling bad they began to use Postum, one at a time, until now we all use Postum." Name given by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

Ten days' trial of Postum in place of coffee proves the truth, an easy and pleasant way.

Read the little book, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs. "There's a reason."

THEIR MOST JOYOUS MOMENT

Of the Trio, Probably Representative Redfield Had the Best Occasion to Smile.

The talk in one of the cloak rooms of congress turned to the thought of the happiest moments in one's life. Senator Bailey said his came the day he wore his first pair of trousers. And Paul Howland of Ohio declared his big moment of joy was when he was permitted once to drive a chariot in a pony and dog show parade.

Representative Redfield, who is a wise chap, even if he does hail from Brooklyn, said it was when he was going to school and trying to master long division. Three or four aisles over from where he sat a boy yawned. It was not an ordinary yawn, but one of such genuine expression of feeling toward things in general that it attracted Redfield's attention. He was fortunate in having a paper wad right at hand, ready for any emergency, and he aimed this at the boy's cavernous mouth. The wad went right square into the goal and—well, Fourth of July fireworks are tame to the stunts that boy did in the next few minutes.

He says he almost smiled once on shipboard when the vessel gave a lurch and threw a platter full of beefsteak, gravy and all, over the open-faced shirt front of a pompous passenger across the table.

ECZEMA DISFIGURED BABY

"Our little boy Gilbert was troubled with eczema when but a few weeks old. His little face was covered with sores even to back of his ears. The poor little fellow suffered very much. The sores began as pimples, his little face was disfigured very much. We hardly knew what he looked like. The face looked like raw meat. We tied little bags of cloth over his hands to prevent him from scratching. He was very restless at night, his little face itched.

"We consulted two doctors at Chicago, where we resided at that time. After trying all the medicine of the two doctors without any result, we read of the Cuticura Remedies, and at once bought Cuticura Soap and Ointment. Following the directions carefully and promptly we saw the result, and after four weeks, the dear child's face was as fine and clean as any little baby's face. Every one who saw Gilbert after using the Cuticura Remedies was surprised. He has a head of hair which is a pride for any boy of his age, three years. We can only recommend the Cuticura Remedies to everybody." (Signed) Mrs. H. Albrecht, Box 883, West Point, Neb., Oct. 26, 1910. Although Cuticura Soap and Ointment are sold by druggists and dealers everywhere, a sample of each, with 32-page book, will be mailed free on application to "Cuticura," Dept. L, Boston.

The Last Word in Offense.

The angry mother returns home from a shopping tour down town to find that Tommy has broken into the jam closet, teased his little sister till she cried, smashed a window pane with his top, tied a tin can on the tail of the dog next door, and then wound up further depredations by tracking the parlor carpet with his muddy boots. "You young villain, I'm going to whip you till you can't sit down." (Grabs hold of him.) "Now what have you got to say for yourself?"

Tommy. "Aw, say, ma, this looks like a frame-up."

LOWER TAXES IN '13

Increase in Personality Duplicate Means Lower Rate of Taxation Next Year

PERSONAL VALUATION RAISED

Increases Give Promise of the Addition of Several Hundred Million Dollars to the State Tax Duplicate—Figures Not Yet Complete.

Columbus.—Enormous increases in the valuation of personal property returned this year for taxation give promise of the addition of several hundred million dollars to the state tax duplicate and promise possibilities of further reduction in the tax rates of the state. The state tax commission's figures on assessments are still far from complete, but there is not a county that has been heard from where there has not been an increase in valuation.

Under the Smith act no more money can be raised for carrying on government than was raised in 1910, except that growing municipalities are allowed three per cent increases. This being true, every dollar's worth addition means lower rates for property now on the duplicate.

There are probabilities that increases will be made on incorporated companies, though they were supposed to have been rated fairly high last year. In two directions there is room for expecting additional returns. When the tax commission established the precedent last week by fixing the valuation for taxation on the earning power for the patentee it paved the way for the addition of many millions to the duplicate of the state. The possibilities of the situation are only faintly outlined when it is recalled that one concern was raised from $270,000 to more than $1,000,000.

The state tax commission has asked an opinion from Attorney General Hogan on the question of iron ore. The commission has found several million dollars of ores owned by great corporations stacked up at points along the lake. Some of it has been there for a number of years and is believed to be held against a possible shortage through a strike in the ore fields. The owners say it is in transit, and the attorney general will be asked to say whether they are right.

Increases in the tax duplicates may be counted on from another source if indications are borne out in the valuations to be placed on public service corporations and railroads. The commission will announce no tentative figure this year, but it is finishing work on railroads, and additions are said to be in sight. A great part of these flow from increased earnings, but the larger part are due to natural increase and extensive betterments made on a number of Ohio roads during the year.

This year's figures on individual personal property returns convince the commission that honest effort to list property will be successful. Consequently special attention has been made to prodding up derelict officials. Where officials have gone ahead with their task with determination to succeed the figures speak for themselves.

No better instances could be cited than Cleveland and Cincinnati. Cleveland's personal duplicate, as shown by assessors' returns, jumped from $15,000,000 to $25,000,000, while records truly remarkable were made by villages in Cuyahoga county. The increases were from 40 to 100 per cent.

In Cincinnati nearly double the duplicate of last year is expected in 1912, and it may make possible a slight reduction in the tax rate if expenses are held down. In nearly every instance where big increases are reported officials have said they tried to follow out the state tax commission's instructions to the letter, and quite generally the taxpayers found no fault.

With the exception of a few of the smaller rural counties there is scarcely one which does not show an increase of at least $1,000,000. The average for the entire state is expected to be close to $3,000,000. Washington county, of average size, adds an even million. Huron county adds three-fourths as much, although it is a much smaller county. Seneca adds as much, and in contrast little Trumbull county added $4,000,000, and the officials are still unsatisfied. Lorain county added $2,000,000.

Sunday Excursions Will Be Resumed.

The New York Central lines, Nickel Plate, Baltimore & Ohio, Hocking Valley, Norfolk & Western, Toledo & Ohio Central and Cincinnati, Hamilton & Dayton railroads have assured Attorney General Hogan that it is their purpose to resume excursion business at once. The officials of the Lake Shore have announced a 1-cent a mile rate for single day excursions.

More Money Is Needed.

The next legislature will have to appropriate a sum of money to cover the expense of the work of Ohio's fourth constitutional convention, in excess of the $200,000 which was originally appropriated for that purpose. The convention before taking recess until August 26, authorized an expenditure of approximately $40,000 to advertise the work of the body so as to familiarize the people of the state with the various proposals and of the original appropriation for the convention only $25,000 is left.

With the announcement here by Atty.-Gen. Hogan that the Central Passenger Agents' association will rescind its action placing the ban on Sunday excursions in Ohio, activities on the part of the state public service commission and the attorney-general to have the roads deprived of their charters, because of an alleged violation of their operating grants, has been ended and excursions assured in this state during the present summer. Half a dozen of the railroads concerned have already notified Mr. Hogan that they will start excursions at once.

No Prisoners For State Roads.

It begins to look as though the plan to employ prisoners at manual labor on state aid roads would fail through, and in connection with the movement the state may have "gotten 'in bad'" on some road contracts. After directing the state highway commissioner to award contracts with the condition in them that the state was to furnish the manual labor, the state board of administration concluded that it was hardly fair for the state to contribute the labor in addition to the financial aid that is given under the highway act, and the county get all the benefit of it. It was, therefore, proposed that the counties should subsist and shelter the prisoners while engaged at the work. That proposition was made to the commissioners of Carroll county, in which two road contracts have been let, with the prison manual labor condition in them. They were unwilling to do this, expressing the sentiment of the people of the county when they said that if the county had to pay out money on the prisoner proposition, it would prefer to pay it out direct to its own laborers, and not indirectly for prison labor. There was a conference in the governor's office between members of the board of administration, State Highway Commissioner J. R. Marker and the governor. Gov. Harmon, while much desiring that arrangements be made for the employment of prisoners in road making, insisted that the counties in which they were employed should shelter and feed the prisoners while so engaged. Meantime, the contractors have their tools and equipment on hand and are unable to go to work. One contractor complained to the state highway commissioner that he was out $200 on a freight charge for tools, etc., and was losing $100 a day.

Does the State Save Money?

How much does Ohio save by lighting state institutions from the penitentiary power plant? A preliminary report, covering the five months ending May 30, shows a paper credit of $12,031.50. This money credits to the manufacturing fund at the penitentiary and debits the accounts of the statehouse, school for deaf, school for blind, the penitentiary and the new state bindery. But to find the exact saving to the state is an involved problem of mathematics, admittedly beyond the clerks of the state board of administration. The state paid all the way from 2 1/2 cents to 4 cents for current. It made some and it bought some. Now it has been paying itself at the rate of 2 1/2 cents and immediately will cut its rate to itself to 2 cents on the showing made. The problem is still further complicated by the fact that at some institutions steam that was used to generate current also was used to heat buildings. Some of this steam still must be generated, but the amount of coal consumed is less. Everyone is agreed that the state is saving money, but just how much is not clear.

Case Baffled Physicians.

Dr. L. M. Early is dead from cancer. His case has baffled physicians of the entire world. He offered $1,000,000 for a cure but in vain. When Roentgen first discovered the X-ray, Dr. Early began to experiment with it. He used it successfully in the treatment of many cases of cancer. But the early and imperfect X-ray machine did not afford the operator sufficient protection. The X-ray which he was using to cure cancers caused him to have cancers which it could not cure. While still experimenting with the X-ray, Dr. Early discovered how to make a new photographic paper, and a company bought his discovery from himself and two partners for $3,000,000. The cancers first manifested themselves on Dr. Early's hand. His fingers, then his hand, and finally his arm, bit by bit, were removed. The disease was arrested, but not eradicated.

Woman's Week 54 Hours Long.

A woman's work-day week begins Sunday and ends on Saturday. So ruled Justice E. W. McCormick in the case of Joe Baumlin, restaurant keeper, who was charged by the state department of workshops and factories with violating the women's nine-hour law. The state construed the statute to mean that a woman can not be employed more than 54 hours in six consecutive days, whether the week corresponded with the calendar week or not. Mr. Baumlin had worked a woman, it was alleged, more than 54 hours in six consecutive days. Fifty-four hours is the limit for one week, 10 hours for one day. The state will not test the point in the higher courts.

Campbell Is Parole Officer.

The state board of administration appointed James Campbell, son of former Gov. James E. Campbell, parole officer for the Ohio penitentiary in place of Douglas F. Morris, who has resigned. Mr. Campbell will enter upon his duties at once. Mr. Morris' resignation, handed in two weeks ago, took effect Saturday.

Henry Weber Is Dead.

Henry Adam Weber, 67 years old, professor in the department of agricultural chemistry, Ohio State university, and widely known as a chemist, is dead, after a brief illness from apoplexy. He had not been well for several weeks and was compelled to take his bed. His condition, however, was not thought critical until a few hours before death. Prof. Weber was born in Clinton township, July 12, 1845. He studied at Otterbein university. In 1862 he went to Germany to complete his education.

1,000 Boys in Corn-Growing Contest.

In the neighborhood of 1,000 boys have entered the big corn-growing contest of the state board of agriculture, the winners of which will be given a free trip to Washington next December. They will be taken in a special train which will be known as the Buckeye Boys' Corn special. The entries closed Saturday night. The contestants come from more than two-thirds of the counties of the state. This is the first contest of the kind ever held. It is probable that not less than 200 boys will be selected to make the trip.

MINE INSPECTORS

Held Fourth Annual Meeting In Columbus This Week.

DR. J. A. HOLMES PRESENT

Other Noted Visitors Participate in Interesting Program of Addresses and Demonstrations Arranged For Delegates.

Columbus, O.—The fourth annual meeting of the Mine Inspectors Institute of the United States was held in Columbus this week. The sessions began Monday and continued throughout the week. Dr. J. A. Holmes, head of the United States Bureau of Mining, and several of his subordinates, were in attendance.

The executive board met on Monday and Tuesday. Gov. Harmon delivered the principal address of welcome. John Laing, of West Virginia, president of the institute, made his annual address.

The time was occupied with addresses and social entertainments, including a banquet.

State Mine Inspector George Harrison was president of the organization during the first three years of its existence. He declined to stand for a fourth term.

The purpose of the organization is to work for uniform mining laws and to keep mine inspection out of the influence of politics.

MACCABEES ENCAMPMENT

Will Hold First Annual Gathering in Columbus Last Week of July.

Columbus.—Order No. 1 from the department headquarters of the Uniform Rank, Knights of Maccabees, has just been issued by Brig.-Gen. Edward L. Young, of Norwalk, calling attention to the fact that the annual encampment will be held at Indianola park, July 21st to 28th.

Tents to accommodate about 3,000 members has been provided, and they will be pitched on the north end of the park. Besides this number of uniformed members, it is expected that from 7,000 to 10,000 visitors will be in attendance on the big days of the meeting. The program for the week is as follows:

Sunday, July 21st, opening ceremonies; Monday, regimental conventions; Tuesday, competitive drills; Wednesday, street parade; Thursday, department convention; Friday, sight seeing; Saturday and Sunday, break camp.

During the week there will be a grand military ball, visits to the regular army posts and state institutions, etc., and one day which has not yet been designated will be assigned as Maccabee day and excursion rates will be given throughout the state to Columbus.

OHIO COAL MINES

Are Now Producing About One-Half the Normal Output.

Columbus, O.—Ohio coal mines are operating about one-half capacity and producing about one-half the normal output for this season of the year, according to a statement made by D. H. Sullivan, of the state board of agriculture, formerly president of the Ohio miners, who says he has just received information from various parts of the state upon which his statement is based.

Practically the entire output, he said, is being produced by the Cambridge and Hocking fields and the No. 8 vein in Belmont and Jefferson counties.

The demand for coal at the present time, according to Mr. Sullivan, is exceptionally light for this season of the year. Lake shipments, which usually may be depended upon during the summer months, are unusually light, he says.

"UNCLE SAM" KILLS HIMSELF.

Dayton, O.—Nathan Heywood, an aged resident of Preble county, Ohio, died at St. Elizabeth's hospital of injuries he inflicted. While no one was looking he gashed his throat with a razor. He is survived by seven children. The body was taken to Easton, Ohio, for burial. Heywood had all the physical characteristics of "Uncle Sam," and he had been a familiar figure at many patriotic celebrations.

THE DEADLY GRAPE!

East Liverpool, O.—Mrs. Enoch Jones, 36 years old, was perhaps fatally injured and her daughter, Mildred, 2 years old, was also badly cut, when a bottle of grape juice exploded, due to fermentation. Flying glass was imbedded in the face of both.

ASK FOR HISTORIC GUN

Columbus, O.—Permission has been asked by the centennial commission of the Fremont city council for "Old Betsy Croghan," a cannon employed against the British and Indians in the defense of Fort Stephenson, for use in the centennial parade. The cannon now stands on a mound in Fremont. If the request is granted it probably will be brought to Columbus overland, accompanied by a company of soldiers attired after the manner of the soldiers in the war of 1812.

INJUNCTION IS REFUSED.

Judges Say State Has Right To Regulate Insurance Rates.

Cincinnati.—By refusing to grant an injunction to the Citizens' Fire Insurance Co. of Missouri against the regulation of rates as made by the recently created Kentucky state insurance board, three federal judges, Circuit Judge Denison and District Judges A. M. J. Cochran and Howard C. Hollister, upheld the rights of the state to provide regulations for insurance rates in this state.

CATHOLIC KNIGHTS

Close Their Triennial Meeting With Election of Officers.

Celina, Ohio.—The fifteenth triennial meeting of the Ohio State Council Catholic Knights of America, being held at Marcelina Park, came to a close, following several hot contests in the election of the state officers. Sidney was chosen as the place for holding the 1915 meeting. The big banquet last night was the event of the meeting, the principal toasts were "The C. K. of A., Its Past," by Editor Joseph Berning, of the C. K. of A. Journal, and "Its Future," by Hon. Vincent H. Beckman, both of Cincinnati.

The following state officers were elected: State President, Peter Schneider, Norwood; First Vice President, Leopold Krieg, Toledo; Second Vice President, Albert Mersman, Celina; Secretary, Harry Gott, Cincinnati; Treasurer, Mrs. Helen Lony, Toledo. Vincent Beckman, of Cincinnati, and John G. Romer, of this city, were elected as delegates, and Jacob Hartman, of Cincinnati, and Henry Lang, of Delphos, as alternates to the supreme convention of the order which convenes at Washington, D. C., next year.

SUMMER SCHOOL.

Wittenberg College Prepares to Train Classes in Pedagogy and Child Study.

Springfield, O.—The summer school of Wittenberg college will open under the supervision of Professor T. Bruce Birch, director, June 24 and close on August 2. More than enough students are already registered to fill Ferncliff hall to overflowing. The regular faculty will be assisted by sixteen well selected instructors, and also by fourteen lecturers, among whom is Professor Albert, of the Bloomsburg State Normal school, Pennsylvania. The school of observation will be under the supervision of Professor Eisenberg and Miss Dannaker, graduate students of the University of Pennsylvania. Both have given excellent service during the last two years. They will also offer courses in pedagogy.

FEW SURVIVORS ARE LEFT.

Of the 1,040 Men Who Constituted the "Gallant Sixth" 38 Remain.

Cincinnati.—Of the 1,040 men who constituted the Sixth Ohio Volunteer Infantry when it marched away from Camp Dennison to the war of '61, less than 100 still live, and 38 of these survivors took part in the annual reunion of the "Old Sixth" at Memorial hall. More than a hundred of the friends of the veterans joined with them in making the event a success. The old soldiers gathered in little groups and discussed incidents of the war of half a century ago. Among the messages of congratulations which came from all portions of the globe, was a cablegram from Larz Anderson, United States minister to Belgium, and son of the late commander of the gallant Sixth, Col. Nicholas Longworth Anderson.

POOR CROP RETURNS

From Tobacco Is Causing Ohio Farmers to Turn to Dairying.

Georgetown, O.—A great many farmers in Brown and Clermont counties have quit tobacco raising and are going into dairying on an extensive scale. More than 700 calves were shipped to Cincinnati during the past month.

The price of tobacco has been low and the crops have brought the farmers only a small return for their labor. The farmers also say that farm laborers are scarce and wages are high. These things have been making tobacco raising more difficult and less profitable.

The farmers are finding that dairying is easier work and brings larger returns. They have been investing their money in dairy herds and are shipping the milk into Cincinnati. The great increase in the number of calves shipped this year indicates the progress in dairying in these counties.

ONE RESCUE AFTER ANOTHER.

Hamilton, O.—Charles Shafer, 8, rescued his 1 1/2 year-old brother from the burning home of their parents and after the fire Master Charles climbed into a cherry tree and slipped. He fell 15 feet, but his overalls caught on a limb of the tree near the ground and he was rescued, suspended in the air, unhurt.

ODD FELLOWS IN HAMILTON.

$100,000 FOR BABIES' HOSPITAL

Cleveland.—H. M. Hanna, it was announced, has given $100,000 to the proposed babies' hospital for Cleveland for which a fund of $1,000,000 is being raised.

Manchester.—The King Lumber Co. plant at Peebles was destroyed by fire, said to have been of incendiary origin. The loss is $15,000. The state fire marshal has been notified and an investigation will begin.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOR CONVENTION

Will Be Held in Canton, June 25th to 28th, Inclusive—3,000 Delegates To Attend.

Canton, O.—The Christian Endeavor societies of Ohio will hold their annual convention in this city June 25th to 28th, inclusive. There will be 3,000 delegates in attendance, representing 3,500 societies in Ohio, with a membership of 150,000. The Buckeye state is recognized as a leader in Christian Endeavor work in the United States.

Health & Beauty Hints

By Katherine Morton

"I have a very thin skin and, alas, it is prematurely wrinkled. Please suggest some simple remedies for my great misfortune.

"A Woman of Thirty."

To be wrinkled at thirty is indeed a misfortune, and if the skin is very thin it must be admitted that it has less promise from beautifying treatments than the thicker ones. Thin-skinned faces are at a disadvantage with every wind that blows, with sunburn, fire heat, indigestion, worry, etc.

Thin skins need much more grease than others, for as a rule they are very dry and sensitive to all external influences, and sometimes it is necessary to cleanse such faces with grease instead of with soap and water. This formula will achieve a very good purpose if it is carefully made from pure substances:

| | |
|---|---|
| Almond oil | 4 ounces |
| Spermaceti | 1 ounce |
| White wax | 1 ounce |
| Cucumber juice | 2 ounces |

Select cucumbers ripe enough for table use; cut and chop them fine, then extract the juice by squeezing through a jelly bag. Then measure the juice and carry the required two ounces to a druggist, asking him to supply the rest of the ingredients and make up the formula.

When cleansing the face with the cream work the grease into the skin with the fingers and then wipe off the residue with very soft cloths. The soil from the skin will be very visible on these, and the face can be massaged and worked over with the cloths until it feels as fresh as if washed in the ordinary way. If it seems to shine a little too much sometimes, heat a tablespoonful of some delicate toilet water and go over the face with this and a fresh soft rag.

A lotion especially for strengthening relaxed muscles, and which is therefore extremely good for wrinkles, is made of the following simple things:

| | |
|---|---|
| Fresh rosemary tops | 2 pounds |
| Sage (also freshly gathered) | 1/4 pound |
| Rectified spirit | 3 quarts |
| Water | 1 quart |

Digest for ten days, then throw the whole in a still, add a pound and a half of common salt and draw off six pints. To this distilled portion put one ounce of bruised Jamaica ginger, and after the liquid has stood a few days longer either decant or filter it. This is regarded as a fine skin tonic, and it can also be used upon the hair to advantage.

Barley water was used in our grandmothers' times for wrinkles, and there is no reason why it should not be employed today and made up in the same old-fashioned manner. Ancient directions for this simple beautifier call for three ounces of pearl barley boiled in a pint of rain water until the gluten is extracted; then the liquid is strained and is applied directly to the face after it has been washed on going to bed. Some of the beauty people of the present day make up this wash with the addition of 25 drops of tincture of benzoin to a quart. The barley water so prepared is declared absolutely proof against wrinkles, but one can only know the truth of this statement by testing it. Strained honey and sour buttermilk are other simple remedies against these subtle enemies of woman's youth, and these modest medicaments are available to all.

The thin-skinned face must always be protected against strong winds, grinding dust, deep sunburn and much burning over the cook stove if its owner wishes to avoid the bane of deep-seated wrinkles.

Novel Pincushion

A very pretty pincushion is shown in the accompanying sketch, made in quite a novel fashion. It is square in shape, and the surface of the cover is composed of a number of small rounds of soft silk, arranged in two contrasting colors, such, for instance, as pale pink and green.

To prepare each of these rounds of silk, a piece of thin cardboard should be taken, the size of a shilling, and laid upon a piece of silk which should be cut about half an inch larger than the cardboard. The silk is then drawn up closely in the middle until it takes the form of a large button; on the plain side of this work long stitches in silk or tinsel thread in the form of a star adorn the center. These buttons are lightly tacked together until the required size is obtained and the whole thing may then be mounted on white silk and, when finished, edged with lace.

Cushions of various shapes can be made on exactly the same principle, and the little silk buttons may be all of one color or in many shades.

Social Forms and Entertainments

A Delightful Party.

I expect my mother to visit me the latter part of June, and while she is here I wish to have a small company (in the afternoon) of ladies that she knows, as she used to live here. What would you do for entertainment? How would it be to tell each lady to bring her sewing and then have a guessing contest and have prizes? I find the woman's section very helpful.

MRS. M. L. C. H.

Your party as outlined is just right and your guests will be anxious to talk with your mother so you will not need any more entertainment than you have planned. People always enjoy bringing their work. If you will send me a self-addressed envelope in care of the paper I will tell you of a new book of guessing contests that came out recently.

A Junior-Senior Banquet.

Please suggest a suitable way of decorating a hall for a banquet given by the juniors in honor of the seniors, and also what refreshments to serve.

A JUNIOR.

Decorate with the class colors. Flags, pennants and Japanese lanterns are often a pretty addition when placed just right. If you wish a regular banquet start with soup, then fish, then whatever meat course seems desirable, with its accompanying vegetable, then salad, followed by dessert, which should be either a plain or fancy cream, with coffee, salted nuts and bon-bons.

Removing Mourning.

Through your columns will you kindly inform me the best way for a gentleman to leave off mourning? Should he leave it all off at once, or gradually start in to wear colored ties while still wearing mourning? Is it proper to wear the same suits after the mourning band has been removed? C. P.

In taking off mourning it is perfectly correct to wear colored ties and color in the linen, as many men wear black suits who are not in mourning.

MME. MERRI.

Private Belongings.

"The thing I just hate about being at home," said a young business woman, "is that you never have anything of your own at home. Everything seems to belong to the whole family."

It is unfortunate that in many families the members are not taught to respect each other's property or privacy. It adds to every day annoyance and irritations to have some one else write with your personal pen and spoil its point, or some one else to borrow your new kimono or your last envelope just when you need it yourself.

Family life would lose many of its bugbears if children in early life were taught to respect each other's private belongings. If the home is to be cheery, pleasant and altogether worth while there must be some restraint put on the sense of common property.

The Fad of Yellow.

It is a coincidence, but what a pretty one, that both fashion and flower land are just now enamored of shades of yellow. Everywhere at the dressmakers, at the milliners, and even at the tailors, there are indications that at last yellow is to have its long delayed innings.

Of course the pure yellow is a very elastic one, for the color includes a great variety of shades. The woman who finds the pure yellow of the lemon trying may take refuge in a soft and more muted one of the [illegible] again, another may find apricot or [illegible] still, and yet another that she is best suited by those tan shades that gradually merge into brown.

Porch Refreshment.

Girls who serve ice cream for their porch parties or summer sewing circles now endeavor to get away from the beaten track and to offer some variety of frozen tidbit which will be less familiar to their guests.

For instance, plain vanilla or almond ice is modified of recent years by the addition of bits of cut up marshmallows or chopped nuts of some sort, with or without the addition of candied fruit.

Crystallized ginger chopped rather small is used in vanilla or in ginger ice cream.

HARD FOR THE HOUSEWIFE.

It's hard enough to keep house in perfect health, but a woman who is tired and suffering with an aching back has a heavy burden. Any woman in this condition has cause to suspect kidney trouble, especially if the kidney action seems disordered. Doan's Kidney Pills have cured thousands. It is the best recommended special kidney remedy.

Mrs. C. F. Mace, Madison St., Shawneetown, Ill., says: "I suffered intensely from backache and headache and was very nervous. I was scarcely able to attend to my housework and at times was so bad I was confined to bed. Doan's Kidney Pills gave me quick relief and before long cured me completely."

LEFT MAMMA GASPING.

Mamma—Yes, Willie.

Warm Compliment.

A fancy-dress ball was held in a certain garrison town recently, at which many military officers and men attended. A soldier attired as a lady was spoken to by the regimental chaplain.

"Well, young man," said the parson, "you are very well got up. Did you win a prize?"

"Yes, chum; I got second prize. Did you get a prize?"

"Me? Oh, no, I——"

"Well, now, that's rotten bad luck, I call it," said the Tommy, warmly, "for you are about the best get-up of a parson I've seen lately."—London Tit-Bits.

Instead of liquid antiseptics, tablets and peroxide, for toilet and medicinal uses, many people prefer Paxtine, which is cheaper and better. At druggists, 25c a box or sent postpaid on receipt of price by The Paxton Toilet Co., Boston, Mass.

Accounted For.

"Why are there so many men in this jail?" asked the philanthropic reformer.

"I guess," answered the guide, "it's chiefly because they can't get out."

RECORD OF A GREAT MEDICINE

Doctors Could Not Help Mrs. Templeton—Regained Health through Lydia E. Pinkham's Compound.

Hooper, Nebraska.—"I am very glad to tell how Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has helped me. For five years I suffered from female troubles so I was scarcely able to do my work. I took doctors' medicines and used local treatments but was not helped. I had such awful bearing down pains and my back was so weak I could hardly walk and could not ride. I often had to sit up nights to sleep and my friends thought I could not live long. At my request my husband got me a bottle of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and I commenced to take it. By the time I had taken the seventh bottle my health had returned and I began doing my washing and was a well woman. At one time for three weeks I did all the work for eighteen boarders with no signs of my old trouble returning. Many have taken your medicine after seeing what it did for me. I would not take $1000 and be where I was. You have my permission to use my name if it will aid any one."—Mrs. SUSIE TEMPLETON, Hooper, Nebraska.

The Pinkham record is a proud and peerless one. It is a record of constant victory over the obstinate ills of woman—ills that deal out despair. It is an established fact that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has restored health to thousands of such suffering women. Why don't you try it if you need such a medicine?

HARMON AND THE UNIT RULE

The adoption of the unit rule at the Ohio Democratic convention is infamous and should be repudiated by the national committee when it meets in Baltimore. It is difficult to conceive how it can do otherwise, without stultifying itself and disregarding its own rules. The call of the national committee for the national convention provides that "state primary laws shall govern delegates wherever such laws exist."

It is not surprising and probably not unwarranted that the Republicans at Columbus should disregard the mandate of the people, because Ohio Republicans have been strenuously opposed to popular rule in conventions. But the Ohio primary law is a Democratic measure, passed by a Democratic legislature and signed by Harmon himself. The primary purpose of the law was to insure an honest expression of the will of the people. It was intended to eliminate the political boss and his machine. But to the utter astonishment of every progressive Democrat in the country we behold the man whose bounden duty it was to see that the law was faithfully observed, joining hands with corrupt political bosses to defeat the very purpose the law was intended to serve. It is indeed deplorable at this time, particularly, that a Democratic governor should trample on a law bearing his sign-manual for the purpose of advancing his own political fortunes. That Gov. Harmon was a party to this political outrage there can be no doubt. When this atrocious work was accomplished he sent the following telegram to E. H. Moore, his insurance commissioner and political manager:

"I wish I could put in words my appreciation of the devoted loyalty of yourself and my other friends. All I can do is try and deserve it."

It is evident that Harmon and his political managers are blind to the most obvious and obtrusive facts if they imagine that the people will approve their high-handed outrage. The people have a better knowledge of their rights, duties and responsibilities today than they ever had before. And they are proportionately jealous of these rights and determined to protect them.

The day is at hand when boss domination must be eliminated and the will of the people substituted. Popular control of the machinery of government must commence at the source. It must be as sacred and as effective in the primaries as in the elections. There is no other course left. No other reform offers a satisfactory solution of a problem so essential to the permanency of popular government. Boss rule is intolerable. It is repugnant to the spirit of democracy. Thomas Jefferson, the founder of the Democratic party, said: "The will of the people is the only legitimate foundation of any government and to protect its free expression should be our first object."

The Democratic voters of Ohio elected 19 delegates nearly one-half the delegation and instructed them to vote for the nomination of Gov. Wilson at the Baltimore convention. Then along came Gov. Harmon's state convention and instead of protecting the free expression of the people's will deliberately ignores the suppresses it. Do these subservient tools of predatory wealth believe that a state convention will be permitted to nullify the result of a legalized primary in which delegates are chosen by the people to vote for a certain presidential candidate? Do they imagine that a convention composed of honest Jeffersonian Democrats will tolerate such an outrage? These political tricksters should be taught to remember that the art of government is the art of being honest.

THE REASON WHY.

Why is the Republican party beset by its present difficulties?

This question can be answered with one word—tariff. Originally employed to meet the expenses of the civil war and later used to offset the extensive internal taxes, which were so heavy that people complained about them constantly, the tariff gradually became the weapon of a small class of citizens who wanted wealth and who saw a method to get it without work or effort. In the beginning the people were promised that after the tariff rates had been left in force long enough to do away with the necessity for internal taxes they would be removed. But before that was accomplished the privileged few discovered that in the tariff lay a weapon through the use of which they might force their fellow Americans to pay them tribute.

And when the tariff began to build up great fortunes the Republicans who were responsible for it pointed to these great fortunes as evidence that the tariff was a good thing.

The leaders of the Republican party knew in their hearts that this was not the truth and then and there did humbug and fraud become part and parcel of the party's program. First, it was "infant industries," and then it was "protecting the American workingman." The people saw these "infant industries" grow into giant trusts, capitalized at million upon million, grasping their competitors by the throats, debauching legislators, throttling railroads and defying everything and everybody who tried to thwart their will. After that the people saw "protected American workmen" ground down to a wage level of the workmen of Europe. They saw that the workmen for the tariff trusts were being paid less and treated worse than any workmen in this country, and finally, with the revelations that came with the Steel Trust investigation and the Lawrence (Mass.) strike, they learned that labor conditions in the tariff-protected trusts were little short of barbarous and inhuman—practically the worst anywhere in the civilized world.

The people have learned at last that the tariff is a humbug, that it has no excuse in logic or economics, and therein lies the reason for the present troubles and woes within the Republican party. For this party will not admit its error. Republican leaders insist that these tariff trusts are still in the infant class. These leaders still contend that American workmen receive the benefits of tariff when every school boy in the land knows that such contentions are little short of idiotic.

American consumers are today paying dividends on a trust capitalization of thirty-three billion dollars, 70 per cent of which is water, and American workmen—those of them who work for the trusts—receive wages as low as $5 a week. These are the two great reasons why the g. o. p. is beset with woes and tribulations.

Rubbing it In.

Booth Tarkington was talking in Indianapolis about a novelist of the "high-brow" type—one of those half-starved novelists whose reviews are much more remarkable than their sales.

"As this novelist, shabby and sold," said Mr. Tarkington, "was walking in Fifth avenue one wintry afternoon there glided past the magnificent automobile of a publisher who had brought out one of the poor fellow's books at a heavy loss.

"The publisher signaled to his chauffeur; the automobile stopped, and the novelist, to reply to a wave of the millionaire's hand, presented himself at the window of the car humbly.

"The publisher, wrapped in furs, said:

"'There's a great manuscript nearly falling out of your hip pocket. If you weren't so well known—'

"Here the publisher removed the superb Havana cigar from his mouth and laughed a loud, scornful laugh.

"'If you weren't so well known,' he repeated, 'I guess you'd have had your pocket picked.'"

To Escape Gold Bricks.

A man or a woman with funds to invest should make it a primary principle to first consult an experienced banking house of established reputation. The first step in the prudent investment of your money is the selection of your banking house. You should choose a banker not only willing but competent to serve your every need—one with the requisite patience and sympathy to study your investment problem from all angles, to make your problem his problem.

Few investors realize that within the past few years there has sprung up a new guild in the banking business, bankers whose business runs well over $100,000,000 annually and whose success is largely due to the faithful and thoughtful attention given each serious inquiry or request for advice. If you can save and command $100 or more each year you can command the best financial brains in America.—Leslie's.

Ignored the Heart Convention.

"Did you hear that Mrs. Brownhill has adopted some sort of new belief?"

"I'm not at all surprised. I saw her playing bridge last night, and when her partner led spades on a doubled no trumper she only smiled."

A sprained ankle may as a rule be cured in from three to four days by applying Chamberlain's Liniment and observing the directions with each bottle. For sale by all dealers.

RANDOM THOUGHTS

By Tom, Dick and Harry.

In the last issue of the Herald under the head of "Random Thoughts" there was an article touching upon promotions in our schools, and the article contained a number of general statements about "60 per cent" teachers and "niggardly basis" of maintaining schools. This article was not the first one, some time ago in the same paper and under the same heading Tom, Dick or Harry offered some criticisms about efficiency of teachers, etc.

Tom, Dick and Harry are very indefinite persons, but the writer of these articles shows a pronounced inclination to find fault with teachers and school conditions, so because of this and for convenience we will call him "Disgruntled," assuming that the gender is masculine.

Now we take it that "Disgruntled" is speaking in general terms, and very likely does not intend to make any applications or criticisms of local conditions, and we have no evidence to show that the matter is in the least personal. We may presume, (we have the right to presume) that Disgruntled has no children of his own, or if he has, quite likely they are young cherubs, and to the doting parent measure quite up to a 150 per cent standard of perfection. How natural it will be for Disgruntled to honestly believe that if these dear little ones of his ever do go astray, ever do "flunk" an examination, that it will be the fault of some low salaried teacher, or the defects of a school system, and that heredity and general environments had nothing to do about it.

It is hardly worth the time to go into detail as to Disgruntled's statements, it is enough to say these articles show very plainly that the writer has the mistaken idea, that the school is a place where something is poured into the child, or the idea that the teacher must take the child like one would take a piece of clay, and mould it into any desired shape.

How much better it would be for Disgruntled to use the medium at his command for making public his ideas about school matters, if he would first tell some plain truths about the duty of the parents to the school. What a world of good he might do by helping to establish in the mind of the parents the wholesome truth, that the success of the child in school depends almost entirely upon his individual efforts. No greater wrong could be done the pupil than to make him believe that someone can "make or break" him. Teach the child to rely upon his own honest effort above everything else.

Disgruntled can not be very well informed upon school matters, if he does not know that in Ohio, at least, teachers are paid fairly good salaries and that the pleasant conditions of the school buildings are above the condition of the average home.

But however that may be, we should not get the idea that a 100 per cent perfect teacher can make a 90 per cent perfect pupil out of a Hottentot. It will do some good to teach pupils, right in the home, that a 40 per cent faulty teacher, or a 10 per cent faulty system, should never be permitted to spoil a wide awake native 100 per cent perfect American Kid."

It might be well to remember that the whole world is a school house and that all the people are teachers and pupils, and that they are gathered together in little groups with shelter over their heads and that we call these little places of shelter—home. What the home is our social life will be—in fact bad men go out from bad homes. The public school teacher may have a modifying influence upon a pupil's life—about the same influence that the barber has upon that which is dear to every young man's heart—his mustache.

There may be a few people who believe that the work of the Constitutional Convention if adopted by the people will bring about some very radical changes. The fact is that the present constitution, adopted in 1851 rest the supreme power with people. Every one should read articles one and two of our present Bill of Rights.

Article I. All men are, by nature, free and independent, and have certain inalienable rights, among which are those of enjoying and defending life and liberty, acquiring, possessing and protecting property, and seeking and obtaining happiness.

Article II. All political power is inherent in the people. Government is instituted for their equal protection and benefit, and they have the right to alter, reform or abolish the same, whenever they may deem it necessary; and no special privileges or immunities shall ever be granted, that may not be altered, revoked, or repealed by the general assembly.

It is plain, as shown in Article two that sixty-one years ago, the framers of the constitution believed the people could govern themselves. They certainly could not have thought that a part of the people were wiser than the whole people, at any rate it was the people's government that they were talking about. We believe there is nothing more radical in the proposed new constitution, nothing that gives more power to the people than that which they already possessed under the present Bill of Rights. However, if the new constitution, differing somewhat in details, will make the government more responsive to the deliberate will of a majority of the people then we believe the work has been well done.

Years ago, I met an old man in the road, it was just after dark, and coming upon the man suddenly I dodged a little. This seemed to offend the old fellow and he stopped short and asked in an authoritative tone of voice "Are you scart?" Looking the old fellow in the face and seeing that it was just a man, I said the only thing that come to my mind to say: "Why no, what did we have to get scart at?" There may be those who coming suddenly upon the proposed new constitution may dodge a little, but if they look it carefully in the face they will find there is nothing to be scart about.

The Mixer is peeved again, and all because we said his Chardon story was "highly colored." He says we should read our own news columns. We did Mr. Mixer, and the item said the reports set afloat "Have been highly colored." They were too. 'Twas only a schoolboy fight, and while it is to be regretted, it was no crime fit for penal punishment, though it may be aggravated to such an extent that the law may take hold, and the law is blind, you know. Our idea of the way that story should have been handled would be that it be touched up gently, like you did that Jim Henry affair. That was a lady-like write-up, and hurt no one, though you might have turned loose some language had you cared to. We are sorry we used the word "senior," however. We knew better, too.

In making this explanation we assume that The Mixer understands that we did not mean to say his story was incorrect. The descriptive language was too strong, that was all.

DEAFNESS CANNOT BE CURED

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars free.

Greenland Is Green.

Greenland is green in more ways than one. Its wonderful miniature trees are a most beautiful green, and travelers declare no such color is found elsewhere in the world.

Greenland is practically a great group of green mountains covered with ice that has a green tint, and which has formed great icebound glaciers, that are tied between the mountain ranges and can be penetrated only by a drill.

Where the sun strikes with sufficient force the ice and snow let go, and the glaciers, which are called "live," often melt enough to slide and dash down the mountain, or drop with an awful force into the inlets. Very often such glaciers do a lot of damage to shipping that has sought shelter in bays or inlets.

During the long night period the country is often illuminated with what we term northern lights, or aurora borealis. Without this electrical display, the country would be wrapped in darkness of a peculiar density.

Shoe Dealer Duke.

The story of how a grand duke, a near relation of the czar of Russia, came to be a boot and shoe dealer on the Nevsky Prospekt comes from St. Petersburg. Some time ago a woman from Paris appeared in the Russian capital, covered with diamonds. It was loudly whispered that this woman was a protege of the grand duke; that the money that paid for all this display came out of the admiralty treasury and would have paid the crews of many ships in the war with Japan. One evening at a reception this woman was booted and was obliged to withdraw. The czar drove her away and dismissed the grand duke in disgrace. His career having thus been closed he opened the shoe store. Now he has been pardoned and restored to his rank. But his shoe store continues to do business and all the officers who are under his orders are wise enough to patronize it in order not to put anything in the way of their advancement.

Nova Scotia Eelgrass.

United States Consul Albert J. Fleming of Yarmouth, N. S., reports that the exportations of eelgrass to the port of Boston in the latter part of 1911 were the largest in the history of that traffic, the amount in two months being 227 tons, the gross price of which was $10 a ton. This practically cleaned up the crop in the storage barns, but since then large quantities were gathered, and, after drying, the grass was stored to supply the demand during the next season.

Eelgrass is practically unlimited in supply in that region, and it is hoped that larger shipments will be made in the near future. The principal use is for mats and cheap mattresses, but the Yarmouth firms who are engaged in buying from small producers and marketing the commodity, believe that the eelgrass can be used in the manufacture of coarse wrapping paper.

Very Emotional.

"Ever see one of these barefoot dancers? Their steps are symbolic; every step means something." "I saw one of 'em land on a tack one night. Her steps were full of meaning for the next few minutes."

Lacked Positiveness.

"What sort of a man is he?" asked a Kansas City man concerning a citizen who is regarded as a mollycoddle. "I'll tell you the kind of a fellow he is," replied the other. "If he wants to make a statement real emphatic he says 'ordinarily.'"

FAIR DEALING

NO bank can hope to win and hold the confidence and respect of a community unless every person entering its doors is assured of receiving fair and courteous treatment, regardless of his station in life or his relationship to the bank. America is democratic, and its institutions must be conducted upon democratic principles, if they are to succeed.

The Cleveland Trust Co. is primarily a bank "for all the people." On June 1st, 1912, its depositors numbered 86,208.

All of said bonds, together with interest coupons are issued for the purpose of improving highways leading into said Township and are issued under authority of the General Laws of the State of Ohio, particularly Sections 3295, 3939, 3940, 3941 and 3942 of the General Code of Ohio, and in accordance with a resolution duly adopted by the Trustees of said Township at their regular meeting on the 27th day of May, 1912, entitled "To issue bonds for the purpose of improving highways leading into the Township of Willoughby, Lake County, Ohio."

All of said bonds to draw interest from the date of sale at the rate of 4 1-2 per cent per annum, payable semi-annually on the 1st days of April and of October of each year on and after the 1st day of October, 1912. Said bonds and interest thereon shall be payable at the Willoughby Branch of The Cleveland Trust Company, at Willoughby, Ohio. Said bonds will be sold to the highest bidder for not less than par and accrued interest. All of said bonds shall be delivered to the highest and best bidder at the office of said Trustees in the Village of Willoughby, Ohio. All of the above described bonds shall be dated the day of sale, and, together with interest coupons, shall be issued and signed according to law; said interest coupons shall have the signature of the Clerk lithographed thereon.

All bids must state the number of bonds bid for, and the gross amount of the bid and accrued interest to date of delivery. All bids to be accompanied by a certified check on some solvent bank located in Lake County other than the one making the bid, payable to the Treasurer of said Township, for 10 per cent of the amount of the bonds bid for, upon the condition that if the bid is accepted the bidder will receive and pay for such bonds within ten days from and after the time of the award, said check to be retained by said Township if such condition is not fulfilled.

Said bids will be opened and publicly read and sale of said bonds will be made at the regular meeting of the Trustees of said Township held on the 8th day of July, 1912, at 2:30 o'clock P. M., at the usual place of meeting at the Town Hall in the Village of Willoughby, Ohio.

The Trustees reserve the right to reject any and all bids.

By C. C. JENKINS, Clerk.

Our New Perfection Broiler

Is pleasing many women. It enables the housewife to broil as well on the New Perfection Stove as over a coal fire.

It uses all the heat.
It cooks evenly.
It broils both sides at once.
It doesn't smoke.

And of course you are familiar with the

New Perfection
WICK BLUE FLAME
Oil Cook-stove

It is such a convenience all the year round. It will bake, broil, toast and roast just as well as a regular coal range. Rayo-light oil is the oil that gives the best results.

Ask to see the New Perfection Stove at your dealer's. It is handsomely finished in nickel, with cabinet top, drop shelves, towel racks, etc. Free Cook-Book with every stove. Cook-Book also given to anyone sending 5 cents to cover mailing cost.

IN GETTING AN ELECTRIC SUCTION CLEANER

DON'T BE DECEIVED and buy one with a cheap motor, a small vertical shaft which will soon wear and drop, especially when in connection with a small fan which must necessarily be run at high speed in order to get sufficient power. Such machines make a neat appearance and may do good work while new, but are SHORT LIVED.

When you buy the MAGIC ELECTRIC you have a cleaner with a five year guarantee certificate, a motor designed especially for it by the WESTINGHOUSE ELECTRIC MFG. Co., having a large horizontal shaft, a good sized fan which even at low speed gives sufficient power.

The MAGIC is the most simple in construction, having no pumps, valves, connecting rods, gears, belts, etc., to give out.

After three years' experience with various makes, we sell the BEST the market affords.

MENTOR

The weather this past week has been rather cold most of the time, and very dry, so that berries are not going to amount to much, and "shortberry strawcake" as the small boy calls it, will be rather a minus quantity.

Many of our people are still sick. Mrs. Frost has been on the list two or three days this past week, and there seems to be no "let up" whatever about "grippy colds" they almost amounting to bronchitis and pneumonia in some cases. Unless we can have some good hot weather before the cold of regular winter sets in, there will be trouble sure enough.

Mrs. Albert Hanson, nee Miss Jean Munson, left here on Saturday morning with her small daughter, Elizabeth, for their new home in Winnipeg Canada, and was accompanied by Miss Emily Barber of Painesville who is to spend the summer with her grand-mother, Mrs. Eunice Daniels Barber, in Wahpeton, Dakota. It is expected that Miss Emily will go with Mrs Hanson as far as Minneapolis, after which she will be met by her uncle, Mr. Robert Barber.

The new officers of the Epworth League are as follows: President, Mr Ernest Burkholtz; First Vice President, Miss Josephine Johnson; Secretary and Treasurer, Mr. Lyne Carleton; Organist, Miss Martha Spindle.

The wedding ceremony for Mr. Schauffner and Miss McLean was to have been performed one day last week, after which the young couple were expected to spend their honeymoon at Chautauqua, returning here the very last of the week. Some question has been raised about whether Mr. Schauffner would be returned another year by the "Powers That Be" and considerable indignation has been expressed at the very idea of there being any question about it at all. Some have said it would break up the church if he was not returned, others that there were not enough "dyed in the wool" Methodists to pay the janitor, much less keep things running, still others, with an air of finality have said "Well, if he is not returned here when everybody wants him, we know of many who will just go down to the Disciple church!" That is all there is about it.

The new store of Mr Bradway at the Center, is doing nicely, even though it was prophesied that such would not be the case. Mr. Bradway has a telephone and delivers goods, so he of course is getting fully his share of trade. Years ago, the summer families used to bring down from Cleveland most all of their groceries, as they were coming out into the "country." Now, there is never anything of the kind done, they having learned that fully as good things to eat can be bought right at home, and save the trouble of bringing them down, to say nothing of the additional expense. This accounts in a measure for the great increase in trade, over that enjoyed by grocers in the years past.

Mrs T. O. Morley returned on Saturday from her visit to her father's sister in Illinois, having enjoyed a much appreciated vacation, her family having been cared for in her absence by Miss Householder of Kirtland.

The Miscellany Club held its annual picnic at Little Mountain on Wednesday, as usual about half the members attending. However, those half, had so many friends that wished to go along, that the number was increased to about forty and a thoroughly good time was enjoyed by everybody. Supper was served on small tables set out on the porch of the old "Lake View House" after which the old caves were explored and old snake stories revived, which had lost none of their terrors during the years when they had all but been forgotten. Hearty thanks was returned to Mrs. Charles Justus, the Capt. of the Club's "Social Com" for getting permission to set foot on the "Sacred" Mountain, and for the perfect success of the outing. Afterward it all came out that the order to keep people away, had been issued because of the "lawlessness" of young folks from Mentor and Painesville townships, who have gone up there and entered cottages, stealing dishes and souvenirs therefrom, breaking windows and otherwise behaving in a manner that would have put their parents to shame, had they known of it. But why do they not know what their children are up to? What on earth are parents for, anyway?

Mrs. T. O. Hart spent several days in Cleveland, as the guest of her aunt, Mrs Stone, and her cousin Mrs. Marion Thompson and her family.

Mrs. Laura Hodge has been having a visit from her Cleveland cousin, Miss McCall, this past week, and now is enjoying a visit with her son's wife, Mrs. Will Hodge of Indianapolis Ind.

Mr and Mrs. Will Sawyer have just bought the Harvey Tager cottage on Center street, and are about to take possession at once. Mr. Tager has about concluded to change his pretty "cobble stone" barn, that he had put onto his lot on Main street into a house for rent, so we understand, and may decide to put same onto the market for sale, later on.

The Knitting Mills here, have decided to permit their employees to have Saturday afternoon during summer as a holiday, which will be highly appreciated by them all.

Talk is again heard about a village park! As such "talk" is bound to be heard sooner or later, our people may just as well stop and listen one time as another! The good twenty acres owned by Mr. John Oliver is still there, waiting to be put into shape for a Park right in the proper place, with plenty of beautiful shade trees, already grown to proper height, with Stop 60 having a good shelter house right near at hand, and no word has been passed around that Mr. Oliver had ever taken back his generous offer of cash, toward such an enterprise. In the meantime, we are renting a park across the street, poorly situated, in that the ground is low and inclined to be wet, and not half big enough.

The pretty home of Mrs. Nettie Kerr Baxter was sold for $2700.00 we are told, while that owned by Mrs Fisher and built by Mr. Wallace Dille of Euclid some ten years ago, brought $5500.00. The difference was, or must have been, in the situation, as the Dille house is on the avenue and is up to date in some respects, while the other house is very much more desirable for any one wishing to have a quiet home, just off the car line, away from the automobile nuisance.

Mr. Will Sawyer has secured the West Mentor Electric Package Depot and is prepared to take charge of all sorts of things, having plenty of room in the rear of the post office. While this new depot was not at all necessary, being less than a mile from the other one, it will no doubt be somewhat of a convenience, after all.

Mrs. Robert Case, assisted by her friend, Miss Frances Cleveland, gave a most delightful farewell party on Tuesday last, for Mrs. Hanson, at which there were present friends whom she had known ever since she was a little girl, some of whom she might never see again in this world! A great effort was made by all present, not to let the sadness creep uppermost! Those present were Mrs Elizabeth Cullings Munson, Mrs W. H. Johnson, Mrs. Laura Hodge, Mrs Spencer Munson, Mrs Alice Lawrence Dickey, Mrs. Helen Blish, Mrs. Lillian Hodge Parmelee, Mrs Frank Case, Mrs N. C. Frost, Miss Nettie King, Mrs T. G. Hart, Miss Cleveland, Mrs. Charles Church, Mrs Will Morley, Miss Jeannette Munson, Mrs Harry King, Miss Nora Lawrence, Mrs. Albert Hanson, Miss Eleanor King. Several others of the friends were "bidden to the feast" among whom were Mrs Edgar Barber of Painesville, and Mrs. T. D. Morley of our village here, both of whom were detained away, much to the regret of all present. Most delightful refreshments were served, pink clover being the table decorations and also the place card decorations, they having been painted thereon by the brush of the hostess. With the invitations had come the request to bring thimbles, and so a number of "holders" of all sizes, thickness, colors, and conditions, were made and presented to Mrs. Hanson as "souvenirs" of the pleasant afternoon, many of them being ornamented with the most wonderful initials and monograms possible.

Mr. and Mrs. Earl Woodruff and two daughters, Della and Helen, have just started for the Pacific Coast, where they will visit Mrs. Woodruff's niece, Mrs. Allen in Pasadena; also her cousin Mrs William Mills in the same city, after which they are intending to go up to Portland and see their brother, Mr. William Corning, and possibly Mr. and Mrs. Wilson Smith at Vancouver, Wash.

Mr. H. B. Rayhl has bought the J. H. Dunwell place on Hart street. Mr Dunwell and his family are going onto the Geo P. Blish homestead for the summer as caretakers, this place being for sale; Mr. Dunwell intending to go to Florida in the early fall where he has recently bought some land in the region of the Everglades.

Mrs. Nichols of Willoughby has recently bought the Rayhl place on Jackson street, same that was owned and built by Herbert Spears, if we are not mistaken.

The McCrea boys are at home from the Blind School at Columbus for the summer vacation, and are as much in love with the school as ever.

The Missionary meeting was held with Mrs. Church on Thursday, there being an unusually large attendance, as it had been whispered around that a musical program had been prepared by the leaders, Mrs Hanson and Mrs. Robert Case. To say that said program was enjoyed, would be putting the matter very lightly! Among the numbers that brought tears to everyone present was the old song "Mine Ain Countrie," sung by Mrs. W. H. Johnson, nee Miss Crit Radcliffe Johnson, a beautiful singer of the long ago.

Mr. Bert Smith has been visiting friends in Salamanca, N. Y., this past week, Mr. Smith usually taking his vacation in installments, thereby getting more trips during the year than usually falls to the lot of most mortals.

Miss Gertrude Jacks is on the sick list, confined to her room with what is feared may prove to be nervous prostration.

Mr. and Mrs. Thomas Dow have moved down from Cleveland, and are already settled in their new home, they having bought the Henry King place in West Mentor early in the spring. Whether they are going to retain the old name of "Hedged In" by which this place was known for so long, we have not heard.

Mr. Charles Rexford and daughter Helen, of Cleveland, spent a short time down here last week with his sister, Mrs. Frank Smith and his mother Mrs. Eliza Rexford.

Mr. and Mrs. Paul Woodruff together with Mr. and Mrs Will Hart, have been on a trip to Wellington, very recently.

Mrs. L. O. Carver is away on a visit with friends in Chicago, Ill., and Indianapolis, Ind., where she will remain for some weeks.

Mrs. John McKee and her sister, Mrs. Charles Kirkpatrick of Lakewood, are guests of their cousins, the Misses Nellie and Mary Rexford.

Mr. and Mrs. John Oliver are having Mrs Oliver's parents with them this summer for a while now, Mr. and Mrs. Lockwood of Cleveland, they going to their own summer home in Canada later on in the season.

Most of our people were detained at home from the much anticipated Horticultural meeting in Painesville on Saturday, and it was indeed a real disappointment, but couldn't possibly be helped, this time.

Mr. Henry Johnson has gone down to old Virginia to look after some land there that he owns and wishes to sell to good advantage. Does anybody want to buy?

Mrs. Agnes Woodford Higgins and Mrs Nettie Kerr Baxter both had private sales of furniture and other things last week, finding no trouble in disposing of all they cared to sell. Mrs. Baxter will settle herself in rooms somewhere, preferring smaller quarters to the care of a large house.

The funeral of Mr. Edward H. Cleveland was held in the Methodist church here yesterday (Sunday) afternoon at three o'clock, Rev. Phillips of Painesville having charge of the services. Mr. Cleveland was born in 1827 and had lived in Mentor Village about thirty years, coming here from Cleveland having at one time lived in Hambden. He died at the home of his daughter Mrs. James Moran in Painesville on Friday, having for some months been very anxious to go and be at rest, often saying that it seemed as if "God had forgotten him," since younger ones were taken, who might have been of some use in the world, while he was left. Mr. Cleveland was a devoted Christian man, a kind father and accommodating neighbor, who will be missed around the Center here. He left two daughters, Mrs Frank Millard of Kirtland, and Mrs Moran, besides an aged brother, Mr Allen Cleveland of Willoughby, who is over ninety years old.

Mr. and Mrs. Charley Johnson and Mr. and Mrs. Fred Johnson of Cleveland were called down here by the death and burial of their grandfather Mr. E. H. Cleveland.

Children's Day was observed at the Methodist church in the morning, in place of the regular services, the program being in the hands of Mrs Harry King and Mrs T. D. Morley, who were assisted in the music by Miss Cleveland, Mrs Robert Case, Mr Birkholtz and the regular choir. The decorations were in charge of Miss Eleanor King and Miss Sarah Armstrong. Everything passed off nicely the song and recitations by the little folks being especially enjoyed as a matter of course. The little presentation of Bunyan's Pilgrim's Progress being very good indeed, considering the absence of some of the speakers there being no opportunity at the last moment of filling their places! Such things though always happen, and only serve to prove the metal of which the teachers are made.

At the Disciple church Children's Day was observed in the evening. The house was beautifully decorated with maple boughs, palms and cut flowers, and all the songs and recitations were unusually good, there being no forgetful ones on the entire program. The one theme was "Missionary." We heard one lady say, that if she had taken part in anything of the kind when she was a girl, she should have felt "called" to be a foreign missionary, of that she was perfectly sure! The entire program showed more than usual care in planning and drilling, everything moving as per clock work, and such evenings can not help but make a great impression on the minds of everybody there whether old or young.

There will be a reception given to Mr and Mrs Schauffner next Monday evening, June 24th, at the Methodist church, and all members of the congregation and all friends of the new minister are urged to be present. By order of the committee.

When your child has whooping cough be careful to keep the cough loose and expectoration easy by giving Chamberlain's Cough Remedy as may be required. This remedy will also liquify the tough mucus and make it easier to expectorate. It has been used successfully in many epidemics and is safe and sure. For sale by all dealers.

Bach's Place in Music.

Bach was known as the master of the organ. He is responsible for the present system of piano playing, the use of all the fingers.

TEACHERS' EXAMINATION

The Lake County board of examiners will offer examinations for teachers' certificates on the first Saturday of each month in the year 1912. If first Saturday falls on holiday, examinations will be held one week later. Boxwell pupils will be examined the third Saturday in April and the third Saturday in May, 1912. All examinations will be held in the old High School building, Painesville, beginning at 8.15 standard time.

By order of the board.

AMENDMENTS TO BE VOTED ON

Text of the First 35 Amendments to be Submitted to the Voters.

SPECIAL ELECTION, SEPT. 3.

Official List of Amendments Passed by Constitutional Convention—Method of Submission—Form of Ballot to be Used.

Following are the amendments adopted by the Constitutional Convention.

Resolved by the Constitutional Convention of the State of Ohio, That the amendments proposed to the constitution and adopted by this Convention, as hereinafter set forth, shall be submitted to the electors for adoption or rejection on the third day of September, A. D., 1912, and that the president and secretary of this Convention be, and they are hereby, directed to certify the same to the secretary of state for submission to the electors according to law.

BALLOT SUBJECT NO. 1.
Article 1, Section 5.
Reform in Civil Jury System.

ARTICLE I

Section 5. The right of trial by jury shall be inviolate, except that, in civil cases, laws may be passed to authorize the rendering of a verdict by the concurrence of not less than three-fourths of the jury.

BALLOT SUBJECT NO. 2.
Article 1, Section 9.
Abolition of Capital Punishment.

ARTICLE I

Section 9. All persons shall be bailable by sufficient sureties, except those charged with murder in the first degree, where proof is evident or the presumption great. Excessive bail shall not be required; nor excessive fines imposed; nor cruel and unusual punishment inflicted. Nor shall life be taken as a punishment for crime. Until otherwise provided by law, persons convicted of crimes heretofore punishable by death shall be punished by imprisonment in the penitentiary during life.

BALLOT SUBJECT NO. 3.
Article 1, Section 10.
Depositions and Testimony in Criminal Cases.

ARTICLE I

Section 10. Except in cases of impeachment, cases arising in the army and navy, or in the militia when in actual service in time of war or public danger, and cases involving offenses for which the penalty provided is less than imprisonment in the penitentiary, no person shall be held to answer for a capital, or otherwise infamous, crime, unless on presentment or indictment of a grand jury; and the number of persons necessary to constitute such grand jury and the number thereof necessary to concur in finding such indictment shall be determined by law. In any trial, in any court, the party accused shall be allowed to appear and defend in person and with counsel; to demand the nature and cause of the accusation against him, and to have a copy thereof; to meet the witnesses face to face, and to have compulsory process to procure the attendance of witnesses in his behalf, and a speedy public trial by an impartial jury of the county in which the offense is alleged to have been committed; but provision may be made by law for the taking of the deposition by the accused or by the state, to be used for or against the accused, of any witness whose attendance cannot be had at the trial, always securing to the accused means and the opportunity to be present in person and with counsel at the taking of such deposition, and to examine the witness face to face as fully and in the same manner as if in court. No person shall be compelled, in any criminal case, to be a witness against himself; but his failure to testify may be considered by the court and jury and may be made the subject of comment by counsel. No person shall be twice put in jeopardy for the same offense.

BALLOT SUBJECT NO. 4.
Article 1, Section 16.
Suits Against the State.

ARTICLE I

Section 16. All courts shall be open, and every person, for an injury done him in his land, goods, person, or reputation, shall have remedy by due course of law, and shall have justice administered without denial or delay. Suits may be brought against the state, in such courts and in such manner, as may be provided by law.

BALLOT SUBJECT NO. 5.
Article 1, Section 19a.
Damages for Wrongful Death.

ARTICLE I

Section 19a. The amount of damages recoverable by civil action in the courts for death caused by the wrongful act, neglect or default of another, shall not be limited by law.

BALLOT SUBJECT NO. 6.
Article 2, Section 1.
Initiative and Referendum.

ARTICLE II

Section 1. The legislative power of the state shall [illegible] general assembly [illegible] and house of representatives [illegible] people reserve [illegible] to the [illegible] amendments [illegible] of re[illegible] referendum [illegible] They [illegible] or reject any [illegible] any item [illegible] passed by the [illegible] as here[illegible] of the [illegible] amendments to the [illegible] adopt or re[illegible] The limitations [illegible] on the power [illegible] to enact laws [illegible] on the power [illegible]

Section 1a. [illegible] power reserved [illegible] designated the initiative, and the signatures of ten per centum of the electors shall be required upon a petition to propose an amendment to the constitution. When a petition signed [illegible] required number of electors shall have been filed with the secretary of state, and verified as herein provided [illegible] amendment to the Constitution, the full text of which shall have been set forth in such petition, the secretary of state shall submit for the approval or rejection of the electors, the proposed amendment to the Constitution in the manner hereinafter provided, at the next succeeding regular or general election in any year occurring subsequent to ninety days after the filing of such petition. The initiative petitions, above described, shall have printed across the top thereof, "Amendment to the Constitution Proposed by Initiative Petition to be Submitted Directly to the Electors."

Section 1b. When at any time, not less than ten days prior to the commencement of any session of the general assembly, there shall have been filed with the secretary of state a petition signed by three per centum of the electors and verified as herein provided proposing a law, the full text of which shall have been set forth in such petition, the secretary of state shall transmit the same to the general assembly as soon as it convenes. If said proposed law shall be passed by the general assembly either as petitioned for or in an amended form it shall be subject to the referendum. If said proposed law shall not be passed, or if it shall be passed in an amended form, or if no action be taken thereon, within four months from the time it is received by the general assembly, the same shall be submitted by the secretary of state to the electors for their approval or rejection at the next regular or general election if such submission shall be demanded by supplementary petition verified as herein provided and signed by not less than three per centum of the electors in addition to those signing the original petition, which petition must be signed and filed with the secretary of state within ninety days after such proposed law shall have been rejected by the general assembly or after the expiration of such term of four months in the event no action has been taken thereon or after the law as passed by the general assembly shall have been filed by the governor in the office of such secretary. Such proposed law shall be submitted in the form demanded by such supplementary petition which shall be either in the form as first petitioned for or after there shall have been incorporated therein any amendment or amendments thereto introduced in the general assembly. In the event that a proposed law so submitted is approved by a majority of the electors voting thereon, it shall be the law and shall go into effect as herein provided, in lieu of any amended form of said law which may have been passed by the general assembly, and such amended law passed by the general assembly shall not go into effect until and unless the law proposed by supplementary petition shall have been rejected by the electors.

All such initiative petitions, last above described, shall have printed across the top thereof: "Law Proposed by Initiative Petition." Ballots shall be so printed as to permit an affirmative or negative vote upon each measure submitted to the electors. Any proposed law or amendment to the Constitution submitted to the electors as provided in Section 1a and Section 1b, if approved by a majority of the electors voting thereon shall take effect thirty days after the election at which it was approved and shall be published by the secretary of state. If conflicting proposed laws or conflicting proposed amendments to the Constitution shall be approved at the same election by a majority of the total number of votes cast for and against the same, the one receiving the highest number of affirmative votes shall be the law, or in the case of amendments to the Constitution shall be the amendment to the Constitution. No law proposed by initiative petition and approved by the electors shall be subject to the veto of the governor.

Section 1c. The second aforestated power reserved by the people is designated the referendum, and the signatures of six per centum of the electors shall be required upon a petition to order the submission to the electors of the state for their approval or rejection, of any law, section of any law or any item in any law appropriating money passed by the general assembly. No law passed by the general assembly shall go into effect until ninety days after it shall have been filed by the governor in the office of the secretary of state, except as herein provided. When a petition, signed by six per centum of the electors of the state and verified as herein provided, shall have been filed with the secretary of state within ninety days after any law shall have been filed by the governor in the office of the secretary of state, ordering that such law, section of such law or any item in such law appropriating money be submitted to the electors of the state for their approval or rejection, the secretary of state shall submit to the electors of the state for their approval or rejection such law, section or item, in the manner herein provided, at the next succeeding regular or general election in any year occurring subsequent to sixty days after the filing of such petition, and no such law, section or item shall go into effect until and unless approved by a majority of those voting upon the same. If, however, a referendum petition is filed against any such section or item, the remainder of the law shall not thereby be prevented or delayed from going into effect.

Section 1d. Laws providing for tax levies, appropriations for the current expenses of the state government and state institutions, and emergency laws necessary for the immediate preservation of the public peace, health or safety, shall go into immediate effect. Such emergency laws upon a yea and nay vote must receive the vote of two-thirds of all the members elected to each branch of the general assembly, and the reasons for such necessity shall be set forth in one section of the law, which section shall be passed only upon a yea and nay vote, upon a separate roll call thereon. The laws mentioned in this section shall not be subject to the referendum.

Sec. 1e. The powers defined herein as the "initiative" and "referendum" shall not be used to pass a law authorizing any classification of property for the purpose of levying different rates of taxation thereon or of authorizing the levy of any single tax on land or land values or land sites at a higher rate or by a different rule than is or may be applied to improvements thereon or to personal property.

Section 1f. The initiative and referendum powers are hereby reserved to the people of each municipality on all questions which such municipalities may now or hereafter be authorized by law to control by legislative action; such powers shall be exercised in the manner now or hereafter provided by law.

Section 1g. Any initiative, supplementary or referendum petition may be presented in separate parts but each part shall contain a full and correct copy of the title, and text of the law, section or item thereof sought to be referred, or the proposed law or proposed amendment to the Constitution. Each signer of any initiative, supplementary or referendum petition must be an elector of the state and shall place on such petition after his name the date of signing and his place of residence. A signer residing outside of a municipality shall state the township and county in which he resides. A resident of a municipality shall state in addition to the name of such municipality the street and number, if any, of his residence and the ward and precinct in which the same is located. The names of all signers to such petitions shall be written in ink, each signer for himself. To each part of such petition shall be attached the affidavit of the person soliciting the signatures to the same, which affidavit shall contain a statement of the number of the signers of such part of such petition and shall state that each of the signatures attached to such part was made in the presence of the affiant, that to the best of his knowledge and belief each signature on such part is the genuine signature of the person whose name it purports to be, that he believes the persons who have signed it to be electors, that they so signed said petition with knowledge of the contents thereof, that each signer signed the same on the date stated opposite his name; and no other affidavit thereto shall be required. [illegible] upon [illegible] unless [illegible] and [illegible] ten additional days shall [illegible] additional signatures to such petition. No law [illegible] amendment to the Constitution submitted to the electors by initiative and supplementary petition and receiving an affirmative majority of the votes cast thereon, shall be held unconstitutional or void on account of the insufficiency of the petitions by which such submission of the same was procured; nor shall the rejection of any law submitted by referendum petition be held invalid for such insufficiency. Upon all initiative, supplementary and referendum petitions provided for in any of the sections of this article, it shall be necessary to file from each of one-half of the counties of the state petitions bearing the signatures of not less than one-half of the designated percentage of the electors of such county. A true copy of all laws or proposed laws or proposed amendments to the Constitution, together with an argument or explanation, or both, for, and also an argument or explanation, or both, against the same, shall be prepared. The person or persons who prepare the argument or explanation, or both, against any law, section or item, submitted to the electors by referendum petition, may be named in such petition and the persons who prepare the argument or explanation, or both, for any proposed law or proposed amendment to the constitution may be named in the petition proposing the same. The person or persons who prepare the argument or explanation, or both, for the law, section or item, submitted to the electors by referendum petition, or against any proposed law submitted by supplementary petition, shall be named by the general assembly, if in session, and if not in session then by the governor. The secretary of state shall cause to be printed the law, or proposed law, or proposed amendment to the constitution, together with the arguments and explanations, not exceeding a total of three hundred words for each, and also the arguments and explanations, not exceeding a total of three hundred words against each, and shall mail, or otherwise distribute, a copy of such law, or proposed law, or proposed amendment to the constitution, together with such arguments and explanations for and against the same to each of the electors of the state as far as may be reasonably possible. Unless otherwise provided by law, the secretary of state shall cause to be placed upon the ballots, the title of any such law, or proposed law, or proposed amendment to the constitution, to be submitted. He shall also cause the ballots so to be printed as to permit an affirmative or negative vote upon each law, section of law, or item in a law appropriating money, or proposed law, or proposed amendment to the constitution. The style of all laws submitted by initiative and supplementary petition shall be: "Be it Enacted by the People of the State of Ohio," and of all constitutional amendments: "Be it Resolved by the People of the State of Ohio." The basis upon which the required number of petitioners in any case shall be determined shall be the total number of votes cast for the office of governor at the last preceding election therefor. The foregoing provision of this section shall be self-executing, except as herein otherwise provided. Laws may be passed to facilitate their operation, but in no way limiting or restricting either such provisions or the powers herein reserved.

BALLOT SUBJECT NO. 7.
Article 2, Section 8.
Investigation by Each House of General Assembly.

ARTICLE II

Section 8. Each house, except as otherwise provided in this Constitution, shall choose its own officers, may determine its own rules of proceeding, punish its members for disorderly conduct, and, with the concurrence of two-thirds, expel a member, but not the second time for the same cause, and shall have all powers necessary to provide for its safety and the undisturbed transaction of its business, and to obtain, through committees or otherwise, information affecting legislative action under consideration or in contemplation, or with reference to any alleged breach of its privileges or misconduct of its members, and to that end to enforce the attendance and testimony of witnesses and the production of books and papers.

BALLOT SUBJECT NO. 8.
Article 2, Section 16.
Limiting Veto Power of Governor.

ARTICLE II

Section 16. Every bill shall be fully and distinctly read on three different days, unless in case of urgency three-fourths of the house in which it shall be pending, shall dispense with the rule. No bill shall contain more than one subject, which shall be clearly expressed in its title, and no law shall be revived, or amended unless the new act contains the entire act revived, or the section or sections amended, and the section or sections so amended shall be repealed. Every bill passed by the general assembly shall, before it becomes a law, be presented to the governor for his approval. If he approves, he shall sign it and thereupon it shall become a law and be filed with the secretary of state. If he does not approve it, he shall return it with his objections in writing, to the house in which it originated, which shall enter the objections at large upon its journal, and may then reconsider the vote on its passage. If three-fifths of the members elected to that house vote to repass the bill, it shall be sent, with the objections of the governor, to the other house, which may also reconsider the vote on its passage. If three-fifths of the members elected to that house vote to repass it, it shall become a law notwithstanding the objections of the governor, except that in no case shall a bill be repassed by a smaller vote than is required by the Constitution on its original passage. In all such cases the vote of each house shall be determined by yeas and nays and the names of the members voting for and against the bill shall be entered upon the journal. If a bill shall not be returned by the governor within ten days, Sundays excepted, after being presented to him, it shall become a law in like manner as if he had signed it, unless the general assembly by adjournment prevents its return; in which case, it shall become a law unless, within ten days after such adjournment, it shall be filed by him, with his objections in writing, in the office of the secretary of state. The governor may disapprove any item or items in any bill making an appropriation of money and the item or items, so disapproved, shall be void, unless repassed in the manner herein prescribed for the repassage of a bill.

BALLOT SUBJECT NO. 9.
Article 2, Section 33.
Mechanics' and Builders' Liens.

ARTICLE II

Section 33. Laws may be passed to secure to mechanics, artisans, laborers, sub-contractors and material men, their just dues by direct lien upon the property, upon which they have bestowed labor or for which they have furnished material. No other provision of the constitution shall impair or limit this power.

BALLOT SUBJECT NO. 10.
Article 2, Section 34.
Welfare of Employes.

ARTICLE II

Section 34. Laws may be passed fixing and regulating the hours of labor, establishing a minimum wage, and providing for the comfort, health, safety and general welfare of all employes; and no other provision of the constitution shall impair or limit this power.

BALLOT SUBJECT NO. 11.
Article 2, Section 35.
Workmen's Compensation.

ARTICLE II

Section 35. For the purpose of providing compensation to workmen and their dependents, for death, injuries or occupational disease, occasioned in the course of such workmen's employment, laws may be passed establishing a state fund to be created by compulsory contribution thereto by employers, and administered by the state, determining the terms and conditions upon which payment shall be made therefrom, and taking away any or all rights of action or defenses from employes and employers; but no right of action shall be taken away from any employe when the injury, disease or death arises from failure of the employer to comply with any lawful requirement for the protection of the lives, health and safety of employes. Laws may be passed establishing a board which may be empowered to classify all occupations, according to their degree of hazard, to fix rates of contribution to such fund according to such classification, and to collect, administer and distribute such fund, and to determine all rights of claimants thereto.

BALLOT SUBJECT NO. 12.
Article 2, Section 36.
Conservation of National Resources.

ARTICLE II.

Section 36. Laws may be passed to encourage forestry, and to that end areas devoted exclusively to forestry may be exempted, in whole or in part, from taxation. Laws may also be passed to provide for converting into forest reserves such lands or parts of lands as have been or may be forfeited to the state, and to authorize the acquiring of other lands for that purpose; also, to provide for the conservation of the natural resources of the state, including streams, lakes, submerged and swamp lands and the development and regulation of water power and the formation of drainage and conservation districts; and to provide for the regulation of methods of mining, weighing, measuring and marketing coal, oil, gas and all other minerals.

BALLOT SUBJECT NO. 13.
Article 2, Section 37.
Eight Hour Day on Public Work.

ARTICLE II.

Section 37. Except in cases of extraordinary emergencies, not to exceed eight hours shall constitute a day's work, and not to exceed forty-eight hours a week's work, for workmen engaged on any public work carried on or aided by the state, or any political subdivision thereof, whether done by contract, or otherwise.

BALLOT SUBJECT NO. 14.
Article 2, Section 38.
Removal of Officials.

ARTICLE II

Section 38. Laws shall be passed providing for the prompt removal from office, upon complaint and hearing, of all officers, including state officers, judges and members of the general assembly, for any misconduct involving moral turpitude or for other cause provided by law; and this method of removal shall be in addition to impeachment or other method of removal authorized by the constitution.

BALLOT SUBJECT NO. 15.
Article 2, Section 39.
Regulating Expert Testimony.

ARTICLE II

Section 39. Laws may be passed for the regulation of the use of expert witnesses and expert testimony in criminal trials and proceedings.

BALLOT SUBJECT NO. 16.
Article 2, Section 40.
Registering Land Titles.

ARTICLE II

Section 40. Laws may be passed providing for a system of registering, transferring, insuring and guaranteeing land titles by the state or by the counties thereof, and for settling and determining adverse or other claims to and interest in, lands the titles to which are so registered, insured or guaranteed, and for the creation and collection of guaranty funds by fees to be assessed against lands, the titles to which are registered; and judicial powers with right of appeal may by law be conferred upon county recorders or other officers in matters arising under the operation of such system.

BALLOT SUBJECT NO. 17.
Article 2, Section 41.
Abolishing Prison Contract Labor.

ARTICLE II

Section 41. Laws shall be passed providing for the occupation and employment of prisoners sentenced to the several penal institutions and reformatories in the state and no person in any such penal institution or reformatory shall be required or allowed while under sentence thereto to work at any trade, industry or occupation wherein or whereby his work, or the product or profit of his work, shall be sold, farmed out, contracted or given away; and goods made by persons under sentence to any penal institution or reformatory without or within the state of Ohio shall not be sold within this state unless the same are conspicuously marked "prison made." Nothing herein contained shall be construed to prevent the passage of laws providing that convicts may work for, and that the products of their labor may be disposed of to, the state or any political subdivision thereof, or for or to any public institution owned or managed and controlled by the state or any political subdivision thereof, and the products of such labor disposed of to the state or any political subdivision thereof or to any public institution owned or managed and controlled by the state or any political subdivision thereof shall not be marked "prison made."

BALLOT SUBJECT NO. 18.
Article 3, Section 8.
Limiting Power of General Assembly.

ARTICLE III

Section 8. The governor on extraordinary occasions may convene the general assembly by proclamation and shall state in the proclamation the purpose for which such special session is called, and no other business shall be transacted at such special session except that named in the proclamation, or in a subsequent public proclamation or message to the general assembly issued by the governor during said special session, but the general assembly may provide for the expenses of the session and other matters incidental thereto.

BALLOT SUBJECT NO. 19.
Article 4, Section 1.
Change in Judicial System.

ARTICLE IV

Section 1. The judicial power of the state is vested in a supreme court, courts of appeals, courts of common pleas, courts of probate, and such other courts inferior to the courts of appeals as may from time to time be established by law.

Section 2. The supreme court shall, until otherwise provided by law, consist of a chief justice and six judges, and the judges now in office in that court shall continue therein until the end of the terms for which they were respectively elected unless they are removed, die or resign. A majority of the supreme court shall be necessary to constitute a quorum or pronounce a decision, except as hereinafter provided. It shall have original jurisdiction in quo warranto, mandamus, habeas corpus, prohibition and procedendo, and appellate jurisdiction in all cases involving questions arising under the Constitution of the United States or of this state, in cases of felony on leave first obtained, and in cases which originated in the courts of appeals, and such revisory jurisdiction of the proceedings of administrative officers as may be conferred by law. It shall hold at least one term in each year at the seat of government, and such other terms, there or elsewhere, as may be provided by law. The judges of the supreme court shall be elected by the electors of the state at large for such terms, not less than six years, as may be prescribed by law and they shall be elected, and their official term shall begin at such time as may now or hereafter be fixed by law. Whenever the judges of the supreme court shall be equally divided in opinion as to the merits of any case before them and are unable for that reason to agree upon a judgment, that fact shall be entered upon the record and such entry shall be held to constitute an affirmance of the judgment of the court below. No law shall be held unconstitutional and void by the supreme court without the concurrence of at least all but one of the judges, except in the affirmance of a judgment of the court of appeals declaring a law unconstitutional and void. In cases of public or great general interest the supreme court may, within such limitation of time as may be prescribed by law, direct any court of appeals to certify its record to the supreme court, and may review, and affirm, modify or reverse the judgment of the court of appeals. All cases pending in the supreme court at the time of the adoption of this amendment by the people, shall proceed to judgment in the manner provided by existing law. No law shall be passed or rule made whereby any person shall be [illegible] supreme court.

Section [illegible]. The state shall be divided into appellate districts of compact territory bounded by county lines, in each of which there shall be a court of appeals consisting of three judges, and until altered by law the circuits in which circuit courts are now held shall constitute the appellate districts aforesaid. The judges of the circuit courts now residing in their respective districts shall be the judges of the respective courts of appeals in such districts and perform the duties thereof until the expiration of their respective terms of office. Vacancies caused by the expiration of the terms of office of the judges of the courts of appeals shall be filled by the electors of the respective appellate districts in which such vacancies shall arise. Until otherwise provided by law the term of office of such judges shall be six years. Laws may be passed to prescribe the time and mode of such election and to alter the number of districts or the boundaries thereof, but no such change shall abridge the term of any judge then in office. The court of appeals shall hold at least one term annually in each county in the district and such other terms at a county seat in the district as the judges may determine upon, and the county commissioners of any county in which the court of appeals shall hold session shall make proper and convenient provisions for the holding of such court by its judges and officers. Each judge shall be competent to exercise judicial powers in any appellate district of the state. The court of appeals shall continue the work of the respective circuit courts and all pending cases and proceedings in the circuit courts shall proceed to judgment and be determined by the respective courts of appeals, and the supreme court, as now provided by law, and cases brought into said courts of appeals after the taking effect hereof shall be subject to the provisions hereof, and the circuit courts shall be merged into, and their work continued by, the courts of appeals. The courts of appeals shall have original jurisdiction in quo warranto, mandamus, habeas corpus, prohibition and procedendo, and appellate jurisdiction in the trial of chancery cases, and, to review, affirm, modify, or reverse the judgments of the courts of common pleas, superior courts and other courts of record within the district as may be provided by law, and judgments of the courts of appeals shall be final in all cases except cases involving questions arising under the Constitution of the United States or of this state, cases of felony, cases of which it has original jurisdiction and cases of public or great general interest in which the supreme court may direct any court of appeals to certify its record to that court. No judgment of a court of common pleas, a superior court or other court of record shall be reversed except by the concurrence of all the judges of the court of appeals, on the weight of the evidence, and by a majority of such court of appeals upon other questions; and whenever the judges of a court of appeals find that a judgment upon which they have agreed is in conflict with a judgment pronounced upon the same question by any other court of appeals of the state, the judges shall certify the record of the case to the supreme court for review and final determination. The decision in all cases in the supreme court shall be reported, together with the reasons therefor, and the laws may be passed providing for the reporting of cases in the courts of appeals. The chief justice of the supreme court of the state shall determine the disability or disqualification of any judge of the courts of appeals and he may assign any judge of the courts of appeals to any county to hold court.

The proposal was referred to the Committee on Arrangement and Phraseology.

BALLOT SUBJECT NO. 20.
Article 4, Section 3.
Judge of Court of Common Pleas for Each County.

ARTICLE IV

Section 3. One resident judge of the court of common pleas, and such additional resident judge or judges as may be provided by law, shall be elected in each county of the state by the electors of such county; and as many courts or sessions of the court of common pleas as are necessary, may be held at the same time in any county. And judge of the court of common pleas may temporarily preside and hold court in any county; and until the general assembly shall make adequate provision therefor, the chief justice of the supreme court of the state shall pass upon the disqualification or disability of any judge of the court of common pleas and he may assign any judge to any county to hold court therein.

Section 7. There shall be established in each county, a probate court which shall be a court of record, open at all times, and holden by one judge, elected by the electors of the county, who shall hold his office for the term of four years, and shall receive such compensation, payable out of the county treasury, as shall be provided by law. Whenever ten per cent of the number of the electors voting for governor, at the next preceding election in any county having less than sixty thousand population as determined by the next preceding federal census, shall petition the judge of the court of common pleas of any such county not less than ninety days before any general election for county offices, the judge of the court of common pleas shall submit to the electors of such county the question of combining the probate court with the court of common pleas, and such courts shall be combined and shall be known as the court of common pleas in case a majority of the electors voting upon such question vote in favor of such combination. Notice of such election shall be given in the same manner as for the election of county officers. Elections may be had in the same manner for the separation of such courts, when once combined.

Section 12. The judges of the courts of common pleas shall, while in office, reside in the county for which they are elected; and their term of office shall be for six years.

Section 15. Laws may be passed to increase or diminish the number of judges of the supreme court, may increase beyond one or diminish to one the number of judges of the court of common pleas in any county, and may establish other courts, whenever two-thirds of the members elected to each house shall concur therein; but no such change, addition or diminution shall vacate the office of any judge; and any existing court heretofore created by law shall continue in existence until otherwise provided. The judges of the courts of common pleas in office, or elected thereto prior to January first, 1913, shall hold their offices for the term for which they were elected and the additional judges, provided for herein, shall be elected at the general election in the year 1914.

The proposal was referred to the Committee on Arrangements and Phraseology.

BALLOT SUBJECT NO. 21.
Article 4, Section 9.
Abolition of Justices of the Peace.

ARTICLE IV

Section 9. A competent number of justices of the peace shall be elected by the electors in each township in the several counties, until otherwise provided by law. Their term of office shall be four years and their powers and duties shall be regulated by law, provided that no justice of the peace shall be elected in any township in which a court, other than a mayor's court is or may hereafter be maintained with the jurisdiction of all causes of which justices of the peace have jurisdiction and no justice of the peace shall have, or exercise, jurisdiction in such township.

Schedule.

If the amendment to Article IV, Sections 1, 2 and 6, be adopted by the electors of this state and become a part of the constitution then Section 9 of Article IV of the constitution is repealed, and the foregoing amendment, if adopted, shall be of no effect.

BALLOT SUBJECT NO. 22.
Article 4, Section 21.
Contempt Proceedings and Injunctions.

ARTICLE IV.

Section 21. Laws may be passed, prescribing rules and regulations for the conduct of cases and business in the courts of the state, regulating proceedings in contempt, and limiting the power to [illegible] injury [illegible] all persons charged [illegible] contempt proceedings, with the violation of an injunction issued in such controversies shall, upon demand, be granted a trial by jury as in criminal cases.

BALLOT SUBJECT NO. 23.
Article 5, Section 1.
Woman's Suffrage.

ARTICLE V.

Section 1. Every citizen of the United States, of the age of twenty-one years, who shall have been a resident of the state one year next preceding the election, and of the county, township or ward in which he or she resides such time as may be provided by law, shall have the qualifications of an elector and be entitled to vote at all elections.

BALLOT SUBJECT NO. 24.
Article 5, Section 1
Omitting Word "White."

ARTICLE V

Section 1. Every male citizen of the United States of the age of twenty-one years, who shall have been a resident of the state one year next preceding the election, and of the county, township or ward in which he resides, such time as may be provided by law, shall have the qualifications of an elector and be entitled to vote at all elections.

Schedule.

If the amendment to Article V, Section 1, to the Constitution—Woman's Suffrage, be adopted by the electors and become a part of the constitution, then the foregoing amendment, if adopted, shall be of no effect.

BALLOT SUBJECT NO. 25.
Article 5, Section 2.
Use of Voting Machines.

ARTICLE V

Section 2. All elections shall be either by ballot or by mechanical device or by both, preserving the secrecy of the vote. Laws may be enacted to regulate the preparation of the ballot and to determine the application of such mechanical device.

BALLOT SUBJECT NO. 26.
Article 5, Section 7.
Primary Elections.

ARTICLE V

Section 7. All nominations for elective state, district, county and municipal offices, shall be made at direct primary elections or by petition as provided by law, and provision shall be made by law for a preferential vote for United States senator; but direct primaries shall not be held for the nomination of township officers or for the officers of municipalities of less than two thousand population, unless petitioned for by a majority of the electors of such township or municipality. All delegates from this state to the national conventions of political parties shall be chosen by direct vote of the electors. Each candidate for such delegate shall state his first and second choices for the presidency, which preferences shall be printed upon the primary ballot below the name of such candidate, but the name of no candidate for the presidency shall be so used without his written authority.

BALLOT SUBJECT NO. 27.
Article 6, Section 3.
Organization of Boards of Education.

ARTICLE VI

Section 3. Provision shall be made by law for the organization, administration and control of the public school system of the state supported by public funds; provided, that each school district embraced wholly or in part within any city shall have the power by referendum vote to determine for itself the number of members and the organization of the district board of education, and provision shall be made by law for the exercise of this power by such school districts.

BALLOT SUBJECT NO. 28.
Article 6, Section 4.
Creating Office of Superintendent of Public Construction.

ARTICLE VI

Section 4. A superintendent of public instruction to replace the state commissioner of common schools, shall be included as one of the officers of the executive department to be appointed by the governor for the term of four years, with the powers and duties now exercised by the State commissioner of common schools until otherwise provided by law, and with such other powers as may be provided by law.

Schedule.

If the foregoing amendment be adopted by the electors it shall take effect and become a part of the constitution on the second Monday of July, 1913.

BALLOT SUBJECT NO. 29.
Article 8, Section 1.
Extending State Bond Limit to $50,000,000 for Good Roads.

ARTICLE VIII

Section 1. The state may contract debts to supply casual deficits or failures in revenues, or to meet expenses not otherwise provided for, but the aggregate amount of such debts, direct and contingent, whether contracted by virtue of one or more acts of the general assembly, or at different periods of time, shall never exceed seven hundred and fifty thousand dollars; and the money, arising from the creation of such debts, shall be applied to the purpose for which it was obtained, or to repay the debts so contracted, and to no other purpose whatever; provided, however, that laws may be passed to contract debts and authorize issues of bonds in an amount which in the aggregate of all issues shall not exceed fifty million dollars for the purpose of constructing, rebuilding, improving and repairing a system of intercounty wagon roads throughout the state. Not to exceed ten million dollars of such bonds shall be issued in any one year, and there shall be levied and collected annually by taxation an amount sufficient to pay the interest on said bonds and to provide a sinking fund for their redemption at maturity, and laws shall be passed to provide for the maintenance of said roads. Such wagon roads shall be determined under general laws and the cost of constructing, rebuilding, improving, repairing and maintaining the same shall be paid by the state. The provisions of this section shall not be limited or controlled by Section 6, of Article XII.

BALLOT SUBJECT NO. 30.
Article 8, Section 6.
Regulating Insurance.

ARTICLE VIII.

Section 6. No laws shall be passed authorizing any county, city, town or township, by vote of its citizens, or otherwise, to become a stockholder in any joint stock company, corporation, or association whatever; or to raise money for, or to loan its credit to, or in aid of, any such company, corporation, or association: provided, that nothing in this section shall prevent the insuring of public buildings or property in mutual insurance associations or companies. Laws may be passed providing for the regulation of all rates charged or to be charged by any insurance company, corporation or association organized under the laws of this state or doing any insurance business in this state for profit.

The proposal was referred to the Committee on Arrangement and Phraseology.

BALLOT SUBJECT NO. 31.
Article 8, Section 12.
Abolishing Board of Public Works.

ARTICLE VIII.

Section 12. So long as this state shall have public works which require superintendence, a superintendent of public works shall be appointed by the governor for the term of one year, and his duties and powers shall be defined by law.

(Resolved further, That Section 13 of Article VIII is hereby repealed.)

Schedule.

Section 13 of Article VIII is hereby repealed.

(To be continued.)

THE QUIET HOUR

Religion and Politics

R. S. HOLMES IN CONTINENT

RELIGION and politics are in the same world, the representatives of the two greatest ideas in that world, and are yet as separate and divergent as if they belonged to separate worlds. "Let politics alone," says the politician to the preacher, and the preacher cannot, dare not, must not say to the politician in reply, "Let religion alone."

To the religious man who is in politics, the cult whose business it is to control the "science of being a citizen" for its own ends, says, "You are welcome in politics if you will put your religion in a corner while at the work we have to do." So religious people get into politics and, as the saying goes, "get their eyeteeth cut"—which is only saying they are taught the tricks, the deceits, the shams, the insincerities of professional politics, and usually learn these lessons through personal loss or shame. Eyeteeth are cut in politics as "the lambs are shorn" in Wall street, and it seems to be the law that the business of bulls and bears is to shear lambs, just as the business of the politician is to hoodwink and deceive the unwary man of good principle and noble purpose.

The two clamorous cries with which the ears of the church are constantly assailed are, to the preacher, "Let politics alone; you know nothing of that subject; preach the gospel;" and to the religious man who enters politics, "Leave your bibles, your principles, your scruples, your Sunday school methods at home; among us do as we do, stand always with one hand reached forth for what it can get, and with the other behind you, open, with palms up, ready to close on whatever drops in."

Against all this the time has come for protest. We write from no partisan point of view. We care not a whit which party wins. The gulf of separation once between them has become only a rill which a child can step across. The time has come for righteousness. The insolence which can stand at the doors of a state legislature and demand of legislators that they elect to the senate of the United States a man who has been named by a boss for his own purposes, should be rebuked. The shamelessness which plays fast and loose with pre-election pledges should be driven to ignominy. Religion is not a thing for dying hours. It is worthless then if it has not been the characteristic of living hours.

"What will he do?" was asked concerning a newly elected governor. "Whatever the gang tells him," was the answer. "For that he was nominated."

"What will he do?" was asked concerning another also newly elected governor. "Whatever he thinks is right," was the reply. "What he said before election he would do, he will do, or will break the legislature which is behind him."

"Let the shoemaker stick to his last." Good. Let him, while he sits on his cobbler's bench. But when he goes out into his world, be it large or small, if he be a religious man, let him then stand by his principles. The corner where a man should keep his religion is the street corner.

Let the preacher preach the gospel of Jesus Christ in his pulpit on Sunday. Then when he goes into the rough-and-tumble world, as he should, let him meet it in the rough-and-tumble way. A preacher who does not know about politics in this present hour is culpable. He has a right to belong to any party. Belonging to it, he has a right to stand for its principle, to rebuke its evil practices, to remonstrate with its unworthy members, to do all that he can to make it pure.

The members of a political party are not all scalawags—far from it. The majority of the common people are true of heart, and that majority is great enough to cleanse any party and to keep it clean, if it will carry "the science of godliness" into "the science of being a citizen."

Lost.

We do not think as much as we should of the horror of the state of the lost. That it is torment unspeakable is plainly taught in God's word. Probably no man has ever known in this life what it is to be completely cut off from God. Those who have ever had any intimation of it, or any approach to it, may well shudder over the thought of its horrors when the consciousness of this loss as final shall sweep over a soul in its fulness. Oh, that we may realize with a heart-broken, almost unendurable keenness the fact that this awful doom is in store for every man, woman and child we know who has not found escape and salvation in Christ. Then God may use us more abundantly to lead souls out of death into life.—Sunday School Times.

The World Needs Religion.

The church is to supply a need of the world, and according to the wisdom of the world which has been experimenting with a great many things, the chief need is religion. In saying this it should not be necessary to affirm that we are not indifferent to the great agencies being employed for human betterment, but for the persistently and perniciously obtuse, we say again, that we plead only for a just balance in our estimate of religion as a vital force in the world. Regulation and restraint from without are good, but the Kingdom of Heaven will come only when there is a regulation and restraint from within which cannot be circumvented.—Universalist Leader.

Sympathy Counts.

We often do more good by our sympathy than by our labors, and render to the world a more lasting service by absence of jealousy and recognition of merit than we could ever render by the straining efforts of personal ambition.—Farrar.

Two Hostile Empires.

Everywhere the human soul stands between a hemisphere of light and another of darkness; on the confines of two everlasting hostile empires, Necessity and Freewill.—Carlyle.

He Agreed.

"What you need," said the wordy medic in his ponderous way, "is an enlargement of your daily round, a wider circle of activity." "Mebby that's right," said the patient. "I'm a bareback rider in a one-ring circus."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

The Worst of It.

"My wife always fears her hair when I come home late." "Which makes you feel mean, eh?" "Yes; and which also makes it necessary for me to buy more hair."—Boston Record.

Her Yearning.

Little Marjorie Louise leaned on her grandmamma's knee and gazed into space with a particularly soulful expression. "Oh, grandmother," she burst out, suddenly, "I just long to grow up and be a big lady and have corns!"—Harper's Bazar.

Numbered.

"I suppose it's true," sighed Miss Wellon, "that the hairs of one's head are numbered. I know that this is the eighty-fourth one I've lost since the middle of April."

Cities Fighting Toll of Noise.

Science is planning a noiseless world, in which the clamor of the present day will be reduced to a minimum. Prof. Blake, of the Harvard Medical school, declares that nervous prostration, brain exhaustion and deafness are the price that cities pay for noise.

Spoons.

Young Man (dining with his ownest own)—"Oh, waiter, may we have a spoon here?" Waiter—"No objection, sir, if you don't mind the other guests."

Harsh and Stupid View.

Of course, if you don't agree with a man in religion it is easy to believe him to be a hypocrite, unless you happen to disagree with him in politics. Then you know he's a crook.—Houston Chronicle.

Too Much Is Enough.

"Don't you want to join in and reform public affairs?" "Law, no!" replied the quiet woman. "I've had trouble enough reforming one man, let alone a whole political party."

Wherein Duty Is Irksome.

Duty is only irksome to him who craves some selfish enjoyment or benefit for himself. Let the man who is chafing under the irksomeness of his duty look to himself, and he will find that his weariness proceeds, not from the duty itself, but from his selfish desire to escape it.—James Allen.

Extremely Difficult.

It is not often a man succeeds in living up to the impression his wife tries to make.—Chicago Record-Herald.

SYNOPSIS.

Dan Blair, the 22-year-old son of the fifty-million-dollar copper king of Blairtown, Mont., is a guest at the English home of Lady Galorey. Dan's father had been courteous to Lord Galorey during his visit to the United States and the courtesy is now being returned to the young man. The youth has an ideal girl in his mind. He meets Lily, Duchess of Breakwater, a beautiful widow, who is attracted by his immense fortune and takes a liking to her. When Dan was a boy, a girl sang a solo at a church, and he had never forgotten her. The Galoreys, Lily and Dan attend a London theater where one Letty Lane is the star. Dan recognizes her as the girl from his town, and going behind the scenes introduces himself and she remembers him. He learns that Prince Poniotowsky is suitor and escort to Letty. Lord Galorey and a friend named Ruggles determine to protect the westerner from Lily and other fortune hunters. Young Blair goes to see Lily; he can talk of nothing but Letty and this angers the Duchess. The westerner finds Letty ill from hard work, but she recovers and Ruggles and Dan invite her to supper. She asks Dan to build a home for disappointed theatrical people. Dan visits Lily, for the time forgetting Letty, and later announces his engagement to the duchess. Letty refuses to sing for an entertainment given by Lily. Galorey tells Dan that all Lily cares for is his money, and it is disclosed that he and the duchess have been mutually in love for years. Letty sings at an aristocratic function, Dan escorting her home. Dan confronts Galorey and Lily together. Later he informs Letty that his engagement with Lily is broken.

CHAPTER XXII.—Continued.

The boy laughed aloud, the laugh of happy youth. He held her so close that she might as well have tried to loose herself from an iron image of the Spanish Inquisition as from his young arms. This slender, delicious willowy thing he held was Letty Lane, the adored star London went mad over; the triumph of it! It flashed through him as his pulses beat and his heart was high with the conquest, but it was to the woman only that he whispered:

"I've said a lot of stuff and I am likely to say a lot more, but I want you to say something to me. Don't you love me?"

The word on his lips to him was as strange, as wonderful, as though it had been made for him.

"I guess I must love you, Dan. I guess I must have for a long time."

"God, I'm so glad! How long?"

"Why, ever since you used to come to the soda fountain and ask for chocolate. You don't know how sweet you were when you were a little boy."

She put her slender hand against his hot cheek. "And you are nothing but a little boy now! I think I must be crazy!"

As he protested, as she listened intently to what his emotion taught him to say to her, she whispered close to his ear:

"What will you take, little boy?"

And he answered: "I'll take you—you!"

At a slight sound in the next room Letty Lane started as though the interruption really brought her to her senses, put her hand to her disheveled hair, and before she could prevent it, Dan had called Mrs. Higgins to "come in," and the woman, in response, came into the sitting-room. The boy went to her and took her hands eagerly, and said:

"It's all right, all right, Mrs. Higgins. Just think of it! She belongs to me!"

"Oh, don't be a perfect lunatic, Dan," the actress exclaimed, half laughing, half crying, "and don't listen to him, Higgins. He's just crazy."

But the old woman's eyes went bright at the boy's face and tone. "I never was so glad of anything in my life."

"As of what?" asked her mistress sharply, and the tone was so cold and so suddenly altered that Dan felt a chill of despair.

"Why, at what Mr. Blair says, Miss."

"Then," said her mistress, "you ought to be ashamed of yourself. He's only twenty-two; he doesn't know anything about life. You must be crazy. He's as mad as a March hare and he ought to be in school."

Then, to their consternation, she burst into a passion of weeping; threw herself on Higgins' breast and begged her to send Dan away—to send everybody away—and to let her die in peace.

In utter despair the boy obeyed the dresser's motion to go, and his transport was changed into anxiety and dread. He hung about downstairs in the Savoy for the rest of the afternoon, finally sending up to Higgins for news in sheer desperation, and the page fetched Blair a note in Letty's own hand. His eyes blurred so as he opened the sheet, he could hardly read the scrawl which said:

"It was perfectly sweet of you to wait down there. I'm all right—just tired out! Better get on a boat and go to Greenland's Icy Mountains and cool off. But if you don't, come in tomorrow and have lunch with me. LETTY."

CHAPTER XXIII.

In the Sunset Glow.

He lived through a week of bliss and of torture. One minute she promised to marry him, give up the stage, go around the world on a yacht, whose luxuries, Dan planned, should rival any boat ever built, or they would motor across Asia and see, one by one, the various coral strands and the golden sands of the east. He could not find terms to express how he would spend upon her this fortune of his, which, for the first time, began to have value in his eye. Money had been lavished on her, still she seemed dazzled. Then she would push it all away from her in disgust—tell him she was sick of everything—that she didn't want any new jewels or any new clothes, and that she never wanted to see the stage again or any place again; that there was nowhere she wanted to go, nothing she wanted to see—that he must get some fresh girl to whom he could show life, not one whom he must try to make forget it. Then, again, she would say that she loved the stage and her art—wouldn't give it up for any one in the world—that it was fatal to marry an actress—that it was mad for him to think of marrying her, anyway—that she didn't want to marry any one and be tied down—that she wanted to be her own mistress and free.

He found her a creature of a thousand whims and caprices, quick to cry, quick to laugh, divine in everything she did. He never knew what she would want him to do next, or how her mood would change, and after one of their happiest hours, when she had been like a girl with him, she would burst into tears, beg him to leave the room, telling him that she was tired—tired—tired, and wanted to go to sleep and never to wake up again. Between them was the figure of Poniotowsky, though neither spoke of him. She appeared to have forgotten him. Dan would rather have cut out his tongue than to speak his name, and yet he was there in the mind of each. During the fortnight Dan spent thousands of pounds on her, bought her jewels which she alternately raved over or disdained, and he said her name a thousand times that night in his dreams. Jealousies—and, when he would let himself think, they were not one, they were many—faded away. The duties that a life with her would involve did not disturb him. For many a long year, come what might, he what would, he would recall the glowing of that sunset reflected under the inn windows, the singing of the thrushes and the flash of the white dress and the fine little white shoes which he had held in the palm of his ardent hand, which he had kissed, as he told her with all his heart that she should rest her tired feet forever.

There grew in him that day a reverence for her, determined as he was to bring into her life by his wealth and devotion everything of good. His loving plans for her forming in his brain somewhat chaotic and very much fevered, brought him nearer than he had ever been before to the picture of his mother. His father it wasn't easy for Dan to think of in connection with the actress. He didn't dare to dwell on the subject, but he had never known his mother, and that pale ideal he could create as he would. In thinking of her he saw only tenderness for Letty Lane—only love; and in his room the night after the row on the river, the night after the long idyl in the sunset room of the inn, something like a prayer came to his young lips, and, when its short form was finished, a smile brought it to an end as he remembered the line in Letty Lane's own opera:

"She will teach you how to pray in an Eastern form of prayer."

The ring he had given the duchess of Breakwater had been her own choice, a ruby. He had asked her, through Galorey, to keep it and to wear it later, when she could think of him kindly, as an ornament of some kind or another. The duchess had not refused. The ring he bought for Letty Lane, although there was no engagement announced between them but half looked at. He had made his arrangements with Galorey peacefully, coolly and between the two men it had been understood that the world should think the engagement broken by the duchess, and Dan's attention to Letty Lane, already the subject of much comment, already conspicuous, was enough to justify any woman in taking offense.

No One Would Have Dreamed That She Ever Had Known Another Love.

One day, the pearl of warm May days, when England even in springtime touches summer, Blair was so happy as to persuade his sweetheart to go with him for a little row on the river. The young fellow waited for her in the boat he had secured, and she, motoring out with Higgins, had appeared, running down to the edge of the water like a girl, gay as a child let out from school, in a simple frock, in a marvelously fetching hat, white gloves, white parasol, white shoes, and as Dan helped her into the boat, pushed it out, pushed away with her on the crest of the sun flecked waters, spring was in his heart, and he found the moment almost too great to bear.

The actress had been a girl with him all day, giving herself to his moods, doing what he liked without demur, talking of their mutual past, telling him one amusing story after another, proving herself an ideal companion, fresh, varied, reposeful; and no one to have seen Letty Lane with the boy on that afternoon would have dreamed that she ever had known another love. They had moored their boat down near Maidenhead and he had helped her up the bank to the little inn, where tea had been made for them, and served to him by her own beautiful white hands. He had called for strawberries, and, like a shepherd in a pastoral, had fed them to her, and as they lingered the sunset came creeping steadily in through the windows where they sat.

As they neither called for their account nor to have the tea things taken away, after a while the woman stealthily opened the door and, unknown, looked at one of the prettiest pictures ever within her walls. Letty Lane sat on the window seat, her golden head, her white form against the glow, and the boy by her side had his arms around her, and her head was on his breast. They were both young. They might have been white birds blown in there, nesting in the humble inn, and the woman of the house, who had not heard the waters of the Thames flow softly for nothing, judged them gently and sighed with pleasure as she shut the door.

Here at Maidenhead Dan had left his boat and the motor took them back. Nothing spoiled his bliss that was the largest, purest diamond he could with decency ask her to put on her hand! It sparkled like a great drop of clear water from some fountain on a magic continent. In another shop strands of pink coral, set through with diamonds, caught his fancy and he bought her yards of them, ropes of them, smiling to think how his boyhood's dreams were come true.

He never saw Ruggles except at meals, hardly spoke to the poor man at all, and the boy's absorbed face, his state of mind, made the older man feel like death. He repeated to himself that he was too late—too late, and usually wound up his reflections by ejaculating:

"Gosh almighty, I'm glad I haven't got a son!"

WAS THE FRIEND OF A KING

Merchant Told of the Strong Attachment of King Edward for John Bright.

An interesting account is given for the first time of an incident which began the friendship that existed between John Bright and King Edward VII. The story was told by Mr. Bright in the hearing of Mr. Connah, a merchant in Manchester. Mr. Bright, it seems, had at a meeting in St. James' hall rebuked those people who were criticising Queen Victoria for her rare appearances at public functions after the passing away of the prince consort. On the following morning the private secretary of King Edward (then Prince of Wales) called upon Mr. Bright with a special request from the prince to call upon him at Marlborough house. Mr. Bright at first demurred but yielding to the pleading of the messenger, he went, and he was received in the most friendly manner by the prince and introduced to the family circle. The prince took Mr. Bright aside and as a son thanked him for his kindly words on behalf of the mourning queen, and asked to be granted the privilege of being counted among the tribune's friends. "Whatever may be my personal opinion of kings and princes," Bright said, concluding his narration of the incident, "the man before me was a son making an appeal on behalf of his mother, and I could not resist it. We shook hands, and have been close friends ever since."—Christian Science Monitor.

Two Greatest Civilizers.

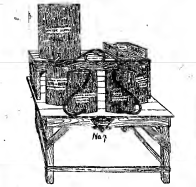
Increased means and increased leisure are the two civilizers of man.—Disraeli.

BORDEAUX MIXTURE IS MOST POPULAR FUNGICIDE NOW USED

First Essential Is to Secure a Sufficient Supply of Lime and Sulphate of Copper to Last Through Second Spraying After Blooms Fall—Harmless to Fruit and Foliage.



Equipment for mixing Bordeauxmixture. No. 1, elevated water supply tank, No. 2, stock solution tank for sulphate of copper. No. 5, stock solution tank for lime. No. 6, elevated slaking box for lime. No. 3, tank for diluting sulphate of copper solution. No. 4, tank for diluting lime solution. Nos. 3 and 4 each have attached a hose through which the diluted solutions are run together through the strainer into the spray tank. No. 7, a strainer.

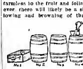
(By W. H. CHANDLER, Missouri College of Agriculture.)

Bordeaux mixture is a fungicide made by combining a solution of sulphate of copper (blue vitriol) with a solution of lime. This resulting substance is not soluble in water but very slowly goes to the bottom of the liquid. It is a flocculent, pasty substance that sticks exceedingly well to the leaves.

The strength of Bordeaux mixture is generally given in terms of 50 gallons. Thus standard Bordeaux mixture 4-4-50 means that there are four pounds of sulphate of copper, four pounds of lime and 50 gallons of water. Bordeaux mixture 2-3-50 means that there are two pounds of sulphate of copper, three pounds of lime in 50 gallons of water.

Bordeaux mixture is one of the oldest and best known and most widely used fungicides. It will control more fungous diseases than any other known fungicides used for spraying. Thus it is effective on Apple Scab, Bitter Rot, Apple Blotch and practically all other fungous diseases which may be controlled by summer spraying. It sticks to the foliage better than any known fungicide and is probably slightly less expensive than any other fungicide of equal effectiveness.

While Bordeaux mixture is a very effective spray it is usually fairly harmless to the fruit and foliage. However, there will likely be a slight yellowing and browning of the leaves, due to the injury from the use of Bordeaux mixture. Another more serious injury is observed on the fruit. The apple may be sometimes coated with russet, caused by injury to the skin from Bordeaux mixture. The two sprayings at which this injury is to be observed are those just after the bloom when the apple is still coated with a tender, hairy covering. At this time the skin is very easily injured, and if Bordeaux mixture is used it is used at a strength not greater than two pounds of blue stone and three pounds of lime to fifty gallons of water.



Equipment for mixing Bordeaux mixture in a small way. No. 1, lime slaking box. No. 2, stock solution barrel for lime. No. 3, stock solution barrel for sulphate of copper. No. 4, barrel spray pump. No. 5, bucket for dipping and measuring stock solutions. Two such buckets would be highly desirable.

The first essential for making Bordeaux mixture is a supply of lime and sulphate of copper from which it is made. Before the spraying season begins, it is certainly desirable that enough sulphate of copper be purchased to last through the second spraying after the blooms fall. If the orchard is in a section where there has been great danger from frost, it may be desirable not to order more than this amount and to place a second order where it is plain there is going to be a crop. However the first three sprayings may be given before we know whether or not there will be a crop and it is so important that they be given at the right time that sufficient sulphate of copper to give them should always be ordered during the winter.

The sulphate of copper and lime must be brought together in very dilute solutions for the best Bordeaux mixture. The sulphate of copper requires a considerable time to dissolve in water, and considerable time is required for slacking lime. For these reasons it is best to have a mixing plant for making Bordeaux mixture. This mixing plant should consist of a stock solution tank in which enough sulphate of copper may be dissolved to last through one spraying, if not through several. The sulphate of copper is usually dissolved in water at the rate of one pound to the gallon, so it is only necessary to dip from the stock solution tank one gallon in order to get one pound of sulphate of copper. Then there is necessary for the lime an elevated slaking box in which the lime may be slaked and drawn down into a stock solution tank. In this case also one pound of lime should be dissolved in a gallon of water. The lime of course should be weighed before the slaking. Two dilution tanks, such as is shown in the figure, are also necessary, one for sulphate of copper and the other for lime. In these tanks the substances are diluted before they are run together into a mixing tank or the spray tank. All of these tanks should be on an elevated platform so that the liquid can be run out of them into the spray tank below. Where water pressure is not available an elevated water tank is needed to supply water to these stock solution tanks, or in some cases a good pump run by a gasoline engine may take the place of the elevated water tank.

The process of making Bordeaux mixture with a plant like this would be as follows: First in making the sulphate of copper stock solution, assuming that the tank holds 100 gallons, the tank should be filled nearly full of water, then 100 pounds of the sulphate of copper should be weighed out and placed in a gunny sack or some other porous material and suspended just in the top of the liquid. If it is poured into the bottom of the barrel it will be some months before it would all be dissolved unless hot water is used. Then assuming that the lime stock solution barrel holds 100 gallons, we should weigh out 100 pounds of good stone lime, slake it in the elevated slaking box and draw it out, usually through a strainer, into the lime stock solution tank and fill the tank up to 100 gallons.

Now suppose it is desired to make 200 gallons of Bordeaux mixture at a strength of 4-4-50. After stirring, 16 gallons of the sulphate of copper stock solution should be dipped into the sulphate of copper dilution tank and this tank filled up to 100 gallons. Then the lime stock solution barrel should be stirred thoroughly and 16 gallons dipped from it into the lime dilution tank. Then the contents of these dilution tanks should be run through a strainer into a separate mixing tank or directly into the spray tank.

If it is desired to make only 100 gallons of the mixture, one-half of these quantities should be used in all cases, or if it is desired to make only 50 gallons of the mixture one-fourth of these quantities should be used.

CARE FOR CHICKS IN HOT WEATHER

Hens and Little Chicks Must be Allowed to Have Plenty of Water and Shade During Warm Months.

During the spring and summer months constant care must be taken to see that the hens and young chickens have plenty of water and shade, says a writer in the Iowa Homestead. The hens cannot manufacture eggs without a liberal supply of water, as a large per cent of eggs is composed of water. The growing flock, too, will not develop properly if half famished from thirst. This may mean no winter eggs from the pullets.

If one would take the best care of the flock he should give it fresh water in the morning and just after noon. The water that stands in a fountain very long becomes stale and unhealthy. Water should always be pure and the vessels clean. It is wise to keep the water vessels in the shade of the house or trees all the day.

This leads to the important question of shade. No fowls will do well in warm weather without sufficient shade. I have made it a special point to notice my hens in the summer and I have discovered that along toward the middle of the day they will seek shelter from the sun's hot rays. They will either retire to the shade of a tree or the shelter of the poultry house. They prefer to get away from the house if they can find suitable shade elsewhere. If no trees are growing in the yard and there are no bushes or shrubbery of any kind where the flock may find shade it will be well to construct an artificial shade by setting posts into the ground, one at each corner of a parallelogram plot. Nail crosspieces to these and place boards on them. Here the hens may find retreat from the hot sun.

PHILADELPHIA PAPER CLAIMS BRYAN HAS CHANGED

But Conceded That His Chances For the Nomination at Baltimore are Very Bright

We are so near the time of the republican convention that it is not worth while to forecast the result further than to say that it looks likely that Mr. Taft will be nominated by a small majority, against a disgruntled minority. While we do not anticipate a bolt and a new party, the chances of Mr. Taft's re-election—or of Mr. Roosevelt, if nominated—do not look very bright It is hardly likely that either Gov. Wilson or Speaker Clark can receive a two-thirds vote in the convention That would send the delegates after a "dark horse," and he is in the convention as a delegate, and in every one's mind, Mr Bryan. If Mr Taft is the republican nominee, as seems likely, a progressive will be sought by the democrats, and with Gov. Wilson and Speaker Clark eliminated, whom can the choice fall upon but Mr. Bryan, who has equally favored both of them? Harmon and Underwood will both be impossible. He has not intimated that he will be a candidate, but he does not need to. There he is; behold him for yourselves. He has acted wisely during these late months, has gotten over his "cross of gold" folly, and has kept himself in the eye of his party, while refusing to be a candidate His method may prove more successful than that of Mr. Roosevelt

Bryan may have changed but we do not believe that even today he would "Press down upon the brow of labor a crown of thorns, or crucify mankind on a cross of gold," and the reason why Bryan is so popular today is that there are more people than ever before who agree with him, who are willing to give labor a fair show, and who believe there are other things worth striving for besides the possession of wealth

SUCCESS

PAINESVILLE TOWNSHIP SCHOOL COMMENCEMENT PRAISED.

Large Class Finish the Grade Work and are Ready to Enter the High School.

There is no question but what Superintendent J. R. Williams, R. W. Henderson, instructor in music, Levi Mason, president of the board, C. W. Haddon, P. R. Churchward, and Martin Kohenkie, members of the board, all have real cause to be proud of the work done in the schools of Painesville township for the year just closed. These men are willing, however to share their honors with the township teachers. It is being demonstrated year after year that there can be most excellent schools in the rural sections of our county. Painesville, Willoughby, Madison, Mentor, and other townships of this county are putting forward every effort to place the township schools in a position where no one can criticize the work done. Instead of criticism, there are words of praise from everybody interested.

The large attendance at the Painesville township commencement, last Thursday afternoon shows the interest taken in the schools. The program carried out was a reflection of the good work done during the year. The music surpassed the best efforts of former like occasions

Following is a list of pupils who received diplomas and who can now enter high school without any further examination

Doris R. Armitage, Olive B Benedict, Anna T. Carrig, Mary J. Carrig, W Alfred Cole, D Barret Cole, Violet M Flood, Mary M. Gardner, Edith G Goodmanson, William Gordon, Harlod W. Wass, Charles O. Haddon, Bryan Horton, John C Hyland, Elizabeth C Lackzo, Alma M Morsch, Olive B Rust, Wayland T. Rust, Charlotte E Snell, Edith L. Wagar, Edyth Irene Trall

ELECTION

Of Directors of Lake County Humane Society Saturday, June 22.

The election of directors of the Lake County Humane Society held at the court house last Saturday resulted as follows:

Painesville, W. M Werner; Concord, E. P. Brown; Leroy, O. L. Ostrander; Madison, J. H. Kellogg; Mentor, E. F. Ingersoll; Willoughby, W. R. Logan; Perry, E. M. Orcutt; Kirtland, Fred Frasbley.

The meeting of the directors to choose an agent was postponed until next Saturday.

Agent Tharp submitted to the society his annual report and it shows a great amount of work done by the present agent:

| | |
|---|---|
| Complaints received | 92 |
| Investigations made by visits | 72 |
| Cases prosecuted | 5 |
| Animals found unfit for work and ordered out of service | 14 |
| Animals orded killed | 9 |

| Cases of prosecution for cruelty to children and wife | 3 |
| Cases of prosecution for cruelty to animals | 2 |

ALBERT JOHNSON

The Untimely Death of One of Painesville's Leading Business Men Calls Forth Many Expressions of Sorrow.

It was impossible for many of the people to believe that Mr. Johnson, known to everyone here in Painesville, had passed away. To only a very few had there been so much as an hour's notice of the approach of the Grim Reaper.

Albert Johnson, one of the City's prominent merchants, says the Telegraph-Republican, passed away at an early hour Monday morning, after an illness of less than one hour. The death of Mr. Johnson was caused by heart failure and occurred on the 55th anniversary of his birth.

Mr. Johnson was born at Wickliffe on June 24, 1857, but moved to this city when a young man and entered the employ of W. F. Smith. From that time to the present time, Mr. Johnson has been identified with the business interests of Painesville and had always taken an active interest in the affairs of the city.

In 1909 Mr. Johnson bought Mr. Smith's interest in the W. F. Smith Company and since that time the store has been under his ownership.

The deceased is survived by his wife, Mrs. Elizabeth Keener Johnson, and two brothers, William, of Painesville, and Joseph, of Cleveland.

The funeral services were held from the home on St. Clair street on Wednesday afternoon at 3 o'clock, Rev. Freeborn of the Episcopal church officiated.

A sprained ankle may as a rule be cured in from three to four days by applying Chamberlain's Liniment and observing the directions with each bottle. For sale by all dealers.

ABOUT PEOPLE AND PLACES.

There are not enough Taft men in Painesville to make one good burroh.

—o—

Mrs. L. K. Stevens of Trumbull, was calling on relatives Monday of this week

—o—

In the death of Miss Frances Kerr last Thursday, Painesville loses another of her good citizens

—o—

G. W. Kneale of Madison, is having lots of fun with his new automobile, when it isn't having fun with him

—o—

The little daughter of Mr. and Mrs. H. C. [illegible] of Jefferson street, who had her leg broken, is doing nicely.

—o—

Don't forget that there is going to be something doing every minute of the time at Fairport on the Fourth.

—o—

Another week and people can return to local issues, such as the state and county tickets and the constitutional amendments

—o—

C. R Sechtol, a former resident of this city, has recently graduated from the Cleveland Law School and has been admitted to the Cleveland bar

—o—

One hundred and thirty-seven graduates under the Boxwell law in Lake county received their diplomas at the High school building in Painesville last Friday

—o—

Ride from Willoughby to Madison and keep your eyes open and you will see that the nursery business is growing. It is a good thing for Lake county Long may it prosper

—o—

Munson, Geauga county, people decided to build a new school building at Fowlers Mills, near the center of the township This new building will permit centralizing the schools

—o—

How Lake county fairs will be regarded in the future and the success attending the efforts will hinge in a very great measure upon the success of the fair this year Let everyone boost the fair this year

—o—

It is not true that Mr Elmer Murphy has cut loose from his former associates since he has been out and talked politics with Mr Al. Bryan Mr Murphy still speaks to his old friends

—o—

About 23 of a chorus of Fairport Finnish people under the direction of Miss Aino Williamson, went to Ashtabula on Saturday afternoon to sing at a concert on Saturday evening. They returned Sunday.

—o—

Delegate Schmidt of Cleveland, will not be able to attend the Baltimore convention and R. A Tuttle of Lake county, his alternate, will be a regular delegate. Roy Tuttle is going to do some good work for Bryan at Baltimore, and Lake county's voice will be heard.

—o—

We note with pride and satisfaction that William Gordon, Democratic candidate for congress from this (the 20th) district, is at Baltimore fighting day and night for the people's cause. He does not know how to compromise on a question of principle any more than does Mr. Bryan.

—o—

The gathering of the Knights and Ladies of the Maccabees here last Friday was a most pleasant affair. The day was ideal and every one seemed to enjoy themselves. The parade in the evening was attended with just the amount of bright color and display to attract general attention.

—o—

Mrs. F. H Rogers was painfully injured Sunday evening while alighting from a carriage in front of her home. As Mrs Rogers stepped from the vehicle, the horse stepped forward, throwing her to the pavement. She was carried into her home, where it was found her ankle was badly dislocated.

—o—

The fight between Puzzle-wit and Honey-fugler is over, and Puzzle-wit won, or so they say. That may be right, but there are hundreds of other thinking citizens who honestly believe that the strenuous ex-president came out of the Chicago fight with the one great victory of his whole eventful life. They say he won in the New York state convention two years ago—there was where he lost—he lost his honest convictions.

—o—

The guests from out of town to attend the Mayhew-Mighton wedding last Saturday afternoon were: Misses Louisa and Florence Stebbins, of Youngstown; Mr. and Mrs. L. D. Carver, Mentor; Mrs. Amanda Olmstead, Bristol; Mr. and Mrs. G. A. Mighton, and children, of Warrensville; Miss Marion Mighton, of Cherokee, Ia.; Mrs. Dr. Rowland, South Euclid; Mrs. E. Heckman and son, Canandaigua, N. Y.; Mr. and Mrs. Otis, Mentor, and Miss Marion Hodges of Mentor.

BAD ACCIDENT

Mr. Roy A. Tuttle Meets With Mishap At An Important Period in Life.

It must from the very nature of the case, take a good deal to stop a determined and joyful young man from meeting his appointment to get married. Such was the case with Roy A. Tuttle On his way to Wattsburg, Pa., to his own marriage ceremony, the automobile in which he was riding went over an embankment and Mr Tuttle was quite severely cut and bruised. The accident did not prevent Mr. Tuttle from keeping his appointment. He was married on time. Monday he left for Baltimore, where as a delegate to the Democratic convention he is sure to line up each and every time with the Bryan element in the convention.

JAMES KILCAWLEY

Was Drowned At Richmond Tuesday Night or Wednesday Morning.

The body of James Kilcawley was found in the Grand River Wednesday morning, near the Grow fish-house The circumstances attending the drowning are a mystery It seems that no one was present when the deceased met death, consequently the exact time of the misfortune is not known

Mr Kilcawley was well and favorably known to both Painesville and Richmond He was 41 years of age and not married He is survived by his parents, Mr and Mrs Thomas Kilcawley, two brothers, one of whom, T. J., is well known in Painesville. Five sisters also survive, all of whom are well known, and four of whom are prominent teachers.

Barney-Tuttle.

Painesville people will be pleased to learn of the marriage of Roy Tuttle, one of our most successful young business men.

He was married to Helen Barney, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. Elfred R. Barney, prominent people of Wattsburg, Pa., on Saturday, June 22. The marriage ceremony was performed in the presence of relatives and close personal friends of the contracting parties. Mrs. Tuttle is a stranger to Painesville people, but is a lady of accomplishments and refined tastes, and she will be welcomed to our city by all of Mr. Tuttle's many friends.

Mr. Tuttle was born in Concord, graduated from the Painesville High school at the age of sixteen years, and graduated from Adelbert college before he was twenty-one. He was principal of the High school here six years, and left that line of work to engage in more active business affairs. He is a successful insurance man and has other business interests of importance He has made Painesville his home for about fifteen years and has won the confidence and respect of all who know him. The stockholders and employes of the Educational Supply Co., have the best of reasons for extending congratulations and best wishes to Mr. Tuttle and his bride

Mr. and Mrs Tuttle will be at home at the Tuttle residence on East Erie street, this city, after August 1st

Harrington-Barrowe.

The marriage of Miss Helen Phillipa Harrington to Don Wyman Barrowe was performed Thursday afternoon at the home of the bride, by Rev. E Lee Howard, in the presence of the immediate families. Master Harrington MacDonald presented the ring in a large pink peony The house was tastefully decorated in pink and white, the bride's colors. Among those present from out of town were: Senator and Mrs. MacDonald and children and Miss Ethel MacDonald of Ashtabula; Mrs. Thomas Morley Warren of Detroit, Mich., and Mrs. Mrs. George T. Sinks of Cleveland.—Telegraph-Republican.

Delightful Surprise.

A delightful surprise was tendered Ray Forbes Tuesday evening at the home of Miss Marguerite Thoirs in honor of his twenty-second birthday anniversary. Music was a feature of the evening and dainty refreshments also helped to make the evening enjoyable. Mr. Forbes was presented with a pair of cuff links and a gold coat chain.

Woman Suffrage Column

By Miss Lucy Buell

One of the arguments against woman suffrage most frequently heard is that women themselves do not want the ballot, basing this statement on the fact that the great mass of women do not come out and work for it. It is upon this fact that anti-suffragists are constantly dwelling

A leading anti-suffragist was asked at the time of the great suffrage parade why the antis did not come out and show their strength. In answer she pointed to the hundreds of women on the curb and said: "Here they are."

So, therefore, every woman who is not an active suffrage worker is an anti-suffragist. Let us test this principle

If I go and watch the Prohibitionists parade, I am a saloon advocate But I am not

If I stand on the sidewalk and watch the Socialists go by, I am opposed to every principle of social justice that the Socialists teach. But I am not

If I don't take an active interest in the Peace Movement, I am an adherent of war. False again.

I refuse to be counted against every reform in which I don't take an active part I believe in many reforms but I have only time to work for one, and so I choose to work for suffrage, because I believe that the vote will enable women to secure all other reforms with less time and effort

Mrs. Florence Kelley is one of the foremost women engaged in social work in this country She was for some years factory inspector in Illinois and was instrumental in having passed certain laws for the protection of working children As secretary of the National Consumers' League she has helped to improve conditions in factories and retail stores and to bring about the Saturday half holiday now so generally observed in cities

In regard to woman suffrage, Mrs Kelley says

"As a social worker I am interested in getting votes for women from two points of view, that of justice and that of expediency Everyone agrees that it is expedient to deal justly, but after that is conceded many people question whether in this particular case of granting votes to women the universal statement does really apply and whether it might not after all be better to defer this particular act of justice

It is precisely on the grounds of expediency that I wish mothers, teachers and all other women in the community, even the humblest, to vote for legislators, judges, and officials who make, interpret, and enforce the laws dealing with pure food, weights and measures, drainage, building laws, schools, truancy, delinquency, courts, jails, prisoners and probation; working hours, wage rates and the safety of workers in stores, factories, mines, and in short all those places and occupations in which the safety of life, limb, health, morals and enjoyment of breadwinners, men, women, and children, may be endangered. These are things in which women are concerned and about which they are capable [illegible] capable of forming intelligent opinions. It is a grave loss to the state that they are not allowed to vote."

The Great Soul of Bryan

[Laura J Quimby]

I have just returned from the auditorium where I have heard for the manyeth time the matchless oratory of Bryan. It was the occasion of the Decoration Day exercises of the Grand Army. On such occasions the political quacks and self-seeking fakers usually indulge in such silly, insufferable rot that it is nauseating to any thoughtful person. It is their occasion for the utterance of things against common sense and a true sense of decency that is truly an insult to the intelligence and devotion of the old soldier, whose only aim in that conflict was to preserve the union of the states. But not so with Bryan.

Mr. Bryan used as his text the general tenor of Lincoln's great Gettysburg speech, that oratorical classic which in all the history of oratory stands without an equal, considering its length. While honoring the old soldiers for their courage and devotion to the ideals of the nation fought for so many a [illegible] Bryan called for a recognition of the "unfinished task" to which the great Lincoln referred. It was the task of preserving to the people for all time a government of the people, by the people and for the people. How magnificent was his eloquence when he enumerated the great achievements of the democracy of the world in bringing back to the people control of their governments, and how he thought the martyred Lincoln's soul would glow, were he alive today, when he would read the triumph of his ideals throughout the world.

Bryan's oratory is the despair of all who attempt to report it Sentence, full of meat and framed in such exquisite English, follows sentence in such rapid succession that it is hard to preserve the perfect gem distinct from the entire mass, for they are all gems And then to preserve the personal charm and expression would be impossible even were the entire speech reported word for word. It is that charm that has captivated the thousands upon thousands throughout the world It is that charm which can go down in history only by report, and the generations yet to be will know it only as their imaginations are quick to conceive the magic power of the eloquence uttered by this oratorical monarch, whose conscience is ample, and whose great soul has thrilled with love for his fellow men

A Discordant Note

[Contributed]

How glad to welcome spring again
And hear the birds' sweet song
Her warmth and sunshine putting forth
The flowers pent up so long
How soon she makes us all forget
The winter's icy spell,
And naught there seems to mar us now
But Taft's and Teddy's yell

We see the young and happy throng
A romping o'er the green,
While father, mother look with pride
Upon the happy scene.
And one would think there could be naught
To mar their joyful spell
Until there floats upon the breeze
The Taft and Teddy yell.

Yes all the preachers in the land
Take springtime for their text
And when the golden harvest comes
Why it will be the next.
And as they preach and hymns sing
Of things they love so well,
There seems but one discordant note
It's Taft's and Teddy's yell.

The farmer tramps with steady tread
Behind the team and plow
The seasons come to bring him grain,
And he is happy now.
With joy and pride he seeks each day
The task he loves so well,
And there seems naught to vex his soul,
But Taft's and Teddy's yell

The voice of suffragets is heard
With earnestness they plead
The cause of suffrage which they claim
Is just the thing they need.
But yet they've been shocked and made ashamed
And e'en should blush to tell
The cause which everybody knows
Is Taft's and Teddy's yell.

But whether Taft or Teddy yells,
The grass will grow the same,
The flowers will bloom, the birds will sing,
For Spring has come again
And ere the harvest time is past,
They may be yelling yet.
But when November comes—well, say
They'll both shut up, you bet.

STOOD FOR LAW AND ORDER

Work of the Vigilantes Was Necessary, Though Writer Admits There Were Exceptions.

When not engaged in robbery, this criminal population followed other disreputable pursuits. Gambling and licentiousness were the most conspicuous features of every mining camp, and both were but species of robbery. Dance houses sprung up as if by enchantment, and everyone who sought an evening's recreation in them was in some way relieved of the money he took there. An issue involving the destruction of the good or bad element actually existed at the time that the people entered upon the work of punishment.

I offer these remarks, not in vindication of all of the acts of the vigilantes, but of so many of them as were necessary to establish the safety and protection of the people. The reader will find among the later acts of some of the individuals claiming to have exercised the authority of the vigilantes some executions of which he cannot approve. For these persons I can offer no apology. Many of these were worse men than those they executed. Some were hasty and inconsiderate, and while firm in the belief they were doing right, actually committed grievous offenses. Unhappily for the vigilantes, the acts of these men have been recalled to justify an opinion abroad prejudicial to the vigilante organization. Nothing could be more unjust. The early vigilantes were the best and most intelligent men in the mining regions. They said and felt that, in the absence of all law they must become a "law unto themselves" or submit to the bloody code of the banditti by which they were surrounded and which was increasing in numbers more rapidly than themselves.—Nathaniel Pitt Langford, "Vigilante Days and Ways."

Oldest Highway in Maine.

The oldest public highway in Maine is that beautiful tree-lined stretch which the passenger on the Western division of the Boston & Maine sees between him and the sea as he passes Wells Beach.

In 1653 the Massachusetts commissioners receiving the submission of Wells, "Cape Porpus" and Saco ordered the inhabitants of those towns to make the highway "from house to house" and clear and fit it for foot and cart. This was known as the "road by the sea."

The commissioners themselves could not go beyond Wells for the lack of a road. Kittery and York were also ordered to make a "straight and convenient way along East for man and horse."

All land travel then was afoot or on horseback, with an occasional rude oxcart. There was no such thing as a horse and wagon in all Maine nor was there a stage line there till 130 years later.

Suspicious.

George Ade Davis relieved one of the ticket salesmen in the box office of the Studebaker and was approached by a buyer of bush league appearance.

Mr. Davis went to great lengths to satisfy his customer, being keen in the impression that he was being viewed through the grating as a slick cuss full of smooth city talk.

He strongly advised the selection of two seats in the second row of the balcony, in the center and with one seat on the aisle. He laid so much emphasis on this point of location that the man outside the window said abruptly:

"What's the matter? Ain't you got no ushers up there?"—Chicago Post.

True Optimist.

Prof. Horatio Parker, the composer of the beautiful opera of "Mona," which won the Metropolitan opera's $10,000 prize, said at a recent dinner in his honor:

"I am optimistic as to the future of American music—as optimistic almost as Flyte.

"Flyte, you know, bought a ticket in a raffle for an aeroplane. The raffle wasn't to come off for a month, but the very next day a carpenter was seen wending his way with a bag of tools toward Flyte's house.

"'What job do you want done, sir?' the carpenter asked on his arrival.

"'I want you,' Flyte replied, 'to build me a nice hangar in the back yard.'"

Professor's Theory.

"Do girls do as well in college as boys?"

"As well or better."

"Indeed? And how do you account for that?"

"Well, they have more opportunities to study, for one thing. A girl doesn't have to put in a lot of time coloring a meerschaum pipe."

Measuring Achievement.

"Do you think that operatic celebrity is maintaining her artistic prestige?"

"Well," replied the close observer, "she sings as well as ever. But I don't think her articles on how to be beautiful are up to her former standard."

Wouldn't Do.

"I thought you were going to break your engagement to Jack."

"I can't for a while. I have just learned that he bought the ring on easy payments."

The Wordy "No."

The Magistrate—You are charged with using bad language to an officer—have you anything to say?

The Prisoner—Divvel a word, yer honor; I've said a divvel av a lot too much already.—The Sketch.

Dazzled.

"Is Jimson in straitened circumstances?"

"I presume so. He said a fellow flashed a hundred-dollar bill before his eyes the other day and it looked to him like the aurora borealis."

PARKERS DELIVERS KEYNOTE ADDRESS

DENOUNCES RECENT STRUGGLE AT CHICAGO FOR CONTROL OF REPUBLICAN PARTY.

URGES REDUCTION OF TARIFF

Temporary Chairman of Democratic Convention Also Raps Third Term Idea—Speaks About Campaign Contributions.

Baltimore, Md.—In assuming temporary charge of the Democratic national convention here, Judge Alton B. Parker denounced the recent struggle at Chicago for control of the Republican party, declaring the fight between the president of the United States and his predecessor was disgraceful. He paid marked attention to tariff revision in his keynote speech and held that the protective principle advocated by the Republicans has been responsible for the increase in the cost of living and the multiplication of trusts. Judge Parker's speech in part follows:

Praises Candidates.

We meet while the hills yet echo the wild cries of liar, thief and traitor and furious wails of fraud, bribery, treachery and corruption, and our ears are weary with the din of the articulate shrieking and passionate vilification of the most shameful brawl of our political history. Our candidates, however, are without exception men of such lofty ideals that we meet immune from the distemper which seized the Chicago convention, and privileged to discharge a solemn public duty calmly, deliberately and seriously. The cause of government by the people the world over has been materially checked by the disgraceful brawl which terminated in the bedlam of Chicago. Every good citizen has been put to shame by the brutality and the abuse which characterized this wrangle between a president and his ex-president. [illegible] friendship, party loyalty, [illegible] and common decency were forgotten in the tussle.

[illegible] assault upon the unwritten prohibition against a third term [illegible] in the [illegible] for the Republican nomination warns us of the vital necessity of incorporating in our constitution a safeguard against repeated terms. In the very beginning of our constitution making it was urged by delegates [illegible] that safety required a constitutional limitation of the period of years one man might hold the office of president. History warned them of the coming of a man whose insatiable lust of power would be as consuming as Caesar's, towering high above his love of country. The man who split his party at Chicago once recognized the third term tradition and acknowledged its applicability to his situation. On the eve of his triumph in 1904 he said: "The wise custom which limits the president to two terms regards the substance and not the form, and under no circumstances will I be a candidate for or accept another nomination." Wrong in this year of grace, he was right in that. Peradventure he was honest with his soul and he may have confessed [illegible] that even a president may be tempted to resort to sordid devices and shameless importunities to gain his ambition. If so he was in mental condition to realize to the full the danger to the republic involved in setting aside a custom constituting the only bulwark against the assaults of men whose ambition shakes their patriotism and whose selfish desire for personal victory and power throttles those moral scruples with which they may once have been endowed.

Attacks Roosevelt.

Would the man who threw his hat in the ring and sought to slug his opponent over the ropes in his fight for a third term rest satisfied with its achievement? Clearly his lust of power would have brooked no such limitation. A third term would but have whetted his desire for more, and as the terms slipped away each renewal would discover greater injury to our constitution, to the form of government established under it and to every legal curb on his imperious will. This is the man who menaced us with an increase of federal power by usurpation of states rights and without authority of constitutional amendment; the man who took the Isthmus of Panama and let congress debate about it afterward; the man who, having enough money to send the fleet on its famous cruise to the Pacific, sent it without sanction of congress, leaving it to appropriate the money for the return when congress deemed that necessary. This is the man who advocated federal incorporation for the increase of power at Washington and the lightening of legal burdens on the corporations; the man who authorized the absorption of the Tennessee Coal & Iron Co. by the steel trust; the man who by many such drastic acts and by unnumbered words has sought to batter down our statutory and constitutional safeguards. He who runs may read the danger that threatens the country by such a man. Do we envy Mexico her 30 years of wedded life or the war the divorce from Diaz precipitated, the end of which no man may prophesy? The way to prevent a life series of terms is to prevent the present attempt to capture the office for a third term. One of our opportunities in this campaign is to lead the fight against a third term. That opportunity should appeal to every drop of patriotic blood flowing in our veins. In this great country which boasts a wealth of $125,000,000,000 as against [illegible] for Great Britain and Ireland, [illegible] for France and [illegible] for Germany, all are conscious that too large a part of our wealth has been obtained by a small percentage of our population and that the cost of living rises faster than the average income.

Assaults Tariff.

The principal cause of all this is to be found in the tariff statutes and in the combinations restraining trade and competition created for the purpose of wringing from the public every dollar which the tariff makes possible. The average of duties under the tariff of [illegible] was [illegible] per cent. Now the average is [illegible] per cent. In 1816 the average was [illegible] per cent. In 1846 it was reduced to 25 per cent, which worked so well that a reduction to an average of 20 per cent followed in 1857. Probably it would never again have increased but for the war. But the census of 1860 disclosed a higher increase of the national wealth during the preceding ten years than for any other decade before or since, and the percentage of increase in capital invested in manufacturing was also greater than during any similar period in our history. Protected interests benefited by two increases during the war, the first to an average of 37½ per cent, the second to [illegible] per cent. That high average, then excused only by the exigencies of the war, is exceeded now, as the average is nearly 50 per cent. The Republican party has thus geared the machinery of government to enrich a few at the expense of many. That increase of 30 per cent in the average has taken thousands of millions from the general public and devoted it to the creation of swollen fortunes. An awakening of the people led the Republican national convention in 1908 by its platform to promise a revision. In vain did the people demand of congress the fulfillment of the Republican pledge, for the masters of that party, the protected interests, insisted upon the pound of flesh nominated in the bond. And it was [illegible] congress passed and the president signed the Payne-Aldrich bill.

Special Bills Passed.

Under sagacious and intrepid Democratic leadership special bills have been passed having for their purpose a revision of the tariff downward, ultimately to a revenue basis. The bills are known as free list, wool, cotton, metals, chemicals, sugar and excise. The president's use of the veto power has postponed, however, the hour when the people shall enter into the enjoyment of the relief proposed until after the inauguration of the next president. The temporary failure, owing to the action of the electorate of Canada, of the effort to effectuate reciprocity with that country is regrettable. The sober second thought of the people of Canada probably will induce reconsideration of the action of last year. The temporary reduction of the duty on cement by the Canadian opponents of reciprocity is significant of the results that in due course may be expected. For the ills that flow from the tariff increase from an average of 20 per cent to 50, the Republican party is responsible. For the continuance of that tax against the efforts of a Democratic congress a Republican president is to be blamed. It is evident, therefore, that relief can come only through the election of a Democratic president and congress. Mr. Taft said in a speech in 1908 that during the preceding ten years nine-tenths of the combinations to restrain trade had come into existence. During nearly all that time the Republican party was in control of every northern, eastern and western state, as well as of the federal government. The reason for the encouraging inactivity of the Republican officials is plain. The tariff beneficiaries were and for many years had been contributors to campaign funds of the party, which in turn protected the special privileges enjoyed by the donors. But competition prevented in some instances the collection from the people of the full sum stipulated in the tariff. To secure it all tempted the cupidity and stimulated the ingenuity of the beneficiaries. But one way could be found—combination to control the price up to the point where the statute let in foreign competition. The same party which shut out foreign competition was found willing to permit the formation of combinations which effectually banished home competition.

Takes Up Harvester Trust.

We are indebted to the president for the evidence that his predecessor, having first enjoyed an interview with George W. Perkins, restrained his attorney general from bringing suit against the Harvester combination. For the steel corporation he went further, for he wrote his attorney general in advance of its absorption of the Tennessee Coal & Iron Co. that he had decided "to interpose no objection." He advocated the passage of a statute permitting voluntary submission of any engaged in interstate commerce to federal authority with the advantage to them of immunity from prosecution because of contracts made if stamped in advance with the executive approval as reasonable. Whatever of excuse may be offered, the ugly truth is that the Republican machine has received the moneys of the corporate and individual beneficiaries of the tariff and combinations and in return has compelled congress to keep high the tariff rates and their attorney generals to [illegible] violations of law.

PARKER DEFEATS BRYAN

JUDGE IS ELECTED TEMPORARY CHAIRMAN AT BALTIMORE.

Commoner Becomes Candidate When Kern Withdraws Name and Nominates Nebraska Man.

Convention Hall, Baltimore, Md.—Judge Alton B. Parker of New York, conservative, defeated William Jennings Bryan of Nebraska, progressive, for temporary chairman of the Democratic national convention on the first test of strength of the two elements by a margin of 731.

The total vote was: Parker, 579; Bryan, 506; O'Gorman, 4.

The Bryan vote practically represented the Woodrow Wilson strength in the convention, though he secured the Burke votes in North Dakota and more than half of the Foss delegates in Massachusetts.

The Parker forces comprised a combination of the Clark, Underwood and Harmon elements, which, united under the conservative banner, have the control of the convention.

Bryan became a candidate for the temporary chairmanship at the last minute, when Senator Kern of Indiana, chosen to make the race against Parker, withdrew and nominated the Commoner as the man best fitted to lead the fight of the progressives.

Bryan accepted.

Prior to this the Nebraskan in a speech delivered in his matchless style had denounced Judge Parker as the agent of the Wall street interests and pleaded that the progressives be given the reins at the outset of the convention and that Senator Kern be named to wield the gavel.

Headless Body Is Found.

Providence, R. I.—The headless body of a young woman which had been in the water at least two months was found floating in the Blackstone river near James Grove, a pleasure resort. The body had been weighed down by a 50 pound stone attached to a stout rope which was wound around the body from the chest to the knees. The woman's hands were crossed and bound to her back.

The head evidently had been severed by some one who knew nothing of surgery.

Retail Butchers in Despair.

New York City.—With more than 200 retail butchers driven out of business during the past month, the meat situation has reached a crisis in New York. Genuine alarm has been expressed by officers of the various associations of meat dealers. Unable to pay the high wholesale prices and their stock stagnating on their hands because of meat strikes, the retailers are giving up in despair. It is said that the big packers are depriving all but those of the strongest backing of credit.

Dam Owners Again Accused.

Coatesville, Pa.—Warrants have just been issued by Justice Olmstead of Coudersport for the arrest of George G. Bayless, Stanley Bayless, F. N. Hamlin of the Bayless Pulp & Paper Co. on the charge of maintaining a public nuisance in permitting the discharge of poisonous sewage that has killed all fish in the Susquehanna river immediately below the mill and made the locality dangerous to health. J. H. Kennicutt furnished the information upon which the charge was based.

China Rejects Large Loan.

Washington, D. C.—China has rejected the $300,000,000 loan from the banking group of the six powers, probably because of the stipulation for foreign supervision of its expenditures.

The proposal for foreign administration of the salt monopoly also has been declined.

These advices have just been received by the state department.

NEW THIRD PARTY PLANS FOR WORK

MASS CONVENTION WILL PROBABLY BE HELD AT CHICAGO SOME TIME IN AUGUST.

RED BANDANNA IS EMBLEM

Gov. Johnson of California Announces Managing Committee—A Broad Non-Partisan Foundation Is Laid Down.

Chicago.—Plans for the mass convention to be held probably at Chicago during first week in August, was made at a succession of conferences between Col. Roosevelt and the committee of seven authorized at a meeting of delegates in the Florentine room in the Congress hotel.

In the call for mass convention it is to be made plain, say members of the committee, that the movement is to be broadly non-partisan. The doors are to be swung wide open and support invited from men like La Follette, Bryan and Wilson. The nomination, the Roosevelt leaders say, is free to any candidate favored by the progressive sentiment of the nation, and Col. Roosevelt again reiterated his statement that he will gladly step aside and support another candidate if the convention decides that the fight can be made more strongly under other leadership.

* * *

Chicago.—With Col. Theodore Roosevelt nominated by the Roosevelt delegates to be the presidential candidate of a new "progressive" third party June 22, a second gathering of the Roosevelt cohorts was held June 23, when the red bandana handkerchief, emblem of the common people, was made the battle flag of the independent movement.

Col. Roosevelt himself carried a red bandanna at the meeting, and Alice Longworth, his daughter, appeared with her hat draped in one of the bright colored handkerchiefs.

Managing Committee.

Gov. Johnson of California announced the personnel of the committee on organization which, for the present, at least, will be the managing committee of the new party.

Instead of seven members, as was the announced intention, Gov. Johnson named 18, all of whom, it was announced, had been notified and had accepted their appointment. The committee is headed by Gov. Johnson who will be acting chairman. The other members are:

Senator Moses E. Clapp, Minnesota.
Senator Joseph M. Dixon, Montana.
Senator Miles Poindexter, Washington.
Gov. C. A. Aldrich, Nebraska.
Gov. R. S. Vessey, South Dakota.
E. A. Van Valkenburg, editor Philadelphia North American.
Col. W. R. Nelson, owner and publisher Kansas City Star.
Former Congressman Richmond Pearson, North Carolina.
William R. Prendergast, New York.
James R. Garfield, Ohio.
William Allen White, Kansas.
Gifford Pinchot, California.
Judge Ben B. Lindsey, Colorado.
Mathew Hale, Massachusetts.
George L. Record, New Jersey.
Charles H. Thompson, Vermont.
Col. E. C. Carrington, Maryland.

The committee, Gov. Johnson declared, was merely temporary and would be added to from time to time.

Declarations by Gov. Deneen and Gov. Hadley, the latter one of the colonel's original seven, that each would stick to the regular party, led the Roosevelt progressive party organizers to determine to put independent nominees for governor in the field in these two states.

In California, Kansas, West Virginia and other states it was believed the Roosevelt strength was such that the regular ticket could be thrown under the new party column.

At the conference the former president impressed upon his followers the point that the new party was not to be the vehicle of "sore heads," but represents a genuine progressive movement.

The ex-president assured his backers that the new party has a distinct fight of its own. He alluded to the situation in the Democratic party and impressed upon his leaders that the progressive party may expect a strong alignment from the Democratic ranks, if the Baltimore convention fails to respond to the progressive call of the country.

While he is not banking on what may come out of Baltimore, he is alert to the keen advantage he would derive if the Democrats fail to put up a progressive to run against the reactionary Taft.

Roosevelt is promised the support of many influential progressive Democrats—so it was said at his rooms—if the Baltimore convention picks a retrogressive for its candidate.

Judge B. B. Lindsey of Denver announced that he would study the situation there and sound Democratic leaders regarding the new party.

Garfield Talks.

"We are going to work immediately," said James R. Garfield, "to organize in the various states. Throughout the country there will be candidates for electors for Roosevelt and the other candidate who is to run with him to be decided upon at the national convention.

"In some states we will simply endorse the regular Republican candidates for electors and if elected they will vote for Roosevelt, as there is nothing in the constitution to forbid such action. In other states it will be necessary to choose independent candidates for electors. In some states that will be difficult and in every case it will depend upon the provisions of the state law. The prospects for financing the campaign are good. There is no question that we will have funds enough to carry us through.

"In a number of states in which Col. Roosevelt won the presidential primaries our organization is already complete. The list includes states such as Pennsylvania, Maryland, Minnesota, Nebraska, Kansas, California, Oregon, Washington and Illinois. In these states we shall have little to do as the regular Republican candidates for electors, if elected, will vote for Roosevelt. In the other states we shall form our organizations from the bottom up."

COLONEL ROOSEVELT

Negress Murders Woman.

Vienna, Ga.—Enraged by a rebuke from her mistress, Anna Barknell, a negress, seized a carving knife and killed Mrs. R. E. Jordan, one of the most beautiful women in south Georgia. The tragedy occurred in the kitchen of the handsome home of the Jordans near here. Mrs. Jordan was expecting guests and had given instruction about the dinner. When she found that none of her orders had been carried out she rather sharply rebuked the negress, who seized a carving knife.

Thought of Kin Saves Life.

Fayetteville, N. C.—Spivey Bullard so deeply mourned the death of his wife that he resolved to kill himself.

Late at night he clambered over the bridge across the Cape Fear river and prepared to drop to death in the chasm 85 feet below.

But while he hung in space a thought of the two little children he would have left made him want to live, so he screamed for help. His rescuers snatched him back when he was just ready to drop from exhaustion.

40 DEAD, 25 MISSING

TOLL OF ACCIDENT WHEN EXCURSION DOCK COLLAPSES.

Brave Rivermen Risk Their Lives to Reach Bodies Floating in Debris in Niagara River.

Buffalo, N. Y.—Forty known dead and 25 missing is the toll of the accident that plunged 200 people into the turbulent waters of the Niagara river when the excursion dock at Eagle park collapsed. Except for 20 bodies that have been identified the victims are all in the river being carried toward the falls. Many will never be recovered, and the exact death list never will be complete.

Federal inspectors already have begun an investigation to place the responsibility for the accident. Scores who remained all night at the park were joined in the morning by hundreds more. All day long the river has been filled with craft of every sort, rivermen risking their lives to reach bodies floating in timbers of the wrecked dock or daring to pilot their flimsy little boats into the treacherous eddies in the hope that some of the bodies might have lodged there.

Rivermen believe now that no more bodies will be recovered. The scene of the accident is only four miles from the brink of Niagara American falls, and the ten miles an hour current, it is believed, has already carried a score or more bodies over the cataract.

Labor Leaders Are Sentenced.

Washington, D. C.—Samuel Gompers, president of the American Federation of Labor, was sentenced to one year in jail for contempt of court by Justice Daniel Thew Wright of the District of Columbia, in supreme court.

Frank A. Morrison, secretary of the federation, was sentenced to six months in jail for the same offense. Both gave notice of appeal and were released on $5,000 bail.

John Mitchell, found guilty of contempt in the proceedings growing out of the publication in the American Federationist of the name of the Bucks Stove & Range Co. of St. Louis in an "unfair list," was not present in court and his sentence was deferred.

Holds Up Three Mail Clerks.

Longview, Tex.—A lone bandit made his way into the mail car of a train on the International & Great Northern railroad.

The robber covered three clerks with his guns, carefully selected one mail pouch out of a pile of several, kicked it from the car, then alighted while the train continued at full speed.

The hold-up occurred near Port Bolivar.

What was in the pouch is not known, apparently, except to the robber.

Pioneer Engineer Is Dead.

Sandusky, O.—John Schmidt, 77 years old, pioneer locomotive engineer, is dead at his home here. He is survived by a widow, three sons and four daughters. Among the latter is Mrs. Elizabeth Lehrer, wife of Mayor George T. Lehrer of Sandusky.

Schmidt drove one of the first engines over the old Mad River railroad between this city and Dayton, and the first engine over the strap iron railroad from Carey to Findlay. He handled the first of the modern type locomotives, "Little Erie."

ENCAMPMENT CLOSES

BIG PARADE AT SPRINGFIELD IS LED BY THE GOVERNOR.

Rev. Fletcher Wharton, of Troy, Is Elected Chaplain for the Ensuing Year.

Springfield, O.—Old soldiers, bent in form and with wavering steps, bravely marched in the big parade, which was one of the big features of the closing of the Grand Army Encampment. But few of the veterans dropped out. Between 1,500 and 2,000 old soldiers, sons of veterans and women's organizations were in the procession. Women from Toledo and Lima appeared in handsome uniforms.

Gov. Judson Harmon and staff, with the officers of the Grand Army, headed the parade.

After the parade Gov. Harmon, on behalf of the Knights of Columbus, presented to St. Raphael High School a handsome silk flag, which was accepted by Father D. A. Buckley. Several thousand veterans witnessed the presentation.

The first contest at the encampment came when Rev. Fletcher Wharton, of Columbus, was elected chaplain over Rev. D. S. Ferguson, of Troy.

The question of selecting a place for the next meeting was left to a committee. Hamilton and Lorain were discussed, but no action was taken. The newly elected officers were installed after the parade by Commander-in-Chief H. M. Trimble, of Princeton, Ill.

Charles W. Blodgett, of Cincinnati, was elected department commander. Other officers elected were Herman E. Titus, of Springfield, senior vice commander, and Jacob D. Stambaugh, of Sandusky, junior vice commander.

OFFICERS ARE ELECTED

By Ohio Foresters at Forty-first Annual Convention at Hamilton.

Hamilton, O.—The forty-first annual convention of the Grand Lodge, I. O. O. F., of Ohio, was held in this city. The following officers were selected for the ensuing year:

Grand Marshall—George M. Rewoll, of Cleveland.
Grand Conductor—Lewis M. Vanden, of Cincinnati.
Grand Guardian—Wm. H. Foster.
Grand Herald—J. M. Harding.
Grand Messenger—George H. Davies, of Ironton.
Grand Chaplain—Rev. Carl F. O. Schmidt, of Cincinnati.
Executive Committee—John L. Sullivan, of East Liverpool, John M. Broderick, of Marysville, J. R. Miles, of Piqua, Frank H. Foster, of Toledo, Frank G. Marsh, of Akron.
Auditing Committee—V. Dauterman, of Columbus, J. E. Peck, of Columbus, M. L. Walker, of Columbus.

MOTHER SEES SON FALL.

Washington, C. H., Ohio.—Augustus M. Hoskins, 15 years old, was electrocuted after trying to catch a young bird which was perched on a telephone wire near his home.

The boy had climbed the telephone pole and taken hold of the telephone wire, but while in the act of reaching out to grasp the bird caught hold of a live electric light wire, which was charged with 2,200 volts.

He hung suspended in mid-air for a few minutes, and his cry attracted his mother. When she arrived at the scene her son was just falling from the wires.

FRANKLIN COUNTY WINS.

Columbus, O.—The supreme court yesterday sustained the refusal of County Auditor Sayre to pay the $8,000 claim of the Manufacturers' Appraisal Co. of Cleveland for work performed under its contract with the quadrennial board of assessors for the appraisement of Columbus realty.

The decision of the Franklin county circuit court, that actual view and separate appraisement of property for taxation could not be dispensed with, and that the board could not engage a corporation located elsewhere to assist in its work, was affirmed.

The Manufacturers' Appraisal Co. made use of the Somers unit system.

ATTORNEY GENERAL DECIDES.

Columbus, O.—In a ruling rendered T. P. Kearns, chief inspector of workshops and factories, Atty. Gen. Hogan holds that age and schooling certificates can not be required as a condition of employment of a child between 14 and 16 years of age, during the vacation period.

By another decision of the attorney general, corporations are required to answer half a dozen or more personal questions to which they objected when representatives of the Ohio tax commission called.

DAYTON SELLS BONDS.

Dayton, O.—Bonds totaling $192,500 were sold for premiums aggregating $1,059.75. The waterworks issue of $120,000 was bought by Weil, Roth & Co., of Cincinnati, at a premium of $720. Hayden, Miller & Co., of Cleveland, secured the $45,000 street repair bonds at a premium of $221; waterworks extension, Dayton View and Riverdale stand pipe bonds at a premium of $112.50, and the $2,500 asphalt repair plant bonds at a premium of $6.25.

GRADUATION AT WILBERFORCE.

Xenia.—Seventy-six students were graduated from Wilberforce university. President Alston Ellis, of Ohio university, delivered the commencement address.

FACTORY DESTROYED BY FIRE.

Sidney.—A handle factory owned by C. R. Benjamin burned. The loss is estimated at $4,000.

Master of the Ohio State Grange and Prominent Agriculturist.

FRIEND PAPER MILLS

Agrees to Proposition for Refinancing and Operating at West Carrollton.

Dayton, O.—Based upon the proposition submitted by Hayden, Miller & Co., of Cleveland, bankers, and Rhodes & Co., of New York, the claims of the creditors against the Friend Paper Co., of West Carrollton, have been adjusted and assurance is given that the big mill will continue in operation.

J. Howard Friend, the president of the company and chief creditor, agreed to accept the proposition made Tuesday. This provides for a settlement upon a twenty-five per cent basis, to be paid partly in stock and partly in cash.

The plan contemplates ample provision for the financing of the plant and in consequence, the proper steps will be at once instituted looking to the transfer of the property to the new company, which will consist of creditors, bondholders and others responsible for bringing about the consummation of the agreement.

JACKSON VOTES DRY

Jackson, O.—In the second local option election under the Rose law Jackson county went dry by 529 votes. Apparently but little interest was being taken in the campaign until the last day or two, when the interest in the question intensified, and a comparatively heavy vote was polled.

The drys have had meetings every night for two weeks here and throughout the county, and Rev. Pearly A. Baker addressed a large meeting in front of the court house here.

For the wets C. Homer Durand, of Cincinnati, and C. A. Windle have talked.

Mr. Durand and Rev. L. Tressler, a former Presbyterian minister here, held a joint debate, at which there were probably 1,000 voters present, and much enthusiasm on each side was manifested.

Wellston voted wet by 117, and Jackson City wet by 140. The county voted 1,683 dry three years ago.

DESPONDENT OVER ILL HEALTH.

Dayton, O.—Anna Herr, aged 26 years, the daughter of C. A. Herr, a well-known dentist and preacher of Osborne, Ohio, a small village ten miles east of Dayton, committed suicide by drowning in Mad River.

She had been afflicted with nervous trouble for some time, and it is believed her self-destruction was the result of temporary mental aberration.

Dr. Herr, the girl's father, is associated as pastor with the Mennonite church; his daughter having recently identified herself with his congregation.

JUDGE GARD NOMINATED.

Dayton, O.—Judge Warren Gard, of Hamilton, was nominated by the congressional committee of the Third Ohio district as the Democratic candidate for congress to succeed James M. Cox, who asked that his name be withdrawn from the ticket as a candidate for membership in the next congress, having been nominated as the candidate for governor of Ohio by the Toledo convention on June 4.

DROWNED WHEN FISHING.

Zanesville, O.—Frank Comer, a young Dresden man, was drowned in the Muskingum river, at that place, while fishing. His body has not been recovered.

POMEROY VOTES FOR SCHOOL.

Pomeroy, O.—Pomeroy voted a $40,000 bond issue for a new high school by 103 majority.

ELECTS STATE OFFICERS.

Springfield, O.—Mrs. Dora L. Brush, of Cleveland, was chosen department president, and Mrs. Margaret C. Elton, matron of the Sailors' and Soldiers' Orphan home at Xenia, was elected senior department vice president of the Woman's Relief Corps of Ohio. Mrs. Elizabeth M. Ninffer in a few well chosen words, presented to Miss Kate G. Rayner, a delegate's badge which had been in her possession more than 25 years, bearing the date 1887. It was worn at the former convention.

MEDAL OF HONOR MEN.

Springfield, O.—A resolution was adopted by the Medal of Honor Legion, asking the legislature of Ohio to grant pensions of $10 a month to the veterans who have been awarded medals of honor by congress. The resolution calls attention to the appropriation of $20,000 for monuments for soldiers, and suggests that money spent upon soldiers while living will do them more good than that spent upon monuments after their death. There are 133 medal of honor men in Ohio.

TAFT AGAIN CHOSEN TO LEAD HIS PARTY

PRESENT OCCUPANT OF WHITE HOUSE IS NOMINATED ON THE FIRST BALLOT AT CHICAGO.

SHERMAN IS NAMED FOR VICE

Closing Scenes of Convention Are Marked by Counter Demonstrations for the President and the Rough Rider.

Chicago, Ill.—William Howard Taft was nominated for the presidency at 9:33 o'clock at night on the first ballot by a margin of 21 votes, after one of the most turbulent conventions in the history of the Republican party.

The vote stood: Taft, 561; Roosevelt, 107; La Follette, 41; Cummins, 17; Hughes, 2; absent, 6; present, but not voting, 344.

Roosevelt's name was not placed in nomination and the majority of his followers refused to vote when the roll was called. Those who did vote for him, despite his announced wishes, declared that they did so because they believed their instructions were absolute.

James S. Sherman was nominated for the vice presidency also on the first ballot. Deneen and Hadley both refused to listen to the Taft proposition to put them in the race. Borah was the only other candidate placed in nomination.

The vote on the vice presidency stood: Sherman, 597; Borah, 21; Merriam, 20; Hadley, 14; Beveridge, 2; Gillette, 1; absent, 71; present but not voting, 352.

Vote Despite Instructions.

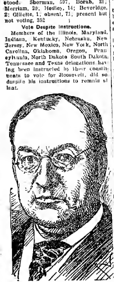
Members of the Illinois, Maryland, Indiana, Kentucky, Nebraska, New Jersey, New Mexico, New York, North Carolina, Oklahoma, Oregon, Pennsylvania, North Dakota, South Dakota, Tennessee and Texas delegations having been instructed by their constituents to vote for Roosevelt, did so despite his instructions to remain silent.



JAMES S. SHERMAN.

Chairman Root caused a storm of indignation by ruling that where a delegate failed to vote that his alternate should be called upon to do so. Some of the Roosevelt men protested bitterly, but he refused to recede from his position. No difference in the result was caused, most of the alternates refusing to vote.

The split in the convention occasioned no surprise. It was but a fulfillment of predictions that had been made during the past several days. The closing scenes of the convention were marked by counter demonstrations for President Taft and Col. Roosevelt.

The convention adjourned sine die at 10:30 o'clock.

The first test vote after the announcement of the Roosevelt valedictory came on the adoption of the party platform. The affirmative vote was 666. Roosevelt delegates present and not voting numbered 343. There were 53 noes, 36 of them from the La Follette states of Wisconsin and North Dakota.

Taft was placed in nomination at 5:53 by Warren G. Harding.

Iowa and New York were called in turn; no answer. The name of Cummins did not come from Iowa, nor that of Roosevelt from New York.

Houser of Wisconsin, before vote was announced, said in behalf of Senator La Follette that the latter asked him to say that whether nominated or not he would not support any platform not progressive, or substantially like that presented by Wisconsin.

Harding's insistence that "the people do rule" was followed by cries of "Where?" His first mention of Taft's name brought the Taft men to their feet and a noisy demonstration followed.

Demonstration Started.

The Roosevelt men sat silent, and under the Taft cheers was an undertone of booing, a noise not able to locate.

The Roosevelt men tried to start "We Want Teddy." Rhode Island answered with "We've Got Taft." Neither made any impression on the deafening roar. After the demonstration had been going ten minutes Chairman Root began pounding with the gavel. It did no good.

The demonstration had been going [illegible] banner bearing Taft's picture was brought in and a parade started. Behind the banner fell in New York, Mississippi, Texas, the Taft men in Indiana, Nevada, Colorado, New Hampshire, Kentucky, Montana, Arkansas, Missouri, Georgia, until it seemed as if every Taft delegate was marching.

Mrs. Gardner of Philadelphia was brought on the platform and given the Taft banner, which she waved before the crowd. She was mistaken for Mrs. John A. Logan.

Root and Harding both tried to stop the noise. After 15 minutes it began to diminish.

After 18 minutes order was restored, and Harding resumed his speech.

Harding concluded at 6:54 p. m. with the name of Taft.

Another demonstration started, but the chair stopped it and introduced former Postmaster General Wanamaker of Philadelphia, to second Taft's nomination.

Roosevelt Men Silent.

Through the tumult California, New Jersey, Pennsylvania and the Roosevelt states sat silent.

Suddenly from somewhere came a flaming red banner bearing a picture of the president. The demonstration was renewed. One Illinois delegate stripped off his coat to have something to wave.

Some of the delegations started marching and then began the scene that always accompanies the culminating point of a national convention.

The bearer of the Taft banner climbed up on the stage, tearing away the railing as his comrade hoisted him up. Waving the scarlet flag from side to side, he led cheers for the president.

After the Taft adherents had yelled themselves hoarse for 16 minutes they began to pay some attention to Senator Root's gavel and order was restored.

Mr. Harding then proceeded with his speech. His sallies at Col. Roosevelt were loudly cheered by the Taft people but there were groans and boos from the Roosevelt men.

Harding's assertion that Taft was the greatest progressive of his time, not only evoked a storm of cheers and boos but started a fight back among the delegates where Maine and Florida were sitting. The police suppressed it, but it was several minutes before quiet was restored.

Wanamaker Is Cheered.

A delegate made the point that most of the disturbance and interruptions were from the galleries and Senator Root appealed to them for quiet. The plea had its effect and Harding was permitted to conclude.

John Wanamaker, when he appeared on the stage to second the nomination of President Taft, was greeted with applause.

Mr. Wanamaker paid tribute to Mr. Taft as a man in whom he had the greatest confidence and as "a man who wouldn't abuse a confidence." Mr. Taft, he said, by birth and training was "tremendously fitted for the work of the office he had occupied the past four years. Mr. Taft had held to the courage of his convictions under the most difficult conditions since the days of Abraham Lincoln."

Butler Praises Taft.

Nicholas Murray Butler of New York seconded the nomination of Taft.

"I have no words of criticism for any Republican who aspires to party leadership or who has done his party service," he said. "I bear no ungenerous thought toward anyone who seeks a nomination before this convention. But I do say that we should give a renomination to the man who is now our leader and who for 16 years has been identified with the prosperity and progress of this country. We gave a renomination to the man who began this era. We should give one to the man who led us to its culmination. Who is the man who brought this country to its present prosperity?"

A shout of "Teddy, Teddy," started a demonstration that interrupted Butler for several minutes. Butler reviewed the public life of President Taft.

Michael B. Olbrich of Wisconsin then placed Senator La Follette in nomination.

When Olbrich concluded after a forty minutes' speech there was a demonstration for La Follette, carried on by the Wisconsin and North Dakota delegates on the floor and many in the galleries. Several women in the galleries displayed pictures of the senator to help along the enthusiasm which continued for upward of 10 minutes.

Robert M. Pollock of Fargo, N. D., seconded the La Follette nomination in a brief speech of tribute.

Jeer and Cheer Picture.

Olbrich's speech was interrupted by the lowering from the roof girder of a red, white and blue pennant to which was attached a picture of President Taft. A chorus of jeers, cheers, catcalls and whistles interrupted the speaker and Chairman Root had trouble in quieting the crowd to allow Olbrich to proceed.

When Massachusetts was reached in the voting a roll call was demanded. As the Roosevelt men recorded themselves present and refused to vote, Chairman Root ordered that their alternates be called in their stead. This ruling broke the storm. The Roosevelt men sprang to their feet and roared. "Massachusetts is a law-abiding state and will stand for no such stealing," shouted one of the delegates.

Root advanced to the front of the platform and said:

"If any delegate sent here by the state of Massachusetts refuses to do his duty, his alternate will be called on to do it."

TEDDY'S FRIENDS PLAN

COLONEL'S FORCES LAY PROPS FOR A THIRD PARTY.

Chicago, Ill.—In grim conclave the Roosevelt forces here laid the props for the third party that is to battle in the presidential campaign with the colonel at its head. The progressive party, to be forged of Republicans and Democrats alike, was started on its way with every indication of a formidable line-up. Out of the conference in Roosevelt's quarters at the Congress came the conviction that the progressive party is in the field to stay through the campaign.

No freakish whim controls the sternly serious men who have aligned themselves with the ex-president. Roosevelt sounded the sentiment of his leaders before he determined to break away from the Republican party. They assured him Sunday in a way that carried conviction that they would stick to the faith.

MEMORY IS HONORED

PRESIDENT THOMPSON, OF UNIVERSITY, PAYS TRIBUTE TO HENRY A. WEBER.

Services Over Ashes of Deceased Professor Are Very Simple and Impressive.

Columbus.—Standing beside an urn containing the ashes of Prof. Henry Adam Weber, Dr. W. O. Thompson, president of Ohio State university, delivered a eulogy and history of the dead educator, at memorial exercises held at the Weber home, 1342 Forsythe avenue.

The services were unique in several respects. There was no music. Flowers were about the room and a single spray of lilies of the valley in a silver vase stood beside the funeral urn. Rev. H. H. D. Sterrett, rector of St. Paul's Episcopal church, made two brief prayers. About 200 persons, the majority from the university, were present.

Dr. Thompson spoke of Professor Weber's contribution to science and his eminence in his chosen line of work. Professor Weber was recognized as one of the country's experts on sugar, and was the holder of patent rights on several processes used in its manufacture. He advanced many new ideas which subsequently were adopted by the scientific world.

Negro Population Big.

That Columbus has a larger colored population both in percentage and in actual numbers than any other city in Ohio, except Cincinnati, is shown by the tabulation of the federal census bureau, just completed. The percentage of native population of Columbus is almost as large as that of Toledo.

The federal census tabulation is of 229 cities of the United States having over 25,000 population with reference to the native or foreign parentage. These cities contain 31 per cent of the total population of the country. The whites of native parentage number 35.6 per cent and the native whites of foreign or mixed parentage 32.3 per cent. The negroes number 5.7 per cent.

Division of Duties.

Division of the duties of Dr. L. H. Schuh, retiring president of Capital university, was favored at the meeting of the board of trustees, and Profs. R. C. H. Lenski and R. V. Schmitt were appointed temporarily, pending the meeting in August at Dayton of the joint synod of the Lutheran church, which will be asked to pass upon the recommendation. Mr. Lenski, professor in theology, assumes the executive and administrative branches of the work and Mr. Schmitt, professor of Latin and Greek, takes charge of the dormitories.

Valuable Book Issued.

Undoubtedly the completest compendium of information on all phases of postoffice activities ever compiled for Columbus people, has just been issued by the United National Association of Postoffice clerks from the Columbus branch. It is a handsome booklet of 52 large pages, and contains practically everything of interest or value to the patrons of the postoffice concerning the operations of Uncle Sam's mailing system, particularly in Columbus. Ten thousand of the booklets were printed.

Invites Ohio Mayors.

Mayors of the 52 largest cities of Ohio have been asked by Gov. Harmon to secure the attendance of health officers, school officials and municipal department chiefs at the Congress of Hygiene and Demography to be held in Washington in September. President Taft has asked the governor to see that Ohio is well represented. To this end the governor has appointed a committee of physicians to name delegates.

Agricultural Education by Boat.

A. P. Sandles, secretary of the state board of agriculture, announced an educational agricultural boat, which is to be run next fall from Pittsburg to Cincinnati, by the state board of agriculture, co-operating with business men in Cincinnati. There will be lectures on board to give lessons in agriculture and the products of Southern Ohio will be exhibited with those of factories in Cincinnati.

Place Iron Markers.

E. E. Booten, engineer for the state canal land department, has placed five surveying corps in the field to make a survey of the state canal property, establish the lines between the state's property and that of adjoining land owners and mark them with iron monuments, under an appropriation of $20,000 that was made for this work by the legislature at its last session.

Feed Problem Solved.

It is expected 50 convicts will be taken from the penitentiary and put to work on roads in Carroll county. This is the result of an agreement reached between the commissioners of Carroll county, the state highway department and the state board of administration. After the plan for letting out the work of the prisoners was formulated the question arose as to their board. It was compromised by Carroll county agreeing to furnish tents and the state board of administration to provide provender.

Uniformity Is In Sight.

The final session of the meeting of the Interstate Association of Boards of Pharmacy which opened in Columbus Monday, was held at the A. F. U. temple, where the state pharmacal examinations were being conducted for assistants' certificates. One of the members expressed the opinion that the exchange of ideas at this meeting will effect a closer approach to uniformity in the examination standards of the six states represented in the association.

Tale of Country-Wide Travel.

Old Rev. L. S. Fuller, who returned to this city with a thrilling tale of madness and wild wanderings over the United States, his final discovery by a relative in the Missouri Ozarks and a sudden return to reason, desert his wife and children for the life of a preacher tramp or did he undergo some strange type of mental malady? This is the question that has been brought forth by the minister's return. Mr. Fuller admits having known his identity since the first day of March and says he stayed away from his home until the present time because he was afraid to return. A question that has been plied the minister asked the reason for his fears and for the untold portion of his story. February 2 Rev. Fuller disappeared from Evergreen, Gallia county, where he had been conducting a series of revival meetings. Search from coast to coast was made for him by relatives, who feared that he had met with foul play or in a sudden fit of anger or insanity had wandered away from home and friends. The search proved unavailing until recently when a Kansas relative, traveling through the Ozarks, searching for the missing pastor, found him in one of the more isolated places preaching to the residents of the Missouri hills.

Each Ohio County to Have Resident Expert.

Beginning July 1, each of the 88 counties in Ohio will have a resident farm expert to confer with farmers regarding the management of their farms to secure the best possible crops under an arrangement that has been made between the Ohio experimental station at Wooster and the United States department of agriculture.

A state leader will be in charge of the work and seven district supervisors will be stationed in different parts of the state to direct the work. The salary and expenses of the state leader and the district supervisors will be paid jointly by the experiment station and the government.

County agents will be supported partly by the people of the counties or some organization interested in the advance of agriculture and by the Wooster station. The resident agents will devote their entire time working with the farmers to the reorganization of their farms.

Ice Cream Men Complain.

Following a victory won by the Indiana Association of Ice Cream Manufacturers, to secure lower rates from express companies for handling their products, the fight was carried into Ohio territory. The Ohio Association of Ice Cream Manufacturers filed with the public service commission a complaint attacking present rates as unreasonable and unjust. The six big express companies doing business in Ohio are made defendants.

The petition was filed by Attorney J. J. Chester and Attorneys Thompson & McAdams, of West Lafayette, Ind. Messrs. Thompson & McAdams are fresh from the Indiana victory. Ice cream men want a rate 10 per cent lower than is made on other merchandise, with a reduced rate for carrying "empties" back to their factories.

The reduction asked is hardly sufficient to affect the price of ice cream.

Many Get Certificates.

Eighty-three applicants for teachers' common school certificates, permitting them to teach in this state for life, have qualified in the recent examinations, according to the list made public by School Commissioner Miller. Thirty-five asking life high school certificates also qualified.

Declare River Unclean.

The state board of health declared the Cuyahoga river to be polluted and cited the city officials of Cleveland to appear before the board at its next regular meeting and show cause why they should not remove the source of pollution from the Cuyahoga river.

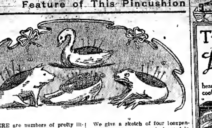
Allen Spain, whose parole from the penitentiary had been suspended for a month, pending action by Indiana officials in granting him a pardon, was released. The revocation of the parole was rescinded by Gov. Harmon.

Howard H. Gillard, official messenger to Gov. Harmon, and Professor E. B. Henderson, of Columbus, are among the nine delegates to the negro national educational congress, to meet in St. Paul July 15, who were appointed by the governor.

The supreme court will adjourn for the summer on June 28, but, as is customary, it is probable one judge will be on duty during the vacation period for emergency purposes. The fall work will be taken up the latter part of September.

Newark.—Samuel McMeans, aged 28, was found on a street here suffering from an overdose of morphine. He died a few hours later. He was recently released from a Columbus hospital.

China Ornaments the Chief Feature of This Pincushion



THERE are numbers of pretty little china ornaments that may be purchased at a very trifling cost that lend themselves for the making of pincushions. In fact, all that has to be done is to make a small velvet cushion, which can be made from remnants, to fit into its place with a few drops of liquid glue.

Certain ornaments, such as little vases and jugs, may also be decorated with prettily colored ribbons tied round and about them and finished off with smart bows.

We give a sketch of four inexpensive little china ornaments treated in the manner suggested that made very successful pincushions. No. 1 is a white china swan; No. 2, a small pink pig; No. 3, a pair of little gold china shoes joined together at the instep and fitted with a ring, by which the cushion may be lifted, and No. 4 is a dark green china frog.

The swan pincushion was made of pale blue velvet, the pig black velvet, the shoes pale green, and the frog, crimson.

Health & Beauty Hints

By Katherine Morton

A lovely hand is so great a charm—and so possible for most people—that almost all women reckon it as an available asset. Because they think they can make their hands exquisite at a moment's notice they are sometimes careless and neglectful and then they find the minute is not enough.

If the hands are not to be brown or, worse still, freckled, gloves must be endured when out of doors—for the first few weeks at least. To be bearable, gloves should be loose—a size larger than those worn in the winter. If you cannot play golf or row except with bare hands then take other precautions. But for tramps across the fields or along the high roads, for motor and bicycle trips and for riding, be firm with yourself and keep hands and arms covered. For sports or avocations that insist upon manual freedom use other precautionary methods. Rub the hands well with cream and then with powder. This will save them from tan and freckles. Many find that if they can cheat Sol out of his victory for a time he can be routed altogether.

The above means, as stated, will keep the hands white. To prevent their becoming unduly muscular with exercise, rub them nightly with olive oil, locking and unlocking, interlacing and weaving the fingers, and working the oil into the palms and backs of the hands. Oars bring callouses sometimes, so does the tennis racquet, while the various weapons demanded by the golfer make the palms very hard and firm in spots. The oil will do much here, and should be used after the hands have been washed in hot water. Some skins can stand a rubbing of calloused spots with a piece of pumice stone, but others find this process rather thickening to the skin.

It is almost impossible to sleep in gloves on hot nights. One pretty girl known to the writer, who had hands of unusual beauty, did do this whenever she deemed that her charming fingers needed extra care, and was rewarded by having hands like snowflakes when her friends exhibited very brown "paws." But few are able to make this sacrifice of comfort in the interests of beauty.

A very good thing for hands that have been exposed to sun and wind, and have suffered thereby, is to wash them in very hot water, with a mild soap, and while the pores are still open to rub them with a fine cold cream. Massage them gently until all the cream that the pores can absorb has disappeared, and then carefully remove what is left. The hands will repay you for the trouble.

If the freckles have surprised you, stealing along like a band of thieves in the night, do not be disheartened, but buy lemons! When you have done all that you can do at night in the way of washing and softening, rub the hands with the freshly cut half of a lemon dipped in salt. Do this every night, and the freckles will disappear, provided, of course, that you take reasonable precautions by day. Many find buttermilk into which a radish has been shaved a toe to freckles.

A mixture of glycerine and rose water, applied to the hands after washing, plus a dusting with corn meal, fine oatmeal or almond flour, will save them from tanning and freckling. Some form of peroxide should always be at command; for stings of mosquitoes or other insects and for removing a slight coat of tan it is equally beneficial.

Social Forms and Entertainments

Entertaining a Party.

I am graduating the end of this month and mother has promised me that I may have eight boys and eight girls to a party. Some of the boys, however, are not in the graduating class. We are all between 13 and 15 years of age. Could you tell me some way to entertain them for an evening? I would like something with a color scheme. Our colors are cadet blue and gold. MARION.

To use the color scheme I think you will have to gild a dainty basket and fill it with larkspur, which is as near cadet blue as you can come to in a flower, and have this for the table centerpiece, then for place cards cut blue satin ribbon and letter the name in gold. For games I would advise your looking over the stock in the big stores for suggestions; and I have watched young people of your age have loads of fun with charades and all sorts of old-fashioned games.

Perfectly Good Form.

An intimate friend sent me an invitation to a card party sent out on her calling cards, giving the date, place, etc. Would this be considered a formal invitation? I answered it in this way: "Mary Brown accepts with pleasure Jane Smith's invitation for Saturday, June the second." Was that the correct way to accept the invitation? A READER.

Perfectly correct in every way except the prefix. "Miss" should have been used and for an intimate friend you could have accepted less formally.

Planning a "White Shower."

I'll be very thankful if you will please help me. I want to give in honor of a friend of mine a "white shower." Please tell me how to decorate, just what would be nice to serve and some games to play. HOPE.

As far as possible use white flowers and you can serve vanilla cream or pineapple sherbet with white iced cakes. I do not think you will need any special games, as opening the parcels usually furnishes enough excitement. If the guests like cards you could have a few rubbers of "hearts." MME. MERRI.

BORDERED STUFFS IN ORDER

Summer Materials Practically All Bear This Distinguishing Mark—The Taffeta Belt.

There is fascination in the summer bordered materials of ninon, cashmere and marquisette, and every class of voile or delaine is being made up with a border of much originality and greater prettiness. All these bordered stuffs are made with an eye to the design of the gown and its style and purpose, and the result is seen in many smart and apparently exclusive costumes.

The skirt may be made in two tiers of spotted material, each tier having a wide band of some beautiful pattern, while the same pattern appears to form a corselet, the upper part and sleeves being simply of the spotted stuff. A taffeta belt gives a finishing touch. The patterned border may appear around the hem of the skirt and following the outline of the deep panier, while the sleeves also are of the flowered band, the corsage being hidden by a fichu of lace.

Bordered Materials Good.

Among the new materials the bordered foulards are very pretty and are made in a great variety. The deep border looks well when the border is used as a finish for the straight skirt, where the double tunic is preferred a narrower border is more in keeping, and for the draped skirts a still smaller stylo is suitable. There are charming effects in these borders, and they are also to be had in voiles, cotton voiles and other thin materials. Even for bathing costumes the border will be in evidence, and many startling results can be arrived at with a comparatively small outlay, as the amount of material needed is not large. Bathing costumes will be worn very very short.

Fancy Note Paper.

One of the heavy dull white writing papers reminds one of gardenias. The paper is scented with these flowers, and the very smooth surface looks exactly like the petals. The edges of the paper and edge of the envelope flap are touched with gold or silver paint.

His Choice.

"This enterprise is a promising one."

"Is it? But what I'm lookin' for is a paying proposition."

The First Consideration.

At St. Andrews some years ago an old farmer and his plowman were carting sand from the seashore. They were behind the target on the rifle-range, but hidden by a bank of sand from a party of volunteers, who were then on foot, at practice. A stray bullet struck the plowman on the leg, and he immediately dropped, exclaiming, "I'm shot!"

Without more ado the farmer scrambled up the bank and, waving his hand to the volunteers, shouted:

"Hey, lads, stop that, will ye? You've shot a man, and it micht hae been the horse!"—London Tit-Bits.

That Was Different.

A stern father (who had repeatedly told a young man who was paying his addresses to his daughter not to visit the house again without his permission, which he never intended to give, was surprised when late one evening ring at the doorbell late one evening to see the young man waiting on the step.

"Sir," said he in anger, "didn't I tell you not to call again, eh, sir?"

"Yes," said the young man. "I know, but I didn't call to see your daughter. I came on behalf of our firm about that little bill."

"Oh—er—er—" stammered the stern father, "call again, will you?"

WHY IS PRIVILEGE TOLERATED?

In the year 1900, 142,922 workers were employed in the shoe manufacturing industry. They averaged in wages $413.27 apiece. For this they produced 219,235,419 pairs of shoes worth $261,028,580. The labor cost of each pair consequently was 27 cents, the commercial value was $1.18.

In 1909, 198,297 workers received $496.54 apiece. They produced 247,643,197 pairs, worth $512,798,000. The labor cost of each pair was 39 cents, the commercial value $2.07.

In 1900 the tariff on boots and shoes was 25 per cent. In 1909 it was 15 per cent. The reduction evidently did not reduce wages, but the figures show that some other privileged interest than the tariff-fed one must be about the shoe manufacturing business.

There was an increase in the price of shoes of 73 per cent and an increase in the earnings of labor of only 20 per cent. Labor was consequently worse off than before, purchasing power of wages considered. That the employers are not better off may readily be conceded on taking business conditions generally into consideration. The shoe manufacturing business surely does not offer any better field for investment than it did ten years ago. Yet some one is surely making much bigger profits than ever. That some one, in all probability is the United Shoe Machinery Company, otherwise known as the Shoe Machinery Trust. The privilege on which its power is based is the patent privilege.

There ought to be no question about how to deal with that situation. When it can be shown, as in this case, that a privilege is throttling an industry and robbing laborers and consumers, what good reason is there for continuing it? What excuse can be given that would not apply just as well, if valid at all, to burglary or highway robbery? Why not revoke the privilege?

The same applies to all other monopolies. They all rest upon privilege of some kind, which has been conferred by some legislative act and can be revoked the same way. That is the common sense way to deal with the trust question. To neglect such a course and to trifle instead with such ridiculous and inefficient measures as the Sherman Anti-trust Law is only prolonging the life of the trusts. As long as such trifling constitutes the only attempt by those in authority to deal with the trust question, then the trusts are safe.

This makes it surprising that such an organization as the American Anti-trust League should be doing effective work in behalf of the trusts by wasting time, that could be better employed, in trying to push through congress a bill to add a few more futile and silly sections to the Sherman Law. Twenty-two years of failure actually does not seem enough to make some people stop and wonder whether after all they might not be on the wrong track.

BIGGEST ISSUE OF ALL.

How is the cost of living to be reduced? This is the most important question before the American people today. Its solution is more vital far than the identity of the next president.

Under the present system of excessive protection, those who toil are each year finding it more difficult to make a living, while the comparative handful of millionaires who chiefly reap the benefit of this toil spend their time in idleness and dissipation, their fortunes meanwhile increasing in almost exact proportion to the increase in the cost of living.

The result is that many Americans, especially the hard-working poor, are becoming plainly disgusted with the way things are going; disgusted even with this form of government, and are turning to socialism.

This feeling on the part of the wage earner is simply history repeating itself. Extravagance and poverty, the history of the world shows, never made good bedfellows in republics designed as "cradles of liberty." It is obvious that the high cost of living problem should be solved before the unrest grows greater. The earlier it is settled, the better for the republic. Which party will solve it, the Republicans or the Democrats? The Republican theory has always been that the heavier the tariff tax on the things eaten, worn or used by the people, the better for that people. The Democratic theory is that to reduce taxation is to reduce prices. The people must choose between the two policies, the policy of protection or the policy of merely enough tariff to raise sufficient revenue to meet the actual expenses of the government.

PLANNING FOR A BLUNDER.

The Democrats at Baltimore seem in the way of making their first blunder by selecting Alton B. Parker for temporary chairman.

This would be a clean-cut victory for "Charley" Murphy, "Tom" Taggart, Roger Sullivan, James M. Guffey, "Jim" Smith and the whole reactionary crowd back of Harmon and Underwood.

Judge Parker is personally unexceptionable and possibly he may have gained a trifle in prestige and popularity since the inglorious days of 1904. But in the Democratic mind his name is indissolubly associated with one of the worst disasters which ever befel the party and with an element in the leadership which has been so thoroughly discredited that decency should impel it to stand aside.

Harmony is the alleged motive behind the Parker suggestion. But can the selection of a man identified with the reactionary forces in the democracy promote harmony in a convention which must be thoroughly progressive if it shall command the respect of the great Democratic masses of the country?

Judge Parker cannot harmonize the Murphys and Sullivans with the genuine progressive of the Bryan type.

KENTUCKY CHEER.

Kerher Watterson is out with a pathetic appeal to Mr. Bryan not to say what he thinks at Baltimore—that is, not out loud—lest he offend some of Watterson's Wall Street friends, and especially Thomas F. Ryan, whose money he tried to get Governor Wilson to take, and turned on him because he refused.

How much ear Mr. Bryan ought to give to advice from that particular source we are not saying. But we take pleasure in reproducing what Watterson said in his paper the day after Mr. Bryan spoke in Louisville in 1896.

"Mr. William J. Bryan has come to Kentucky and Kentucky has taken his measure. He is a boy orator. He is a dishonest dodger. He is a daring adventurer. He is a political faker. He is not of the material of which the people of the United States have ever made a president, nor is he even of the material of which any party has ever before made a candidate."

And the man who said that is advising the man to whom he said it what to do and what not to do.

---

Bryan would beat Taft in Lake county, and carry some democrats into the court house with him.

---

The only way to bust the trusts is to tear down the tariff walls which protect them from competition, and repeal the special privilege laws under which they operate.

---

And the pith of it is that when Republicans call each other liars, brigands, thieves, pirates and corruptionists, they are telling only the plain truth about some of the bosses.

---

The Portage Co. Democrat, which had supported Governor Harmon until then, came out last week for Bryan. There are other democratic papers in Ohio that are sorry they got in wrong on the Harmon boomlet.

---

"We stand not for the abuses of the tariff," says Mr. Root, "but for its beneficent uses." Fine! Splendid! Now if we can only find the party that stands for its abuses, we shall know where we stand.

---

The chief danger at Baltimore is that the democrats will think they can win with "any old candidate," but there are some wise boys among the progressive democrats who are not going to overlook this and they are for Bryan.

---

This from Gifford Pinchot: "I was never happier in my life, I hope our people will walk out of the convention. I don't know how many would walk out. I don't care if only a dozen go." Mr. Pinchot speaks sincerely. He represents quite an element to be found mainly in the far west, notably in California, that has all along yearned for the formation of a new progressive party having no reactionaries in it. The theory is that such a party would soon attract to its membership the radicals of the democratic party and then all the progressives would be on one side and all the conservatives on the other.

Collier's Weekly has dug out of the files of time the following authorized utterance by Speaker Champ Clark, which it regards as having some bearing upon his fitness to be president of the United States. Clipped from the advertising columns of some newspaper, it says:—

"At the end of the last campaign," writes Champ Clark, Missouri's brilliant congressman, "from overwork, nervous tension, loss of sleep and constant speaking, I had about utterly collapsed. It seemed that all the organs in my body were out of order, but three bottles of Electric Bitters made me all right. It's the best all-round medicine ever sold over a druggist's counter. Overworked, run-down men, and weak, sickly women gain splendid health and vitality from Electric Bitters. Try them, only 50 cents. Guaranteed by Handley, druggist."

The fact that Alton B. Parker was the worst beaten man that ever ran for the presidency is doubtless regarded by Chairman Mack, Tom Taggart, Roger Sullivan and Charley Murphy as a sufficient reason why he should be the temporary chairman of the Democratic national convention.

The New York Independent is extremely doubtful whether either Wilson or Clark can command a majority in the Baltimore convention and it is certain that both Harmon and Underwood are impossible; and it adds:

That would send the delegates after a "dark horse," and he is in the convention as a delegate, and in every one's mind, Mr. Bryan. If Mr. Taft is the Republican nominee, as seems likely, a progressive will be sought by the Democrats, and with Governor Wilson and Speaker Clark eliminated, whom can the choice fall upon but Mr. Bryan?, who has equally favored both of them? Harmon and Underwood will both be impossible. He has not intimated that he will be a candidate, but he does not need to. There he is: behold him for yourselves. He has acted wisely during these late months, has gotten over his "cross of gold" folly, and has kept himself in the eye of his party, while refusing to be a candidate. His method may prove more successful than that of Mr. Roosevelt.

It is curious to observe how generally this view is taken. Only the old violent anti-Bryan Democratic papers seem to hold an opposite opinion.

RANDOM THOUGHTS

By Tom, Dick and Harry.

"Full many a shaft at random sent, Finds mark its archer little meant."

The truth of the above finds verification in the fact that someone, "presumably" a lady teacher, at present or in the past engaged in the art of teaching young America how to shoot, takes exceptions—not to what we said about schools and pupils, but to what she conceives us to be (forgive that plural personal). In replying to her we will try to confine our remarks to what each of us said, and to the inferences to be drawn therefrom.

Nowhere in her article did she dispute a statement made in the article with which she professes to disagree, and had we written her story we could not have given more conclusive evidence of the correctness of one of our contentions, viz: that there are now engaged in the school room persons totally unfit for that high calling. Note the tone of the entire article. The contempt for the childlife with which she has come into contact. The sneer for the "Hottentot," by which endearing term it may be assumed she means those who fail to measure up to her standard of perfection. Note also the confusion in her mind as to the distinction to be made between a Sunday school and a public school. Other misconceptions of the subject might be mentioned, but these will serve our present purpose.

Lest there should be any misunderstanding about these articles, and consequent offense taken, let it be said here that the writer has no complaint against the schools. He has children in school and none of them has ever missed a promotion, and with one exception, they have all been handled by competent instructors, and have always received fair treatment except in the instance noted, so that no charge of disaffection or of being "disgruntled" can lay at our door. Neither must the things here said be given local application, except as they are applicable through knowledge on the part of the reader. So now, let's get to it.

To paraphrase a more or less well-known saying: "The child that was rejected by the teacher is now become the president of the bank."

In order to designate the party of the second part let us call her "Pedagog." Therefore be it known to you O Pedagog, that while I am reputed sire to a number of children, there is not a 150 per cent one in the lot, and while there is something cherubic in each one, yet we were ever able to discover more of what our forefathers would have called "The Old Adam" and which we baldly designate as "the devil" than anything angelic in their makeup, and so have the teachers, to judge from the reports received from them. Pedagog seems to think that parents blame the teacher or school system when their children "go astray." We conceive no such thing, because we think that is something with which the teacher can have but little to do and that only in a contributory sense. She says a teacher does not "pour" into the child learning—that the child is not like a piece of plastic clay to be molded at will. What in the name of the School System does a teacher do? What is a child's mind if not plastic? Surely it does not present itself at the school door filled with the rudiments of learning, and only anxious for some teacher to hear him spout. Ours were not, and we know of others. It has always been our conception that there were lessons for a child to learn and that the school authorities prescribed those lessons, their extent and the time in which they should be completed. We have thought it was the teacher's duty to pour into the child ideas, and then to pump out again more than had been poured in. Surely the teacher is the sower and the cultivator. Some seed truly will fall upon stony ground, and tares will choke out others, and still others will yield a bountiful harvest. The stoniest ground may be made to bear some fruit, and careful elimination of the tares which sometimes infest the most fertile soil will produce wonderful results. The teacher must be an inspiration and a leader. Few children are natural students, and few so earnestly desire knowledge that they will sit up nights to acquire it—especially during the period when they are passing through the grades. Hugo says "There are no bad men, only bad teachers." He did not mean of course, school teachers per se.

We all know that neither the teacher nor the school system are to blame for all the array of boys and girls who could finish the school course and do not. But while we may not be able to prove it, we feel perfectly certain that many a promising career is spoiled by a teacher lacking a true conception of her high calling.

Pedagog says we can not be informed upon school matters or we would first make public our views on the duties of parents toward the schools. We may not be able to qualify as an expert before a court, but nevertheless we have access to the magazines and other current literature which frequently publish the findings of the foremost educators of the world upon this vital subject, and beside that, we were in school once upon a time, and are not as young as we look, nor as old as we hope to be.

Pedagog says the success of the child depends almost entirely upon its own individual efforts. That is not true as it stands, or rather it is just half true. Without the individual effort of course there could be no success. But the first business of a teacher is to get that effort. No scold ever got a child's best effort or ever will. It is true that in spite of some teachers who hold the views of Pedagog, some pupils get through the grades which have the misfortune to be presided over by them, but it is in spite of and not because of them. She says "bad men come from bad homes." That is true, and it is no less true that bad men come from good homes, and vice versa. We do not know just what she meant by "Hottentot" but assume she meant the boy who prefers play to getting his lessons and who would rather dig for a sassafras than a Greek root. Her ideal is Algernon, who always has his lessons and is never saucy, and later on graduates into a $40 clerkship, while impudent, restless Joe, flunks his exams, and becomes president of a great railway system. No, now don't blow up that way, all Joes do not turn out that way, nor all Algernons the other way—but sometimes. What we mean is you never can tell. Your goose Joe may prove to be a swan, and Algernon only a duck. She refers to something recently printed about a "scold" and the disrespect in which she was held by her pupils. We sincerely hope she did not think we meant her. We do not even know who she is, but for mercy's sake, if she is at all like the one we had in mind, she should cheer up, things are going to be worse as she gets older. The kids are now as they were 100 years ago, and they will be the same 100 years hence. Life is new and sweet to them, and the only way you can avoid annoyance from children is to become a child again yourself. Remember what Fra Elbertus was used to say, and smile.

Kindly permit an old man to give a little advice. I often hear men say "I am out of politics." Why should a man say that? The answer sometimes is, "I am so thoroughly disgusted with the way they are doing that I don't want anything more to do with politics." Now right here is where I wish to give advice: If the political game is not conducted as it should be, then that is a very strong reason why every good man should take an active part. Right then and there is where men who do not like rotten politics should get into the game. Make politics what it should be—the science of government. It should be the best game in our whole country; it can be made such, but don't forget this, that the minute you or your friends who don't like rotten politics, commence to make it a selfish game, then, although you may not see it yourself, politics will commence to get rotten again. Others will see it. Politics should always aim to settle the question of what is best for the majority, recognizing that inalienable rights must be secured to every man. When selfishness creeps in, when you try to get an advantage over your fellowmen then is where the game is spoiled, or possibly it becomes a game of "grab."

Now and then we hear a man who has been defeated for some office say: "I am out of politics for good; no more of it for me,"—well, I was going to say something about this kind of a fellow, but I won't. He never was in politics, he tried to play at a game of "grab." Why waste any words on the man who don't know what politics is?

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars free.

Music and Masculinity.

Music as an art has little standing in Japan, according to a letter in the current issue of the Traveler's Gazette. It is left almost entirely to women, who cultivate it to the extent of playing on a guitarlike instrument called the samisen. "In the not very remote past," says the writer, "no gentleman could reconcile the practice of music with masculine dignity, and this state of affairs is changing but slowly."

Emerson on Woman Suffrage.

If a woman demands votes, offices, and political equality with man, as among the shakers an elder and elderess are of equal power—and among the Quakers—it must not be refused. It is very cheap wit that finds it so droll that women should vote.—Ralph Waldo Emerson.

Each age of our lives has its joys. Old people should be happy, and they will be if Chamberlain's Tablets are taken to strengthen the digestion and keep the bowels regular. These tablets are mild and gentle in their action and especially suitable for people of middle age and older. For sale by all dealers.

IN GETTING AN ELECTRIC SUCTION CLEANER

DON'T BE DECEIVED and buy one with a cheap motor, a small vertical shaft which will soon wear and drop, especially when in connection with a small fan which must necessarily be run at high speed in order to get sufficient power. Such machines make a neat appearance and may do good work while new, but are SHORT LIVED.

When you buy the MAGIC ELECTRIC you have a cleaner with a five year guarantee certificate, a motor designed especially for it by the WESTINGHOUSE ELECTRIC MFG. CO., having a large horizontal shaft, a good sized fan which even at low speed gives sufficient power.

The MAGIC is the most simple in construction, having no pumps, valves, connecting rods, gears, belts, etc., to give out.

After three years' experience with various makes, we sell the BEST the market affords.

MENTOR.

The weather is getting to be very comfortable and pleasant for a few days past, furnace fires are out—probably until the equinoxial storm in September, and since small rains have fallen, fruit, flowers and farm crops have picked up somewhat. Of strawberries there have been a great quantity, because shipped in here by the car load, causing quite a glut in the market during this past week, so that home grown berries have sold as low as five cents a quart, which seldom happens. There seems to be an abundance of cherries, apples will be plentiful too, but peaches, trees and all are dead as the old "door nail."

Mrs. Clyde Allen is spending some time at date with her husband's family in Kirtland.

Mrs. Clifford Freeman of Cleveland is down here for a few days now, with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Clark Bradway, at the Center.

Mentor friends have heard of the safe arrival of Miss Emily Barber at Wahpeton, Dakota, where she will spend the summer vacation with her father's family, returning in September in time to enter Lake Erie College.

In mentioning the Mentor scholars who have just graduated from the High school of Painesville, we failed to name one of the very loveliest of all our girls—Miss Marie Otis, for which omission we beg the young lady's pardon, as we simply did not know she was finishing this year. If anyone else was left out, please speak up, as we naturally wish to make as long a list as possible.

We have a new "Care-taker" at Mentor Lake Front Park this summer by name of Hoyes, who, we understand, is giving entire satisfaction down there, something quite hard to do, when so many parties come from the city and all around, wanting to use our grounds and leaving them in just as disorderly a condition as they please.

Dr. J. W. Lowe was a delegate to the Health Officers' annual convention held in Toledo this past week. As the doctor has been looking after the health of this village and vicinity for a number of years and always with the greatest satisfaction, he may possibly be heard from at the convention.

Miss Louise Damon of Omaha, Neb. is visiting her grandfather, Mr. Samuel Whiting, and her aunties, Mrs. T. D. Morley, Mrs. Chas. Church, and Mrs. Will Morley this summer.

The Carleton grocery store is the first to invest in an automobile delivery wagon, and as they send goods all over the township, even over to Kirtland, and down to Salida, such a machine will prove a great convenience.

Mrs. Jane Lawrence of New Castle, Pa., is at present the guest of her daughter, Mrs. Robert Case, and other relatives here.

Mr. and Mrs. H. C. King of "Southwood," were in the city Saturday, having been called up there on business.

Mr. L. B. Miller returned from his vacation hunting trip on Saturday.

Mr. Morley Nutting of Cleveland, is making his home with his uncle, Mr. T. D. Morley, while selling a very fine bible and concordance combined, and in that way helping himself through college. One always feels like taking off one's hat to the boy or girl who cares enough in these days, for an education to work for it! Such students always appreciate their advantages.

Of the Alumnae members living here, but few attended the College reunion last week, remaining to the luncheon, but those few were Mrs. John Oliver, Mrs. Frank Case, Miss Eleanor King, Miss Nottie King, Mrs. Norman Frost. Quite a number of our ladies went out to hear Miss Jane Addams, however, and we noticed among others, Mrs. Emory Harrington, Mrs. Charles Justus, Mrs. Henry Lewis, Mrs. Oates, Mrs. Col. Parker, Mrs. T. D. Morley, Mrs. Perkins, Miss Sarah Armstrong, Miss Jeannotte Musson, Mrs. Charles Church, and Miss Frances Cleveland. All the members of the Alumnae Association from here remained for the annual College Concert, and a very few stayed over for the "Three Irish Plays."

The Ladies' Aid Society of the Epworth Memorial church of Cleveland, came down "en masse" last Wednesday and picnicked upon the grounds of Mrs. L. B. Miller, who, we understand, is one of their members when at home for the winter. There appeared to be fully two car loads of them, and we judge they had the "time of their lives."

Mrs. Edgar Barber, accompanied by Mrs. Sarah Taft of Painesville, was out here on Wednesday looking after her property, which we understand has been rented for a year to Mr. and Mrs. Maxwell Berry of Detroit, who have already taken possession.

Mr. Arthur Andrews and Mr. Stephen Baker were called to Madison on Monday last, by some of their old neighbors who wanted some cement work done, and so they spent most of the week there.

Mr. and Mrs. Irwin Garfield have returned to their home in Boston, having spent two or three very happy weeks here at the old home.

Mrs. Elias Rexford has gone to West Hickory, Pa., where she will spend some weeks with her sister living there.

R. M. CASE & CO.

Many of the Methodist church people were much astonished and equally delighted to spy sitting on the back seat, looking very pale and somewhat thin, none other than our Dan McCarty, yesterday morning, he having been permitted to come home on Saturday afternoon quite late.

Mr. and Mrs. John Foss of Cleveland, have been recent guests at the home of their mother, Mrs. Col. Parker.

Mr. and Mrs. Jann Taylor of the county seat, were spending a short time very recently with their niece, Mrs. Ed Sanborn and family.

Mrs. Ann Weed was in Painesville on Tuesday, when she called on her daughter and other relatives.

Miss Abbie Gilbert has been spending a number of days in Madison with the family of her niece, Mrs. Roseum, nee Miss May Ferry.

Mr. Lymen Bean of Burton, has just come to Mentor and opened an ice cream parlor in the Robert Case block at the Center, where he will also dispense ginger ale, and other soft and good drinks during the summer season. Mr. Bean is a young man just through High school, and one who will be a great attraction to others of our young people, as he has come to Mentor to stay, we hope, and will make his home with his brother, Mr. Claude Bean and family.

Mrs. Sensibaugh and daughter of Cleveland, were in our village Wednesday and called on the King girls and other friends.

Robert Case has taken the agency for the Eagle Stamp Co., and after this will give the coveted little eagles with all grocery purchases of 10 cents and over.

Mrs. Roseum of Madison, and small daughter, are spending some time just now with her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Lyman Ferry, of West Mentor.

Mr. and Mrs. Vic Brainard and two little girls, former Mentor folk, who now own a pleasant home in Madison, were here a day or so last week with Mrs. Ann Weed, the mother of Mrs. Brainard.

Mr. Fred Harris and son of Cleveland, were here over Sunday with his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Cassius Harris.

Mr. and Mrs. Joseph Rudolph are in the city at date, with their son, Mr. Max Rudolph and his family.

Mrs. Garfield is having a visit from her sister, Mrs. Rockwell of Washington, D. C., and also her only daughter, Mrs. Stanley Brown, of Conn.

The reception given last evening for Mr. Schaffner and his bride was a great success, about 200 friends being present, as the entire Disciple congregation were invited and many of them were kind enough to come. The Ladies' Aid had charge of the refreshments, which consisted of ice cream, cake, strawberries, and fruit punch. The reception committee consisted of Mr. and Mrs. Frost, Mr. and Mrs. Will Morley, Mr. and Mrs. King, and Mrs. T. O. Hart. Miss Frances Cleveland, Mrs. Robert Case and Mr. Birkholtz had charge of the musical program, and Miss Eleanor King decorated the supper tables, the Sunday school rooms and the auditorium, while many friends sent flowers. Mr. Birkholtz made a little speech over a package that he had been commissioned to hand to Mrs. Schaffner, and a still smaller one to the young minister. When the bride had unwrapped her bundle she found a beautiful quilt therein, and when Mr. Schaffner untied his little package, he found a box containing $36 in gold coin. They were both very much touched and delighted, and everyone seemed satisfied. Mr. Clark, the young Disciple minister, is to be married this evening, we understand, and a similar reception is to be given to him and his girl wife next Tuesday evening at the hospitable home of Mrs. Lowe, to which the Methodist folks are invited, and so, everybody is happy.

But Far Off.

A woman who was broad and not long stood in a crowded car the other evening, her arms full of bundles and her body careening and lurching dangerously. A man in the seat in front of which she stood got tired of snatching his toes back from imminent danger and growled, "Madam, a strap is above you." "So's Heaven," retorted the woman who was broad and not long.

Toasts Worth Recording.

A rustic English saying runs: "Here's to the poor man. May his beef and beer keep on increasing year by year. May his dear little wife be the joy of his life and never kick up a racket. May she do all she can to please her old man and mend up his old ragged jacket." Better still is this version. "Here's to the loaf that never crumbles, here's to the wife that never grumbles; here's to the horse that never stumbles." To which one might be tempted to add: "Here's to hope."

But It's Never Shut.

The Secret Door—Woman's mouth.—Lippincott's Magazine.

When your child has whooping cough be careful to keep the cough loose and expectoration easy by giving Chamberlain's Cough Remedy as may be required. This remedy will also liquify the tough mucus and make it easier to expectorate. It has been used successfully in many epidemics and is safe and sure. For sale by all dealers.

TEACHERS' EXAMINATION

The Lake County board of examiners will offer examinations for teachers' certificates on the first Saturday of each month in the year 1912. If first Saturday falls on holiday, examinations will be held one week later. Boxwell pupils will be examined the third Saturday in April and the third Saturday in May, 1912. All examinations will be held in the old High School building, Painesville, beginning at 8:30 standard time.

By order of the board.

J. R. ADAMS, Clerk, Unionville, Ohio.

GOT EVEN WITH NEWLYWEDS

Friends Inserted Small "Ad" in Newspaper, and Seekers After Bargains Did the Rest.

Bright dreams of wedded bliss were shattered by a tiny want ad.

Instead of a day all by themselves, as they had planned, Mr. and Mrs. Nelson Joleen, newlyweds, spent eight strenuous hours receiving strangers, who wanted to buy the brand-new furnishings of their cozy flat at No. 4851 West Van Buren street.

FOR SALE—Furniture, entire furnishings of six-room flat; everything new and in first-class condition, including a piano-player. Call Sunday, between 8 a. m. and 9 p. m., at 4851 West Van Buren street. No reasonable offer refused.

The Joleens knew nothing about it. They were serenely happy. The groom was showing his bride the cozy corners of their nest.

"How do you like it, my darling?" he inquired anxiously.

"Oh, Nels, it's just too——"

Mrs. Joleen's reply was interrupted by a hammering at the door.

"Hey! What'll you take for the pianer?" asked a man when the door was opened.

"Don't want to sell it. Good day," said Joleen.

Again he turned to his bride. Again a knock on the door.

"I seen your ad in the paper," said another prospective buyer.

"No, you didn't. I didn't have any ad. I don't want to sell anything. I'm busy. Good day," replied Joleen.

All day long Joleen and his wife answered the bell and knocks at the door and turned away the would-be buyers of furniture and piano-players.

About 6 o'clock in the evening it suddenly dawned upon them that the friends whose rice and old shoes they had dodged by leaving the church where they were married through a side entrance after the ceremony, had persevered in their joking and had won.

The groom grinned sheepishly, then called a taxicab. The only quiet moments the couple had during the day were spent at a downtown hotel.—Chicago Record-Herald.

Nature Student.

"The bat, when winter comes," said a nature student, "folds his long ears against his sides, shuts off his heart and, hanging head down from some black corner of barn or smokehouse, hibernates till spring. In March he begins to wake up.

"Lizards and snakes hibernate underground. Frogs hibernate in the frozen mud at the bottom of their ponds. It's nothing to them that they freeze stiff. A frog so stiff frozen in February that you could break him like a soda cracker will thaw out in a warm March as chipper as you please.

"Rats and mice don't hibernate. They come indoors. They leave their cold fields and sewers and they take up their quarters in our attics, warm, steam-heated houses. There it's jolly—plenty to eat, no snow, no sleet, no piercing March winds. The winter season makes no difference to the rats and mice, save that, while always marrying and giving in marriage, they marry and give in marriage more than ever in our comfortable houses, rearing, at our expense and on our food, litters that in their vast numbers would content even a rat Roosevelt."

Honest Pharmacist.

That "honesty is the best policy" is an axiom that has not been received with entire favor in France may be inferred from the following: Last November a Paris pharmacist who had made a blunder in a medicine that he had prepared discovered soon after delivering it to an unknown woman that he had put into it a most dangerous poison. He inserted in a number of daily papers a notice warning the unknown customer not to use the medicine. This conscientious publication has had a disagreeable result for the pharmacist. He was hunted out by the police for having delivered a poisonous substance without a physician's prescription. He has just settled by paying a fine of 100 francs.

But the customer had not remained unknown or undiscovered. The police had found her. She had not seen any of the notices the pharmacist had put in the papers. But dowered with an excellent scent she had not used the medicine "because it did not seem quite right."

Oriental Metaphor.

The Oriental speaks naturally in metaphor. Even the children continually use figures of speech which are often poetical and always suggestive. The Washington Star thus quotes Bishop Oldham, a missionary bishop of the Methodist church. He writes from Singapore:

"I wish you could hear some of the expressive phrases of the native boys. A lad the other day was describing to me the abstemiousness of his father.

"'Oh, he is content with very little,' he said. 'Such a very little.' Here he pointed to the ground. 'No more than the water in the holes made by a chicken's feet.'"

"He smiled and resumed:

"'He eats nothing. A grain or two of rice contents him. You should see him at his meals. He is like a hound munching flies.'"

Diplomatic.

"How did you get your wife to forego her desire for that expensive evening gown?"

"Told her it was [illegible] the thing a plain woman [illegible]"

High Explosives Used in Mining.

In mining and similar operations in the Transvaal of South Africa great quantities of high explosives are used. It is estimated that $7,000,000 is invested in such explosives every year.

There is no real need of anyone being troubled with constipation. Chamberlain's Tablets will cause an agreeable movement of the bowels without any unpleasant effect. Give them a trial. For sale by all dealers.

The Real Independence Day

BENJAMIN FRANKLIN

JOHN HANCOCK

WHERE CORNWALLIS SURRENDERED

INDEPENDENCE HALL

SINCE we bent over our childhood histories we have always had an idea that our fathers severed the ties with Great Britain on the Fourth of July, 1776 and we have had the word of no less authority than Thomas Jefferson, the author of that hallowed instrument, that the Declaration was signed on that date, on whose anniversary the great father of democracy died. But William H. Michael, chief clerk and historian of the department of state, says no, and for years he has toiled for his country beneath the same roof which shelters the sacred document; has had the nation's archives at his fingers' ends.

"The independence of the United States was declared by resolution on the 2nd of July, and the adoption of the form of declaration on the 4th of July was a secondary matter," says Mr. Michael. "It is a little strange that more importance was not attached to the 2d of July in connection with the Declaration of Independence. The resolution introduced by Richard Henry Lee, which declared our independence, was passed on that day (July 2 1776). This was really the vital point—the crucial juncture."

The real act of independence, which Mr. Michael has had reproduced in facsimile, was, then, the Lee resolution, declaring:

"That these united colonies are and of right ought to be, free and independent states; that they are absolved from all allegiance to the British crown, and that all political connection between them and the state of Great Britain is and ought to be, totally dissolved."

Concerning the actual date of the Declaration's signing Mr. Michael says: "Mr. Jefferson in his account states that all the members present except Mr. Dickinson, signed the Declaration in the evening of the Fourth of July. The Journal shows that no one signed it that evening except Mr. Hancock and Mr. Thomson. The journal entry is: 'Signed by order and in behalf of Congress, John Hancock, President. Attest, Charles Thomson, Secretary.' . . . On August 2 the Declaration, as engrossed under the order of Congress, was signed by all of the members of Congress present."

What really did happen on July 4 of that year of years was the final adoption of a draft of the "form of announcing the fact to the world" that independence had been decreed two days before. Jefferson had written this draft in his Philadelphia apartments, consisting of a ready-furnished parlor and bedroom in the new brick house of Hyman Gratz at the southwest corner of Seventh and Market streets, "on the outskirts of the city." The Penn national bank, now occupying the site of this dwelling, is in the very business heart of Philadelphia.

Jefferson's disgust at the changes made in his draft is described by Mr. Michael. The Continental Congress struck out the language charging the king with inciting "treasonable insurrections with our fellow-citizens," by promising them confiscated property; with carrying on the slave trade and refusing to allow American legislatures to suppress it. While these and many other clauses were being stricken out of his draft "Jefferson sat in his seat without raising his voice in defense of his own work, notwithstanding he writhed in agony as he saw some of his most cherished paragraphs and sentences eliminated from the document." The historian John Adams, otherwise a critic of the Declaration, complained that some of the draft's best parts, particularly that indicting the king for continuing the slave trade, should not have been stricken out. "Yet it will be well to remember," Mr. Michael says, "that Georgia and South Carolina were both carrying on the slave trade at this time as energetically as they were able, and other colonies had profited largely by the traffic. Hence it was ridiculous to arraign the king for doing the same thing."

After very heated discussions of this form of announcing Congress' real stroke of independence, on July 2—discussions which kept Independence Hall, Philadelphia, in a whirl of excitement throughout the next two days—this form of announcement, the Declaration of Independence, was adopted on the night of July 4. At the close of that evening's session Charles Thomson, secretary of the Continental Congress, went to the shop of John Dunlap, the official printer, and had the corrected draft set up. Copies of this first "broadside print" were sent to the assemblies, conventions and councils of safety throughout the colonies and to the commanding officers of the Continental troops. It is probable that it was one of these printed copies, bearing the names of Hancock and Thomson only, that George Washington ordered proclaimed at the head of the Continental regiments.

But the "original Declaration" which all pilgrims to Washington formerly gazed upon in awe and reverence was not ordered written for more than two weeks after that long but unjustly hallowed July 4. On July 19 Congress ordered that the Declaration be "fairly engrossed on parchment," and that "the same, when engrossed, be signed by every member of Congress." Some time within the next two weeks the beautiful penwork which thousands of Americans have since marveled at and admired was executed upon the great strip of sheepskin now locked away in the department of state, Washington.

On August 2, 1776, just a month after the real stroke of independence, this great sheepskin was unrolled in the presence of the Continental Congress, in Independence Hall. With the wording of the corrected draft it was carefully "compared at the table." This formality gone through with, it was spread out upon a desk and signed by all of the members of Congress present. Fifty of these fathers of the republic signed on that day. Six of the revered "signers" did not affix their signatures until later dates. George Wythe of Virginia signed about August 27. Richard Henry Lee, Virginia; Elbridge Gerry, Massachusetts, and Oliver Walcott, Connecticut, did not affix their signatures until some time in September. Matthew Thornton of New Hampshire did not add his name until November, and Thomas McKean of Delaware probably did not affix his, the final signature, until five years later, or 1781. Matthew Thornton, by the way, was not appointed to Congress until November—four months after the adoption of the Declaration. Other signers who were not members of Congress on July 2 or 4, but were allowed to sign on August 2, the general signing day, were Benjamin Rush, James Wilson, George Ross, George Clymer and George Taylor.

Why two Georgia members did not sign is explained by Mr. Michael. One of these, Rev. John Joachim Zubly of Savannah, as soon as it became apparent that independence was to be declared, had fled post haste from Philadelphia to Georgia with the intention of apprising Sir James Wright, the crown governor of Georgia, of what was going on behind the closed doors of Independence Hall. Zubly's conduct having excited suspicion, he had been closely watched, and one of his letters to the British governor had been seized. It appearing beyond doubt that he was divulging the secrets of the executive sessions, then so zealously planning the stroke for liberty, he had been accused of his perfidy on the floor of the Congress by Samuel Chase, member from Maryland. Zubly had denied these charges, and challenged proof. It had been the furnishing of this proof that had caused his flight. Congress directed John Houston, another Georgia delegate, to follow Zubly and circumvent his evil purposes. By the time both members reached Georgia, however, the crown governor had been deposed by the people, and had taken refuge in an armed British vessel lying in Savannah harbor. Thus Zubly's treachery came to naught, but it cheated Houston out of his opportunity to sign the Declaration, and left Georgia with only three instead of five signers. Why Houston did not sign with the other tardy members is not discussed in the history, but his name should be as endeared to the hearts of Americans as any of the actual signers. Zubly, by the way, after being banished from Georgia, with the loss of half of his estate, was allowed to return to his pastoral work in Savannah, which city honors him by allowing two highways to bear his name—Joachim and Zubly streets.

Twenty-four of the signers were lawyers, fourteen agriculturists, four physicians, nine merchants, one a manufacturer, one a clergyman and three had prepared for the calling of clergymen, but had chosen other vocations, according to Mr. Michael. Heaven seems to have rewarded them generally with long life, for three lived to be over 90, ten over 80, eleven over 70, fourteen over 60, eleven over 50, and six over 44, although one, Thomas Lynch, Jr., was accidentally drowned at sea when only 30. Thus the average age of the signers was over 62 years.

What has happened to the famous Declaration since its signing is recounted by Mr. Michael. In 1789, Congress authorized "the secretary for the department of foreign affairs" to take charge of it, along with other records, books and papers of the Continental Congress. The same year the department of foreign affairs became the department of state, which has to all intents and purposes, remained the depository of the Declaration ever since. The great document was from 1841 to 1877, however, deposited in the patent office, for many years a bureau of the department of state, and was allowed to remain there after the patent office was placed under the interior department, the old department of state not being fireproof, while the patent office building was believed to be so. After the present fireproof state, war and navy building was finished the declaration was returned to its legal depository.

Until 1894 the Declaration was framed and displayed in a steel cabinet in the library of the department of state, where all visitors might see it, but in that year it was hermetically sealed in a frame and placed in a drawer of another steel cabinet constructed to protect also the original signed copy of the Constitution. There the Declaration still remains, locked and sealed by order of Secretary Hay, and it is no longer shown to any one, except by his direction.

A complete collection of biographies and artistic portraits of the signers of the Declaration has been made by Mr. Michael for his work, which will be distributed only through members of Congress. Only by dint of correspondence extending over many years and great personal effort has Mr. Michael obtained the portraits of Button, Gwinnett, John Hart and Thomas Lynch, of whom it was hitherto believed there were no likenesses in existence. Most of the portraits are after Trumbull and the one of Benjamin Harrison, by this artist, had to be painted after Harrison's death from minute personal descriptions furnished by relatives and friends who approved the finished likeness.

The Sage of Monticello

"The Sage of Monticello" is the nickname that was applied to Thomas Jefferson for the same reason and in much the same manner as Daniel Webster was given the title "The Sage of Marshfield." Jefferson won the title of "sage" for the many glorious truths he uttered, and as Webster loved every inch of the ground of the beautiful Cape Cod village of Marshfield, and its calm scenery he believed gave him just such inspiration as he needed, so at Monticello, Jefferson's Virginia estate, the great statesman found the most delightful retreat from his labors, and the essence of contentment, which inspired him to larger, greater and more beneficial things for the betterment of his country.

Jefferson was born at Shadwell, the homestead of the family, near Charlottesville, Va. When that estate was destroyed by fire in 1770, along with its furniture, books and his law papers, he sought out another location which was even more attractive to him. About two miles from the Shadwell house was a hill named by Jefferson, Monticello (little mount). This eminence commanded a view of surprising beauty, and he chose this place as the site for a mansion that should embody his ideas of architecture—an art upon which he expended much thought and in which he was more than an amateur. After the fire the building of a new house upon his "little mount" was pushed rapidly, and in something more than a year a section was made ready for occupancy.

In 1772 Jefferson married and brought to his new mansion Martha Skelton, a childless widow of 22. In a letter written from Paris in 1786 to Mrs. Maria Conway, Jefferson, referring to his home said: "And our own dear Monticello, where has nature spread so rich a mantle under the eye? Mountains, forests, rocks, rivers. With what majesty do we there ride above the storms. How sublime to look down into the workhouse of nature, to see her clouds, hail, snow, rain, thunder, all fabricated at our feet! And the glorious sun when rising as if out of a distant water, just gilding the tops of the mountains, and giving life to all nature."

Jefferson's public life began in 1769, when he took his seat as a member of the Virginia house of burgesses. He was twenty-six years of age at the time. This was only a little more than two years previous to his occupancy of Monticello, which he called his home during the remainder of his life.

Therefore all the great things in the life of this great American were centered about this "little mount," and next to the home of Washington at Mount Vernon, the home of Jefferson at Monticello, both in the same state, is one of the great American shrines.

AMENDMENTS TO BE VOTED ON

Text of the Last Seven Amendments to Be Submitted to Voters

CONTINUED FROM LAST WEEK

Methods of Submitting the Amendments to the Voters at Special Election To Be Held September 3d—License Amendment.

BALLOT SUBJECT NO. 32.

Article 12, Section 1.

Taxation of State and Municipal Bonds

ARTICLE XII.

Section 1. No poll tax shall ever be levied in this state or service required, which may be commuted in money or other thing of value.

Section 2. Laws shall be passed, taxing by a uniform rule, all moneys, credits, investments in bonds, stocks, joint stock companies, or otherwise, and also all real and personal property according to its true value in money, excepting all bonds at present outstanding of the state of Ohio or of any city, village, hamlet, county, or township in this state or which have been issued in behalf of the public schools in Ohio and the means of instruction in connection therewith, which bonds so at present outstanding shall be exempt from taxation, but burying grounds, public school houses, houses used exclusively for public worship, institutions used exclusively for charitable purposes, public property used exclusively for any public purpose, and personal property, to an amount not exceeding in value five hundred dollars, for each individual, may, by general laws, be exempted from taxation, but all such laws shall be subject to alteration or repeal; and the value of all property, so exempted, shall, from time to time, be ascertained and published as may be directed by law.

Section 6. Except as otherwise provided in this Constitution the state shall never contract any debt for purposes of internal improvement.

Section 7. Laws may be passed providing for the taxation of the right to receive, or to succeed to, estates, and such taxation may be uniform or it may be so graduated as to tax at a higher rate the right to receive, or to succeed to, estates of larger value than to estates of smaller value. Such tax may also be levied at different rates upon collateral and direct inheritances and a portion of each estate not exceeding twenty thousand dollars may be exempt from such taxation.

Section 8. Laws may be passed providing for the taxation of incomes, and such taxation may be either uniform or graduated, and may be applied to such incomes as may be designated by law, but a part of each annual income not exceeding three thousand dollars may be exempt from such taxation.

Section 9. Not less than fifty (50) per centum of the income and inheritance taxes that may be collected by the state shall be returned to the city, village or township in which said income and inheritance tax originated.

Section 10. Laws may be passed providing for excise and franchise taxes and for the imposition of taxes upon the production of coal, oil, gas and other minerals.

Section 11. No bonded indebtedness of the state, or any political subdivisions thereof, shall be incurred or renewed, unless, in the legislation under which such indebtedness is incurred or renewed, provision is made for levying and collecting annually by taxation an amount sufficient to pay the interest on said bonds and provide a sinking fund for their final redemption at maturity.

BALLOT SUBJECT NO. 33.

Article 13, Section 2.

Regulation of Corporations

ARTICLE XIII.

Section 2. Corporations may be formed under general laws, but all such laws may, from time to time, be altered or repealed. Corporations may be classified and there may be conferred upon proper boards, commissions or officers, such supervisory and regulatory powers over their organization, business and issue and sale of stocks and securities, and over the business and sale of the stocks and securities of foreign corporations and joint companies in this state, as may be prescribed by law. Laws may be passed regulating the sale and conveyance of other personal property, whether owned by a corporation, joint stock company or individual.

BALLOT SUBJECT NO. 34.

Article 13, Section 3.

Double Liability of Bank Stockholders

ARTICLE XIII.

Section 3. Dues from private corporations shall be secured by such means as may be prescribed by law, but in no case shall any stockholder be individually liable otherwise than for the unpaid stock owned by him or her, except that stockholders of corporations authorized to receive money on deposit shall be held individually responsible, equally and ratably, and not one for another, for all contracts, debts, and engagements of such corporations, to the extent of the amount of their stock therein, at the par value thereof, in addition to the amount invested in such shares. No corporation, not organized under the laws of this state or of the United States, or person, partnership or association shall use the word "bank," "banker" or "banking," or words of similar meaning in any foreign language as a designation or name under which business may be conducted in this state, unless such corporation, person, partnership or association shall submit to inspection, examination and regulation as may hereafter be provided by the laws of this state.

BALLOT SUBJECT NO. 35.

Article 15, Section 2.

Regulation State Printing.

ARTICLE XV.

Section 2. The printing of the laws, journals, bills, legislative documents and papers for each branch of the general assembly, with the printing required for the executive and other departments of state, shall be let, on contract, to the lowest responsible bidder or done directly by the state in such manner as shall be prescribed by law. All stationery and supplies shall be purchased as may be provided by law.

BALLOT SUBJECT NO. 36.

Article 15, Section 4.

Eligibility of Women for Office.

ARTICLE XV.

Section 4. No person shall be elected or appointed to any office in this state unless possessed of the qualifications of an elector; provided that women who are citizens may be appointed, as notaries public or as members of boards or to positions in those departments and institutions established by the state or any political sub-division thereof involving the interests or care of women or children or both.

BALLOT SUBJECT.

Intoxicating Liquors.

ARTICLE XV.

Section 9. License to traffic in intoxicating liquors shall be granted in this state, and license laws operative throughout the state shall be passed with such restrictions and regulations as may be provided by law and municipal corporations shall be authorized by general laws to provide for the limitation of the number of saloons. Laws shall not be passed authorizing more than one saloon in each township or municipality of less than five hundred population, or more than [illegible] prohibit [illegible] under [illegible] tions, municipalities, townships, residence districts, or other districts now prescribed by law, the traffic shall not be licensed in any such local sub-division while any prohibitory law is operative therein, and nothing herein contained shall be so construed as to repeal, modify or suspend any such prohibitory laws, or any regulatory laws now in force or hereafter enacted, or to prevent the future enactment, modification or repeal of any prohibitory or regulatory laws. License to traffic in intoxicating liquors shall not be granted to any person who at the time of making application therefor is not a citizen of the United States and of good moral character. License shall not be granted to any applicant who is in any way interested in the business conducted at any other place where intoxicating liquors are sold or kept for sale as a beverage nor shall such license be granted unless the applicant or applicants are the only persons in any way pecuniarily interested in the business for which the license is sought and no other person shall be in any way interested therein during the continuance of the license; if such interest of such person shall appear, the license shall be deemed revoked. If any licensee is more than once convicted for a violation of the laws in force to regulate the traffic in intoxicating liquors, his license shall be deemed revoked, and no license shall thereafter be granted to him. License to traffic in intoxicating liquors shall not be granted unless the place of traffic under such license shall be located in the county in which the person or persons reside whose duty it is to grant such license, or in a county adjoining thereto. The word "saloon" as used in this section is defined to be a place where intoxicating liquors are sold, or kept for sale, as a beverage in quantities less than one gallon.

Resolved, further, That at said election a ballot shall be in the following form.

|---|---|
| | For license to traffic in intoxicating liquors. |
| | Against license to traffic in intoxicating liquors |

The voter shall indicate his choice by placing a cross-mark within the blank space opposite the words "For License" if he desires to vote in favor of the article above mentioned and opposite the words "Against License," within the blank space if he desires to vote against said article. If a cross-mark is placed opposite both phrases or neither phrase, then the above vote upon the subject shall not be counted.

If the votes for license exceed the votes against license then the article above mentioned shall become Section 9 of Article XV of the Constitution, and the present Section 9 of said article, also known as Section 18 of the Schedule shall be repealed.

BALLOT SUBJECT NO. 37.

Article 15, Section 10

Civil Service.

ARTICLE XV

Section 10. Appointments and promotions in the civil service of the state, the several counties, and cities shall be made according to merit and fitness, to be ascertained, as far as practicable, by competitive examinations. Laws shall be passed providing for the enforcement of this provision.

BALLOT SUBJECT NO. 38.

Article 15, Section 11

Outdoor Advertising

ARTICLE XV

Section 2. Laws may be passed regulating and limiting the use of property on or near public ways and grounds for erecting bill-boards thereon and for the public display of posters, pictures and other forms of advertising.

BALLOT SUBJECT NO. 39.

Article 16, Section 1

Methods of Submitting Amendments

ARTICLE XVI

Section 1. Either branch of the general assembly may propose amendments to this constitution, and if the same shall be agreed to by three-fifths of the members elected to each house, such proposed amendments shall be entered on the journals with the yeas and nays, and shall be submitted to the electors for their approval or rejection, on a separate ballot without party designation of any kind, at either a special or a general election as the general assembly may prescribe. Such proposed amendments shall be published once a week for five consecutive weeks preceding such election, in at least one newspaper in each county of the state, where a newspaper is published. If the majority of the electors voting on the same shall adopt such amendments the same shall become a part of the constitution. When more than one amendment shall be submitted at the same time, they shall be so submitted as to enable the electors to vote on each amendment, separately.

Section 2. Whenever two-thirds of the members elected to each branch of the general assembly shall think it necessary to call a convention, to revise, amend, or change this constitution, they shall recommend to the electors to vote on a separate ballot without party designation of any kind at the next election for members to the general assembly, for or against a convention, and if a majority of all the electors, voting for and against the calling of a convention, shall have voted for a convention, the general assembly shall, at their next session, provide by law, for calling the same. Candidates for members of the constitutional convention shall be nominated by nominating petitions only and shall be voted for upon one independent and separate ballot without any emblem or party designation whatever. The convention shall consist of as many members as the house of representatives, who shall be chosen as provided by law, and shall meet within three months after their election, for the purpose, aforesaid.

Section 3. At the general election to be held in the year one thousand nine hundred and thirty-two, and in each twentieth year thereafter, the question: "Shall there be a convention to revise, alter, or amend the constitution," shall be submitted to the electors of the state, and in case a majority of the electors, voting for and against the calling of a convention, shall decide in favor of a convention, the general assembly, at its next session, shall provide, by law, for the election of delegates, and the assembling of such convention, as is provided in the preceding section; but no amendment of this constitution, agreed upon by any convention assembled in pursuance of this article, shall take effect, until the same shall have been submitted to the electors of the state, and adopted by a majority of those voting thereon.

BALLOT SUBJECT NO. 40.

Article 18, Section 1.

Municipal Home Rule

ARTICLE XVIII

Municipal Corporations.

Section 1. Municipal corporations are hereby classified into cities and villages. All such corporations having a population of five thousand or over shall be cities, all others shall be villages. The method of transition from one class to the other shall be regulated by law.

Section 2. General laws shall be passed to provide for the incorporation and government of cities and villages, and additional laws may also be passed for the government of municipalities adopting the same, but no such additional law shall become operative in any municipality until it shall have been submitted to the electors thereof, and affirmed by a majority of those voting thereon, under regulations to be established by law.

Section 3. Municipalities shall have authority to exercise all powers of local self-government and to adopt and enforce within their limits such local police, sanitary and other similar regulations, as are not in conflict with general laws.

Section 4. Any municipality may acquire, construct, own, lease and operate within or without its corporate limits, any public utility the product or service of which is or is to be supplied to the municipality or its inhabitants, and may contract with others for any such product or service. The acquisition of any such public utility may be by condemnation or otherwise, and a municipality may acquire thereby the use of, or full title to, the property and franchise of any company or person supplying to the municipality or its inhabitants the service or product of any such utility.

Section 5. Any municipality proceeding to acquire, construct, own, lease or operate a public utility, or to contract with any person or company therefor, shall act by ordinance and no such ordinance shall take effect until after thirty days from its passage. If within said thirty days a petition signed by ten per centum of the electors of the municipality shall be filed with the executive authority thereof demanding a referendum on such ordinance it shall not take effect until submitted to the electors and approved by a majority of those voting thereon. The submission of any such question shall be governed by all the provisions of Section 8 of this article as to the submission of the question of choosing a charter commission.

Section 6. Any municipality, owning or operating a public utility for the purpose of supplying the service or product thereof to the municipality or its inhabitants, may also sell and deliver to others any transportation service of such utility and the surplus product of any other utility in an amount not exceeding in either case fifty per centum of the total service or product supplied by such utility within the municipality.

Section 7. Any municipality may frame and adopt or amend a charter for its government and may, subject to the provisions of Section 3 of this article, exercise thereunder all powers of local self-government.

Section 8. The legislative authority of any city or village may by a two-thirds vote of its members, and upon petition of ten per centum of the electors shall forthwith, provide by ordinance for the submission to the electors, of the question, "shall a commission be chosen to frame a charter." The ordinance providing for the submission of such question shall require that it be submitted to the electors at the next regular municipal election if one shall occur not less than sixty nor more than one hundred and twenty days after its passage, otherwise it shall provide for the submission of the question at a special election to be called and held within the time aforesaid. The ballot containing such question shall bear no party designation, and provision shall be made thereon for the election from the municipality at large of fifteen electors who shall constitute a commission to frame a charter, provided that a majority of the electors voting on such question shall have voted in the affirmative. Any charter so framed shall be submitted to the electors of the municipality at an election to be held at a time fixed by the charter commission and within one year from the date of its election, provision for which shall be made by the legislative authority of the municipality in so far as not prescribed by general law. Not less than thirty days prior to such election the clerk of the municipality shall mail a copy of the proposed charter to each elector whose name appears upon the poll or registration book of the last regular or general election held therein. If such proposed charter is approved by a majority of the electors voting thereon it shall become the charter of such municipality at the time fixed therein.

Section 9. Amendments to any charter framed and adopted as herein provided may be submitted to the electors of a municipality by a two-thirds vote of the legislative authority thereof and, upon petitions signed by ten per centum of the electors of the municipality setting forth any such proposed amendment, shall be submitted by such legislative authority. The submission of proposed amendments to the electors shall be governed by the requirements of Section 8 as to the submission of the question of choosing a charter commission and copies of proposed amendments shall be mailed to the electors as hereinbefore provided for copies of a proposed charter. If any such amendment is approved by a majority of the electors voting thereon, it shall become a part of the charter of the municipality. A copy of said charter or any amendment thereto shall be certified to the secretary of state, within thirty days after adoption by a referendum vote.

Section 10. A municipality appropriating or otherwise acquiring property for public use may in furtherance of such public use appropriate or acquire an excess over that actually to be occupied by the improvement, and may sell such excess with such restrictions as shall be appropriate to preserve the improvement made. Bonds may be issued to supply the funds in whole or in part to pay for the excess property so appropriated or otherwise acquired, but said bonds shall be a lien only against the property so acquired for the improvement and excess, and they shall not be a liability of the municipality nor be included in any limitation of the bonded indebtedness of such municipality prescribed by law.

Section 11. Any municipality appropriating property for a public improvement may provide money therefor in part by assessments upon benefited property not in excess of the special benefits conferred upon such property by the improvements. Said assessments, however, upon all the abutting, adjacent, and other property in the district benefited, shall in no case be levied for more than fifty per centum of the cost of such appropriation.

Section 12. Any municipality which acquires, constructs or extends any public utility and desires to raise money for such purposes may issue mortgage bonds therefor beyond the general limit of bonded indebtedness prescribed by law; provided that such mortgage bonds issued beyond the general limit of bonded indebtedness prescribed by law shall not impose any liability upon such municipality but shall be secured only upon the property and revenues of such public utility, including a franchise stating the terms upon which, in case of foreclosure, the purchaser may operate the same, which franchise shall in no case extend for a longer period than twenty years from the date of the sale of such utility and franchise on foreclosure.

Section 13. Laws may be passed to limit the power of municipalities to levy taxes and incur debts for local purposes, and may require reports from municipalities as to their financial condition and transactions, in such form as may be provided by law, and may provide for the examination of the vouchers, books and accounts of all municipal authorities, or of public undertakings conducted by such authorities.

Section 14. All elections and submissions of questions provided for in this article shall be conducted by the election authorities prescribed by general law. The percentage of electors required to sign any petition provided for herein shall be based upon the total vote cast at the last preceding general municipal election.

Didn't Get the Present.

When a three-year-old girl who lives in Twenty-fourth street was advised by her mother that the next day was the day to go to Sunday school, she opened her large, blue eyes wide and rather forlornly remarked, "Every Sunday when they call my name I say 'Present,' but they haven't given it to me yet."

In the same Sunday school, not long ago, Mrs. Thomas R. Marshall was teaching the Sunbeam class a lesson on King David, and, endeavoring to see how much of her instruction of the previous Sunday had not been lost, asked: "Who was our lesson about last Sunday?" No answer. "Don't you remember the handsome young man we talked about?" After a few moments one little hand went up.

"Well, Mary?" asked Mrs. Marshall.

"I don't remember his name," said Mary, "but he was the boy that killed the janitor."—Indianapolis News.

Trouble Heiresses Have.

"We heiresses have many rivals for our hands." "Yes," replied Miss Cayenne, "you must feel as if the pathway of life were filled with pocketbook snatchers."

Place for Molly Pitcher

Movement to Put Bust of Revolutionary Heroine in the National Hall of Fame.

The movement to place in the Hall of Fame the bust of Molly Pitcher, the only woman sergeant in the United States army, has the enthusiastic support of former Senator Chauncey M. Depew. In fact, the gallant senator from New York is always a champion for the equal rights of the ladies.

It was in the important movements of the year 1778 that at the battle of Monmouth Molly Pitcher was carrying water to her husband, who was a gunner of a battery at one piece of artillery. He was killed and the lieutenant proposed to remove the piece out of danger, when Molly said: "I can do everything my husband could," and she performed her husband's duties at the old gun better than he could have done.

The next morning she was taken before General Washington, her wonderful act was reported and its influence upon the fate of the battle, which was a victory, and Washington made her at once a sergeant in the army to stand on the rolls in that rank as long as she lived.

It seems appropriate now for us to place among the immortals and in the Hall of Fame this only woman sergeant of the United States army, who won her title fighting for her country upon the field of battle and who is the evangel of woman's rights and women's enfranchisement.—"Affairs at Washington," Joe Mitchell Chapple, in National Magazine.

The Cause.

"Why does that famous racing motorist seem so reluctant about writing his name in anyone's book?"

"I suppose it is because he was so much run after, that his autograph got on his motor nerves."

Might Have Known It.

A New Yorker suffering from stomach trouble was put under an X-ray and learned that he had swallowed his false teeth. The chump might have known it from the gnawing pain in his stomach.

Useless Without Understanding.

We may be in the universe as dogs and cats are in our libraries, seeing the books and hearing the conversation, but having no inkling of the meaning of it all.—William James.

For Protection From Frosts.

Because frosts do the most damage when the air is calm, a Paris scientist has advanced the theory that orchards and vineyards can be protected by electric fans to keep the atmosphere moving.

Will Hurry 'Em Over.

Enterprise, indeed! A motor boat is operating on the Dead sea. Next thing old Charon will have something of the kind for the ferrying on the River Styx.—Memphis News Scimitar.

Irresolution to Be Pitied.

There is nothing more pitiable in the world than an irresolute man, oscillating between two feelings, who would willingly unite the two, and who does not perceive that nothing can unite the two.—Goethe.

Our Minds Are as Children.

I think that we should treat our minds as innocent and ingenuous children whose guardians we are, be careful what objects and subjects we thrust on their attention.—Thoreau.

IOWA WOMAN WELL AGAIN

Freed From Shooting Pains, Spinal Weakness, Dizziness, by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Ottumwa, Iowa.—"For years I was almost a constant sufferer from female trouble in all its dreadful forms; shooting pains all over my body, sick headache, spinal weakness, dizziness, depression, and everything that was horrid. I tried many doctors in different parts of the United States, but Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has done more for me than all the doctors. I feel it my duty to tell you these facts. My heart is full of gratitude to Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound for my health."—Mrs. HARRIET E. WAMPLER, 524 S. Ransom Street, Ottumwa, Iowa.

Consider Well This Advice.

No woman suffering from any form of female troubles should lose hope until she has given Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a fair trial.

This famous remedy, the medicinal ingredients of which are derived from native roots and herbs, has for nearly forty years proved to be a most valuable tonic and invigorator of the female organism. Women everywhere bear willing testimony to the wonderful virtue of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

If you want special advice write to Lydia E. Pinkham Medicine Co. (confidential) Lynn, Mass. Your letter will be opened, read and answered by a woman and held in strict confidence.

If you would discover a woman's weakness, keep quiet and listen.

A postal card to Garfield Tea Co., Brooklyn, N. Y., asking for sample will repay you.

Yet Solomon in all his glory never wore an opera hat that would open and shut.

The Paxton Toilet Co. of Boston, Mass., will send a large trial box of Paxtine Antiseptic, a delightful cleansing and germicidal toilet preparation, to any woman free, upon request.

A Prediction.

"Do you think Biffels will ever reach a green old age?"

"He surely will, if he lives long enough and doesn't know more then than he does now."

Had Them.

"Do you keep motoring accessories?" asked the man entering the department store.

"Oh, yes," replied the floorwalker, with a bow, "we keep arnica and witch hazel. Drug department, second aisle to the left, please!"

DURING THE DISCUSSION.

Mr. Spat—Now, if you'll just listen to me—

Mrs. Spat—Oh, you can't convince me.

Mr. Spat—Probably not, but if we're going to spend the rest of the night in argument I want my share of the time.

DOCTOR'S SHIFT.

Now Gets Along Without It.

A physician says: "Until last fall I used to eat meat for my breakfast and suffered with indigestion until the meat had passed from the stomach.

"Last fall I began the use of Grape-Nuts for breakfast and very soon found I could do without meat, for my body got all the nourishment necessary from the Grape-Nuts and since then I have not had any indigestion and am feeling better and have increased in weight.

"Since finding the benefit I derived from Grape-Nuts I have prescribed the food for all my patients suffering from indigestion or over-feeding and also for those recovering from disease where I want a food easy to take and certain to digest and which will not overtax the stomach.

"I always find the results I look for when I prescribe Grape-Nuts. For ethical reasons please omit my name." Name given by mail by Postum Co., Battle Creek, Mich.

The reason for the wonderful amount of nutriment and the easy digestion of Grape-Nuts is not hard to find.

In the first place, the starchy part of the wheat and barley goes through various processes of cooking, to perfectly change the starch into dextrose or grape-sugar, in which state it is ready to be easily absorbed by the blood.

The parts in the wheat and barley which Nature can make use of for rebuilding brain and nerve centers are retained in this remarkable food, and thus the human body is supplied with the powerful strength producers, so easily noticed after one has eaten Grape-Nuts each day for a week or ten days.

"There's a reason," and it is explained in the little book, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs.

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true, and full of human interest.

SYNOPSIS.

Dan Blair, the 22-year-old son of the fifty-million-dollar copper king of Blairtown, Mont., is a guest at the English home of Lady Galorey. Dan's father had been courteous to Lord Galorey during his visit to the United States and the courtesy is now being returned to the young man. The youth has an ideal girl in his mind. He meets Lily, Duchess of Breakwater, a beautiful widow, who is attracted by his immense fortune and takes a liking to her. When Dan was a boy, a girl sang a solo at a church, and he had never forgotten her. The Galoreys, Lily and Dan attend a London theater where one Letty Lane is the star. Dan recognizes her as the girl from his town, and going behind the scenes introduces himself and she remembers him. He learns that Prince Poniatowsky is [illegible] Lady Galorey and a friend named Ruggles determine to protect the westerner from Lily and other fortune hunters. Young Blair goes to see Lily; he can talk of nothing but Letty and this angers the Duchess. The westerner finds Letty ill from hard work, but she recovers and Ruggles and Dan invite her to supper. She asks Dan to build a home for disappointed theatrical people. Dan visits Lily, for the time forgetting Letty, and later announces his engagement to the duchess. Letty refuses to sing for an entertainment given by Lily. Galorey tells Dan that all Lily cares for is his money, and it is disclosed that he and the duchess have been mutually in love for years. Letty sings at an aristocratic function, Dan escorting her home. Dan confronts Galorey and Lily together. Later he informs Letty that his engagement with Lily is broken, asks the singer to marry him, and they become engaged.

CHAPTER XXIV.

Ruggles' Offer.

He felt as he waited for her in that flower-filled room, for she had recovered from her distaste for flowers, as he glanced at the photographs of women like herself in costumes more or less frank, more or less vulgar, he felt as though he wanted to knock down the walls and let in a big view of the west—of Montana—of the hills. With such a setting he thought he could better talk with the lady whom he had come to see.

Ruggles held an unlighted cigar between his fingers and gooseflesh rose all over him. His glasses bothered him. He couldn't get them bright enough, though he polished them half a dozen times on his silk handkerchief. His clothes felt too large. He seemed to have shrunken. He moistened his lips, cleared his throat, tried to remember what kind of fellow he had been at Dan's age. At Dan's age he was selling a suspender patent on the road, supporting his mother and his sisters—hard work and few temptations, he was too tired and too poor.

Miss Lane kept him waiting ten minutes, and they were hours to her guest. He was afraid every minute that Dan would come in. The thoughts he had gathered together, the plan of action, disarranged itself in his mind every time he thought of the actress. He couldn't forget his vision of her on the stage or at the Carlton, where she had sat opposite them and bewitched them both. When she came into the sitting-room at length, he started so violently that he knocked over a vase of flowers, the water trickling all over the table down on to the floor.

She had dazzled him before the footlights, charmed him at dinner, and it was singular to think that he knew how this dignified, quiet creature looked in ballet clothes and in a dinner dress, whose frankness had made him catch his breath. It was a third woman who stood before Ruggles now. He had [illegible] consideration. She had expected him, saw him by appointment. She had not climbed to her starry position without having acquired a knowledge of men, and it was the secret of her success. She showed it in the dress in which she received her visitor. She wore a short walking skirt of heavy serge, a simple shirtwaist belted around, a sailor hat on her beautiful little head. She was unjeweled and unpainted, very pale and very sweet. If it had not been for the marks of fatigue under her eyes, she would not have looked more than eighteen. On her left hand a single diamond, clear as water, caught the refracted light.

"How-de-do? Glad you are back again."

She gave him a big chair and sat down before him smiling. Leaning her elbows on her knees, she sank her face upon her hands and looked at him, not coquettishly in the least, but as a child might have looked. From her small feet to her golden head she was utterly charming.

Ruggles made himself think of Dan. Miss Lane spoke slowly, nodding toward him, in her languid voice: "It's no use, Mr. Ruggles, no use."

Holding her face between her hands, her eyes gray as winter's seas and as profound, she looked at him intently; then, in a flash, she changed her position and instantly transformed her character. He saw that she was a woman, not an eighteen-year-old girl, but a woman, clever, poised, witty, understanding, and that she might have been twenty years older than the boy.

"I'm sorry you spoke so quick," he said.

"I know," she interrupted, "just what you wanted to say from the start. I couldn't help it, could I? I knew you would want to come and see me about it. It isn't any use. I know just what you are going to say."

"No, ma'am," he returned, "I don't believe you do—bright as you are."

Ruggles gazed thoughtfully at the cold end of his unlighted cigar. It was a comfort to him to hold it and to look at it, although not for anything in the world would he have asked to light it.

"Dan's father and me were chums. We went through pretty much together, and I know how he felt on most points. He was a man of few words, but I know he counted on me to stand by the boy."

Ruggles was so chivalrous that his role at present cost him keen discomfort.

"A lady like you," he said gently, "knows a great deal more about how things are done than either Dan or me. We ain't tenderfeet in the west, not by a long shot, but we see so few of a certain kind of picture shows that when they do come round they're likely to make us lose our minds! You know, yourself, a circus in a town fifty miles from a railroad drives the people crazy. Now, Dan's a little like the boy with his eyes on the hole in the tent. He would commit murder to get inside and see that show." He nodded and smiled to her as though he expected her to follow his crude simile. "Now, I have seen you a lot of times." And she couldn't help reminding him, "Not of your own accord, Mr. Ruggles."

"Well, I don't know," he slowly admitted, "I always felt I had my money's worth, and the night you ate with us at the Carlton I understood pretty well how the boy with his eyes at the tent hole would feel." But he tapped his broad chest with the hand that held the cigar between the first and second fingers. "I know just what kind of a heart you've got, for I waited at the stage door and I know you don't get all the applause inside the Gaiety theater."

"Goodness," she murmured, "they make an awful fuss about nothing."

"Now," he continued, leaning forward a trifle toward her languid, half interested figure, "I just want you to think of him as a 'little boy.' He's only twenty-two. He knows nothing of the world. The money you give to the poor doesn't come so hard perhaps as this will. It's a big sacrifice, but I want you to let the boy go."

"Dan's Father and Me Were Chums."

She smiled slightly, found her handkerchief, which was tucked up the cuff of her blouse, pressed the little bit of linen to her lips as though to steady them, then she asked abruptly:

"What has he said to you?"

"Lord!" Ruggles groaned. "Said to me! My dear young lady, he is much too rude to speak. Dan sort of breathes and snorts around like a lunatic. He was dangling around that duchess when I was here before, but she didn't scare me any."

And Letty Lane, now smiling at him, relieved by his break from a more intense tone, asked:

"Now, you are scared?"

"Well," Ruggles drawled, "I was pretty sure that woman didn't care anything for the boy. Are you her kind?"

It was the best stroke he had made. She almost sprang up from her chair.

"Heavens," she exclaimed, "I guess I'm not!" Her face flushed.

"I had rather see a son of mine dead than married to a woman like that," he said.

"Why, Mr. Ruggles," she exclaimed passionately, addressing him with interest for the first time, "what do you know about me? What? What? You have seen me dance and heard me sing."

And he interrupted her.

"Ten times, and you are a bully dancer and a bully singer, but you do other things than dance and sing. There is not a man living that would want to have his mother dress that way."

She controlled a smile. "Never mind that. People's opinions are very different about that sort of thing. You have seen me at dinner with your boy, as you call him, and you can't say that I did anything but ask him to help the poor. I haven't led Dan on. I have tried to show him just what you are making me go through now."

If she acted well and danced well, it was hard for her to talk. She was evidently under strong emotion and it needed her control not to burst into tears and lose her chance.

"Of course, I know the things you have heard. Of course, I know what is said about me"—and she stopped.

Ruggles didn't press her any further; he didn't ask her if the things were true. Looking at her as he did, watching her as he did, there was in him a feeling so new, so troubling that he found himself more anxious to protect her than to bring her to justice.

"There are worse, far worse women than I am, Mr. Ruggles. I will never do Dan any harm."

Here her visitor leaned forward and put one of his big hands lightly over one of hers, patted it a moment, and said:

"I want you to do a great deal better than that."

She had picked up a photograph off the table, a pretty picture of herself in "Mandalay," and turned it nervously between her fingers as she said with irritation:

"I haven't been in the theatrical world not to guess at this 'Worried Father' act, Mr. Ruggles. I told you I knew just what you were going to say."

"Wrong!" he repeated. "The business is old enough perhaps, lots of good jobs are old, but this is a little different."

He took the turning picture and laid it on the table, and quietly possessed himself of the small cold hands. Blair's solitaire shone up to him. Ruggles looked into Letty Lane's eyes. "He is only twenty-two, it ain't fair, it ain't fair. He could count the times he has been on a lark, I guess. He hasn't even been to an eastern college. He is no fool, but he's darned simple."

She smiled faintly. The man's face, near her own, was very simple indeed.

"You have seen so much," he urged, "so many fellows. You have been such a queen, I dare say you could get any man you wanted." He repeated, "Most any man."

"I have never seen any one like Dan."

"Just so: he ain't your kind. That is what I am trying to tell you."

She withdrew her hand from his violently.

"There you are wrong. He is my kind. He is what I like, and he is what I want to be like."

A wave of red dyed her face, and, in a tone more passionate than she had ever used to her lover, she said to Ruggles:

"I love him—I love him!" Her words sent something like a sword through the older man's heart. He said gently: "Don't say it. He don't know what love means yet."

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

Vanity.

A real friendship with a vain woman lacks comfort and sincerity. Wound for a second her vanity and the friendship snaps. Many people wonder at the attraction of women who are undeniably plain, but it often has its root in the fact that they are lacking in vanity. They are not constantly absorbed in their own charms, so have time to admire those of other people, consequently they are seldom lacking in friends.

Vanity is not altogether an attribute of the grown-up. One sees it frequently developed to an alarming extent in young children. Nor is it a matter for amusement. Rather should every mother strive to uproot this tendency. Ridicule is one of the swiftest ways of extinguishing it.

Children should be taught not to attach importance to whatever physical charms they may possess. Beautiful eyes, a lovely mouth or a delightful nose should not be subjects of comment, but if commented upon at all should be lightly done, for no child should be started in life with the handicap of vanity.—Exchange.

To Get Rid of Snails.

A friend whose large garden was being overrun with snails wrote to the bureau of agriculture at Washington for a remedy. She was told to put large pieces of cut raw potato on the under side of a board, raised at one end, a few inches from the ground. This she did, with the result that in one week a thousand snails had collected in that one spot.

BURNING ITCH WAS CURED

"I deem it my duty to tell about a cure that the Cuticura Soap and Ointment have made on myself. My trouble began in splotches breaking out right in the edge of my hair on the forehead, and spread over the front part of the top of my head from ear to ear, and over my ears which caused a most fearful burning itch, or eczema.

"For three years I had this terrible breaking out on my forehead and scalp. I tried our family doctor and he failed to cure it. Then I tried the Cuticura Soap and Ointment and used them for two months with the result of a complete cure. Cuticura Soap and Ointment should have the credit due, and I have advised a lot of people to use them." (Signed) C. D. Tharrington, Creek, N. C., Jan. 26, 1911.

Itching Scalp—Hair Fell Out.

"I will say that I have been suffering with an itching on my scalp for the past few years. My hair fell out in spots all over my head. My scalp started to trouble me with sores, then the sores healed up, and crusts formed on the top. Then the hair fell out and left me three bald spots the shape of a half dollar. I went to more than one doctor, but could not get any relief, so I started to use the Cuticura Remedies. I tried one bar of Cuticura Soap and some Cuticura Ointment, and felt relieved right away. Now the bald spots have disappeared, and my hair has grown, thanks to the Cuticura Soap and Ointment. I highly recommend the Cuticura Remedies to all that are suffering with scalp trouble." (Signed) Samuel Stern, 236 Floyd St., Brooklyn, N. Y., Feb. 7, 1911. Although Cuticura Soap and Ointment are sold by druggists and dealers everywhere, a sample of each, with 32-page book, will be mailed free on application to "Cuticura," Dept. L, Boston.

Miss Gertrude Standon was visiting friends in Perry Sunday.

Mr. and Mrs. Will Abbott of Nottingham spent Sunday with Mr. Max Crane and family.

Mrs. J. J. South of Ashtabula, and daughter, were the guests of Mrs. F. B. Tenney last week. Mrs. Tenney returned home with them and was their guest over Sunday.

Miss Olive Shook of Perry, and Mrs. John Averill of Madison spent Friday in Cleveland.

The marriage of Miss Ruth Nye of Perry, to Mr. Frank Wright of Painesville, was solemnized Wednesday at 2 o'clock, at the home of the bride's parents.

Miss Ruth Nye took supper with her old classmate and friend Miss Esther Wood, Monday evening.

When the drummer said Perry was the garden spot of Western Reserve he spoke aptly. Fruit and vegetables are shipped daily to the city and scores of men and women, girls and boys, find employment caring for and picking these products. Last Monday 700 bushels of strawberries were shipped from Perry, and this Monday 500 bushels. Beside the berries, cherries are being sent off by the peck and bushel.

Wright had endeared himself to the people here and a large congregation listened to his last sermon as pastor here Sunday.

Mr. and Mrs. Paul Darrell and daughter of Unionville, spent Sunday with Mrs. Darrell's mother, Mrs. Skillthorpe.

It has become customary to make formal calls at 4 p. m. There are a few persons in Perry who make their calls somewhat sooner — t a. m. Several ladies of the town take morning constitutionals and walk several miles before breakfast, often calling at farmhouses before the owners have arisen. These morning walks are doubly useful. Beside being beneficial to the pedestrians they serve to keep the town wide awake. For who wishes to be found sleeping when callers come.

The West family reunion was held at the home of R. S. West Saturday. After dinner the guests all accompanied the host and hostess to the services a St. Anne's church.

Misses Helen and Marion Flory, daughters of the former pastor of the M. E. church are spending a few weeks at the home of A. M. Thompson.

Mr. Floyd Stephens left Sunday for Pennsylvania, from whence he will start Wednesday for North Dakota to commence the harvest season there.

It is now well known that not more than one case of rheumatism in ten requires any internal treatment whatever. All that is needed is a free application of Chamberlain's Liniment and massaging the parts at each application. Try it and see how quickly it will relieve the pain and soreness. Sold by all dealers.

HEROES IN DAILY LIFE

NOT ALL BRAVE DEEDS ARE DONE ON FIELD OF BATTLE.

Demand of Duty Responded to, Frequently With Sublime Heroism, in the Common, Every Day Walks of Humdrum Employment.

While war, in the very nature of things, abounds in opportunities for valorous exploits, and its every deed is written large on the page of history, the humbler and quieter sphere of private life affords even more and keener opportunities for the display of true heroism, writes Geo. H. M. Chittendon in The Forum. The physician or nurse who voluntarily goes into a plague stricken district, the miner who braves the fire-damp to rescue his imprisoned fellows, the crew who stand at their posts while their vessel is sinking, the fireman who scales a tottering wall to save a human life, the patrolman who enters a den of desperadoes at imminent personal risk—whoever, in the pursuance of duty, no matter how humble, subordinates his personal safety to that duty—is as much entitled to the commendation of heroism as a soldier who does his duty in war can possibly be.

War against physical nature and the evils of human nature, and their ultimate subjugation to the intellectual and spiritual dominion of man, constitute a struggle which will give ample scope to the energies of the race beyond our remotest ken. We cannot even guess its ultimate possibilities; but so long as there are mountain barriers to be overcome, floods to be controlled, deserts and swamps to be reclaimed; or so long as men are denied equal opportunities, and "predatory wealth" has any other than a historic meaning, man need not feel that war is necessary to call forth the best there is in him.

The age of true heroism, the age of the ideal "strenuous life"—when some philosopher of the distant future shall write a history of civilization—will not be that of Alexander or Caesar or Napoleon, but of those later periods when the energy of the race is directed to friendly co-operation instead of bloody conflict or incessant preparation therefor. It will be an age in which every virtue of militarism will find a higher and fuller expression, while its manifest vices, and particularly the horrors of war, will be laid aside. Let nations wage all the Panama wars that they like—the more the better—but let them outgrow as rapidly as possible their Gravelottes and Plevnas and Port Arthurs.

Westminster Abbey in History.

Westminster Abbey has played a more important part in the world's history in the last thousand years than any other one building. It is believed to be two thousand years since the first building was put where the present abbey stands. That was a heathen temple. It is supposed this was pulled down in the year 174 to make room for a church which a British king named Lucius built in order that he might have the Christian faith taught.

HE LEFT BUSYBODY THINKING

Urchin's Line of Fun With Man Who Needs Must Pry Into Other People's Business.

The small urchin climbed up the car steps and wormed himself into a seat beside the Busybody. The basket he was carrying the youngster fixed carefully between his feet, with several anxious glances in the process.

"What have you in that basket, my boy?" asked his neighbor, bending over confidentially. "I noticed how careful you were of it. It must be something quite valuable. Isn't it?"

"Ye're hep, old sport. It's somethin' that's worth a whole heap."

"Well, won't you tell me what it is?"

"Not on yer life! Thing I want to get pinched?"

This was too much for the Busybody. His curiosity, heretofore merely casual, grew suddenly pointed, and he bit.

"Well, sonny, I've a notion that if I gave you a nickel you'd tell me what you had in that basket."

"Make it a dime, and I'll do it!" whispered the boy. "Only ye've got to promise not to give me away to de cop."

"Why, of course I'll promise."

The boy pocketed the coin. "Well, sport, dey's a baby in dere. I hooked 'im, an' put 'im inside when dey wasn't nobody lookin'. Now I'll get a reward for returnin' 'im."

"Why, you young villain! Do you mean to say you have a baby in that basket? Lying in that thing will kill it. Where did you get it?"

"Oh, I picked it up in front o' one o' dem big stores. It was all alone, so I jus' took it. I guess it won't be missed, an' I wanted one, any way."

"Not be missed! See here, you young blackguard! Do you mean to say that its mother had deserted it?"

"Sure! Its mudder wasn't nowhere round."

"How old is it?"

"Oh, a few months, I guess. Big enough to squeal—so I tied a rag round its mouf."

"Well, lift up the cover and let me see how it looks."

"Hol' on, ol' top. You promised not to give me away."

"Yes, but I didn't expect—" and he lifted the cover and glanced at what was underneath. Curled up on an old cloth, and sleeping comfortably, was an insignificant looking yellow puppy.

The boy jumped up and grinned, "Well, here's where I get off. Thanks for de dime. An' say, I'll tell ye one ten times as good as that for a quarter. Come an' see me some time at me salloon on Fift' Avenoo! So long!"

Little Basques' Responsibilities.

In "Children at Play and Other Sketches," by Rose M. Bradley, we are introduced to the sunny little Basque boys and girls, playing hide and seek games late into the summer nights, says the London Queen. It seems that the Basque lads have to learn French twice over: they are taught in school the first time, but such is their patriotic independence (or is it the line of least resistance?) that they lose what they have learned, and the penalty of this "deliberate forgetfulness" is that in their conscript days they have the mortification and pain of learning it all over again! But, pleasure seekers as the young natives may be, there are duties also for even babes to perform. It may seem incredible that a little barelegged boy of 8 or 9 should be the trusted lamplighter of the district, yet so it is, and it is far more astounding to read of a "railway official" of 4 or 5, who may be seen "seated upon a minute chair on the platform grasping a red flag, which it is his business to wave when a train approaches, presumably as a warning to his brethren and the chickens who play unconcernedly upon the rails . . . He feels that the responsibility of the traffic of the whole line to Bayonne rests upon his little shoulders."

Guayule, the Rubber Plant.

Guayule was for years overlooked or despised; its rubber content was considered of little or no value, and when at last acknowledged this was said to be inferior to other rubber because it did not come from the tropics. Yet in spite of all guayule has become an important source of rubber supply, millions of dollars have been invested in the industry, factories have been erected close to the guayule fields and towns have grown up for the operatives and field laborers.

Every process of the production of rubber from the plant has been developed into a system; even gathering the shrub receives more care than at first; but the essence of the whole problem, that is, the propagation of guayule so that a continuous supply may be assured, is as yet unsolved, and if once the land is completely cleared and the chances of renewal lost the industry will wither and die, and the busy areas of today will become depopulated and revert to the wilderness.

What Ailed Him.

"I want you to tell me plainly, doctor," said the man with the fat government position, "what is the matter with me."

"Well, sir," answered the old doctor, leaning back in his chair and looking at his beefy, red-faced patient, "you are suffering from underwork and overpay."

In the Eye.

"That man is very much in the public eye."

"Yes," replied Senator Sorghum: "he is as irritating as a cinder from a locomotive."

Must Be So.

"Sadie," said a mother to her small daughter, "why is it that you and your little brother are always quarreling?" "I don't know," replied Sadie, "unless I take after you and he takes after papa."

Resentful Recollections.

"Did they make you recite 'Little Drops of Water' when you were a child?" "Yes," replied Colonel Stillwell. "And it didn't stop there. When I grew up they tried to insist on my adopting them as a beverage."

CAUSES OF APOPLEXY

PRIMARILY RECOGNIZED AS ACCOMPANIMENT OF OLD AGE.

Undue Worry, Even in Those of Comparatively Youthful Years, Will Also Induce Dreaded Malady—Victims Sometimes Recover.

The word "apoplexy" generally means a sudden paralysis caused by the rupture of a blood vessel in the brain; it is popularly called a "stroke." It is a result of a softening of the arteries that often follows primary hardening or arteriosclerosis.

The disease is a common accompaniment of old age, so common indeed that it is regarded by many as the one characteristic senile change.

It is not confined to old age, however, for many comparatively young men who have gone too fast and too far in the pursuit of wealth or who have met with reverses and have worried unduly over them have hardening arteries and are killed or disabled by apoplexy.

In their hardened blood vessels there may be softening spots which, bulged by the hydraulic pressure of the blood, form little aneurisms. A little extra strain on the vessels, caused by some violent emotion or the lifting of a heavy weight or running to catch a train may then rupture one or more of these little aneurisms and so let the blood pour into the brain tissue.

If the blood escapes rapidly and in large amount it causes immediate loss of consciousness and paralysis; if the blood escapes gradually and in small amount it causes either severe headache and tingling and numbness in one or more of the limbs, or progressive loss of power, gradual dulling of the mental faculties and ultimate unconsciousness.

Apoplexy is not always fatal; indeed complete recovery without any paralysis sometimes occurs. The sufferer's immediate fate is commonly decided in two or three days—either he dies without regaining consciousness or his mental faculties gradually return. He is then seen to be paralyzed in either one arm or in one leg, or in one side of the face, or in all three.

In less serious cases the paralysis lessens, the facial expression becomes or. Even when the paralysis is permanent there is almost always more or less improvement for some weeks after the stroke.

Apoplexy can be treated only by the physician, but those who fear an attack can do much to avert it. Quiet and calm should for them be the rule of life. They should never make any severe muscular effort. They should never run for cars or climb stairs quickly. They should avoid hearty meals and the drinking of much fluid, even water, at any one time.—Youth's Companion.

Parrot's Shrieks Start Murder Scare

A large green parrot, supposed to have escaped from the Oceana of the Bermuda line, stopped traffic at Montgomery and Washington streets, Jersey City, and stayed on the job until it had called out the police reserves and the fire apparatus, says the New York Evening World.

Crowds on their way to work were startled to hear loud shrieks coming from an upper floor of the Lincoln Trust company building.

"It's a murder!" said a fat man.

"It's a foreign lady," declared the fat man. "Why don't somebody save her?"

Hundreds of people crowded the streets, when Myrtle Grady, head porter of the trust company, found the bird in a small recess under the eaves.

Why Clink Glasses?

"What have you got against that man at the corner table?" asked the bartender of the regular customer. "That was a positive insult you handed him a minute ago. You never offered to clink glasses with him."

"What's the use?" said the customer. "He is deaf, and deaf men seldom clink glasses. Why should they? They couldn't hear it. People only clink glasses to satisfy the fifth sense. At any rate that was why the originators of the practice did it, and succeeding generations have perpetuated the custom. In the ordinary process of quaffing a glass of liquor we are inevitably bound to see the stuff, touch it, smell it, and taste it. That leaves the ear alone unsatisfied. So we clink for its gratification."

Outlook Promising.

"And how are you liking your husband?" asked one.

"Oh, he's steady," returned the other; "he don't drink, he stays home nights, and I kind o' think I'm going to like him."

How fortunate! thought the woman.

One of Nature's Noblemen.

"Money don't seem to have spoiled Mr. Winkerson a bit."

"I know it. He's just the same as ever. Last night him and his wife come over to play bridge with my husband and I, and he never done a thing to show that he didn't think folks that hadn't money was just as good as anybody, so long as they was refined."—Judge.

Discovery of Little Use.

An amateur chemist recently discovered an explosive believed to be 15 times as powerful as dynamite, but the secret of its composition was lost at the time of its discovery, together with the chemist and most of the glass in the town.

"Life," says Ali Baba, "is the interval between the time your teeth are almost through and you are almost through with your teeth."

New Mental Stimulation.

Some people live in ruts and think in ruts. They vary their lives little, and the routine of their thoughts less and their bodies get stodgy. Their eyes are lusterless, their skin becomes sallow, they need waking up, and their wakening needs to be mental. They want mental stimulation, and if this stimulation is to show itself forth in the form of beauty, it should be pleasant.

Where Messengers Are Sent.

The chairman of the London District Messenger company, in presenting a messenger boy with a medal for efficiency shown in bearing a special message to Liege and Brussels, said that messengers of the company had repeatedly been sent from London to Italy, Switzerland, Turkey, France, Germany, America and South Africa.

Pilgrims to the Holy Land.

Many Christian pilgrims annually visit the Holy Land in Syria, but compared with the number of Mohammedan pilgrims who visit their Holy Land in Arabia, the Christian pilgrims are few. Every Mohammedan feels it a duty to visit before he dies, both Mecca and Medina, the birthplace and burial place of their prophet.

'Tis Generally.

"Gent" is the most offensive of all abbreviations, and Justice Wightman once construed it very aptly. In a case tried before him a witness referred to one of the parties as "an independent gent." "An independent what?" said Wightman. "A gent, my lord," repeated the witness. "Oh, I understand," replied the judge, "that's something short of a gentleman, isn't it?"—London Chronicle.

Knew Nothing of Brain's Function.

Old writers had no idea that the brain had anything to do with the mind. They associated the mind with the heart or with other organs of the body, doubtless because these organs are moved or affected by mental action. Aristotle, the best informed of the Greeks, said that the chief business of the brain was to cool the blood for the heart.

Ordinance 872

WILSON AND MARSHALL

Nominated for President and Vice President at Baltimore

Baltimore, July 3.—Marshall was nominated by acclamation for Vice-President after the second ballot. He had 645½ to Burke's 387½ on the second.

The first ballot stood: Marshall, 389; Burke, 305 2-3; Chamberlin, 187; Hurst, 77; Preston, 58; McComb, 18; Osborn, 9; Sulzer, 3; Wade, 26; absent, 46 1-3.

Baltimore, July 2.—Hailed as the man whose aim in life is service to society, Woodrow Wilson, governor of New Jersey, was nominated today as the Democratic candidate for president of the United States.

The nomination came after one of the most sensational struggles ever witnessed in a national convention. It was a long fight. The convention was in its eighth day. The fight was between Speaker Champ Clark and Woodrow Wilson. At one time Clark had more than half of the 1088 delegates. Then Wilson began to creep up. On Monday Wilson passed Clark. When the convention convened today the opening roll call was the forty-third. Wilson's nomination was accomplished in the forty-sixth ballot. The vote: Wilson, 992; Clark, 84; Harmon, 10½; absent 1½. It required 726 to nominate.

This roll call was finished at 3:31. The nomination was made unanimous two minutes later. The convention adjourned at 4:42, until 9 o'clock. There remained yet as the work of the body the nomination of a vice-president and the adoption of a platform. The platform was ready. It had been written, practically, by William Jennings Bryan. Tonight it was adopted.

Baltimore, July 2.—Scenes of wild enthusiasm marked the long expected landslide to Wilson this afternoon. The delegates, wan and haggard from a week's struggle apparently without progress, mounted their chairs, and as each state fell into line behind the New Jersey governor, sent cheer after cheer through the great hall.

The aisles were filled with frantic men, dancing, hugging each other and yelling like maniacs.

The New Jersey delegates, their eyes wet with tears of joy, rushed about the hall shaking hands with every man who would stand still long enough and predicting a vote for Wilson this fall greater than has been given any president in the history of the republic.

The convention hall began to fill by 11 o'clock, but delegates, wearied with long night sessions and monotonous roll calls, were late appearing. Free admission again was an attraction for the crowds, which filled the galleries and massed solidly in the areas flanking and back of the delegates. Cool breezes through the upper windows added comfort to the day and kept the flags fluttering.

Woodrow Wilson—Scholar and Politician

BORN at Staunton, Va., Dec. 28, 1856, son of Dr. Joseph R. Wilson, a Presbyterian minister, and Grandson of Judge James Wilson, long the manager of the Aurora, a leading Democratic Journal in Philadelphia, then the national capital. His early life was that of a quiet, studious young man.

EDUCATED at Princeton, which he entered in 1875. Was graduate in the famous class of 1879, of which forty-two of the 122 graduating were "honor men," having an average of 90 per cent. or better for the four-year course. Christened Jams Woodrow Wilson, it was when he entered Princeton that he dropped his Christian name and became known as Woodrow Wilson.

LITERARY ABILITY developed in Wilson early in his college career, when he became editor of his college paper. Early gained reputation as debater and orator. At 22 he contributed to the International Review an article entitled "Cabinet Government in the United States."

MARRIED in 1883 to Miss Ellen Louise Axson, of a prominent Georgia family, two years after he had opened a law office in Atlanta, after having gone through the law course of the University of Virginia. Took a two-year course in the science of government at John Hopkins University.

WON FIRST SPURS as an instructor at Bryn Mawr, where, in 1885, he taught the girls political economy. Went from there to Weslyan University, where he remained until 1890, when he accepted the chair of jurisprudence and politics at Princeton. In 1902 he was elected president of Princeton.

CONTINUOUS CONFLICT between Wilson and college trustees marked his term as president. He urged progressive ideas. His freinds termed the controversy a conflict between a progressive and democratic president and the forces of privilege and aristocracy.

RESIGNED as head of Princeton in September, 1910, to accept New Jersey Democratic nomination for governor and was elected the following November.

PROGRESSIVEISM in its last word marked Wilson's first year as governor. He forced through a Democratic assembly and Republican senate a direct primary and election law, which took the organization of both parties in New Jersey out of the hands of the bosses. He is one of the stanchest supporters of the initiative, referendum and recall.

HARSHEST CRITICISM has come to Wilson because of his greatest literary effort, his five-volume "History of the American People." Certain views he expressed in this work concerning immigration made political capital for his opponents.

NOMINATED for president of the United States by the Democrats at Baltimore July 2, 1912 after a deadlock, forty-six ballots being necessary to make a choice.

TWO CHOSEN.

The Deadlock in Lake County Humane Society Broken.

The directors of Lake County Humane Society held another meeting on Saturday last and broke the deadlock over the choice of the humane agent.

Mr. L. A. Thorp of Painesville has held this office for the past year and has given good satisfaction. There was really no fight against Mr. Thorp, but there was a free-for-all contest, and the friends of the respective candidates stood by their men. The contest was settled Saturday by the selection of Sheriff Baker as agent for six months, and Sultan St. John to follow with a six months' term.

The office pays about $15 per month.

$100 Per Plate

was paid at a banquet to Henry Clay in New Orleans in 1842. Mighty costly for those with stomach trouble or indigestion. Today people everywhere use Dr. King's New Life Pills for these troubles as well as liver, kidney and bowel disorders. Easy, safe, sure. Only 25c at Barnes' Pharmacy.

FRUIT PROSPECTS

APPLES WILL BE NOT MORE THAN HALF A CROP.

Blackberries and Raspberries Promise Well, but Rain is Needed to Insure Good Yield.

Apples will be higher in price this year than last. Reports received by N. E. Shaw, State nursery and orchard inspector, indicate that Ohio's apple crop this year will be only 50 per cent. of that of last year. Bloom was exceedingly heavy, but much of it failed to get fruit, especially in farm orchards and commercial orchards lacking fertility humus. Because of the severe winter the peach crop will be much lighter than last year.

From Sandusky east to Conneaut, there are no peaches to be seen. The blighting effect of the cold weather was probably felt more in this belt than any other. Probably two per cent. of the peach trees in this district were killed. Two months ago the injury seemed to be more serious than this, but many trees recovered from the injury and give promise of productiveness.

Raspberries and blackberries with suitable weather will yield well. Black raspberries are now ripe in Southern Ohio.

Considering the protracted drouth the preceding summer and unusually severe winter, prospects for fruit are better than was expected.

HOTCHKISS-HUNGERFORD

Well-Known Business Man of Leroy Marries a Former Painesville Teacher.

We clip the following from last Friday's Telegraph-Republican:

The wedding Thursday at Thompson of Miss Rose S. Hotchkiss and Victor J. Hungerford was celebrated at the home of the bride's parents, Mr. and Mrs. L. A. Hotchkiss, which had been prettily decorated for the occasion with roses and other blossoms. The ceremony was performed by Rev. Frank Dunn of the Thompson Congregational church and the bride and groom were unattended. The bride wore a beautiful gown of white, the gift of her brother.

After the ceremony a wedding dinner was served on the lawn and among those present were: Mr. and Mrs. V. O. Hungerford and children, Mr. and Mrs. F. G. Johnson and children, Mrs. M. E. Clark and O. M. O. Heard, of Willow Manse, Painesville; Mrs. James E. Andrews and daughters, Misses Ogilo, Iowa and Mary, Port Pierce, Fla.; Miss Mary Strong, Thompson, Miss Leona Hungerford, Mr. and Mrs. James Edmunds and daughter, Miss Arthanoa, Perry; Mr. and Mrs. A. D. Nighman, Leroy; Dr. and Mrs. S. Sivon, Cleveland.

Mrs. Hungerford is well and favorably known in Painesville, where she was principal of a kindergarten for several years. Later she taught school in Leroy. Mr. Hungerford is equally well known here and is a prominent Leroy farmer.

Mr. and Mrs. Hungerford will make their home at the Hungerford home in Leroy.

Attention, Farmers!

The Ohio State Board of Agriculture will soon assign four farmer institutes in each county. If application has not already been made for one of these meetings it should be done at once. Many new places will be given an institute if it is asked for. Owners of pure bred live stock, by sending eight cents in postage, will receive a copy of the new Roster of owners of pure bred live stock in Ohio. This book is the first of its kind in the state. It shows the owners of pure bred stock by counties and their address and the kind of stock owned. It is generously illustrated with first prize winners at last year State Fair. It also contains a brief history of each breed.

For the asking a copy of the report of the annual meeting of the State Board of Agriculture, held at Columbus, January 10 and 11, 1912, will be sent. This book contains the addresses of a number of prominent men upon live topics of the day. The supply of these interesting books is limited.

The State Serum Farm, 15 miles east of Columbus, is nearing completion. This plant will be the greatest of its kind in the world and will cost over one hundred thousand dollars. At this place will be manufactured serum which will absolutely prevent hog cholera if the animal is immunized before the disease attacks it.

At the present time hog cholera is at a low ebb in Ohio. Last season this plague swept away thousands of animals causing a daily loss to Ohio farmers, for several weeks, of over $25,000. Over seven thousand farms had loss from hog cholera last year.

ABOUT PEOPLE AND PLACES.

No one can say that Mr. Bryan is a backbiter.

—o—

The people are still for William Jennings Bryan.

—o—

Mr. C. O. Higgins, the well-known and popular druggist, has accepted a position in the Gehring drug store.

—o—

Everyone connected with the Herald wishes to extend congratulations to Mr. and Mrs. Victor Hungerford of Leroy.

—o—

What has become of the old-fashioned citizen who said that the Baltimore convention wouldn't be half as exciting as the one at Chicago?

—o—

Mr. E. J. Gray of Concord, who is now numbered among Lake county's scientific farmers, has just harvested six or seven tons of the very finest Alsike clover.

—o—

Mrs. and Mrs. R. Rottenberg and their daughters, Misses Sylvia and Esther, left last Sunday for Cambridge Springs, Pa., for a few weeks rest and recreation.

Frank Millard of Kirtland, one of the good, reliable Democrats of the county, was in the city last Saturday anxious to hear the result of the Baltimore convention.

—o—

It is haying time this week and with hay at $20 to $30 per ton there will be very little left in the field. Old pastures and the road sides are being cut over and every spear of grass saved.

—o—

C. B. Newton and T. R. Anderson & Son, owners respectively of the two stores at the Nursery are doing a nice business. The local trade at these two stores is good and in addition they have a big farmer trade.

—o—

Mr. Ralph Abramson, employee of the Up-to-date firm, has decorated the two large large display windows in a way quite in keeping with the week of July 4. This young man is making a good reputation for himself.

—o—

"If Taft is nominated," predicted Mr. Dooley a while ago, "I'd hate to get caught in the jam of of presidential candidates at Baltimore." There you have it in a nutshell. Everybody wanted the nomination at Baltimore.

—o—

W. J. Webb, who has operated a milk route in Painesville for over a year, has sold the business to Gilmore & Jacobs, who now have one of the largest milk routes in the city. Mr. Webb has not yet decided upon his occupation in the future.

—o—

Possessors of wealth, even if stolen wealth, can clothe themselves in such a style of respectability that it seems a little rude to tell them to their faces just the kind of people they are, but Mr. Bryan don't seem afraid to do his full duty to the people.

—o—

The Telegraph-Republican claims that Mr. Frank Streeter saved the life of a woman by "not running over her!" Tom Dick and Harry saved The Mixer's life in the same way: They intended to "Eat 'm alive" and then didn't. Don't you see they saved his life? Gold medal!

—o—

The Painesville Greenhouse and Garden Co.'s new buildings on W. Jackson street near Nowell street, promise to be right up to date in every respect. Members of this company visited greenhouses in different parts of the country and have decided to adopt the latest and best plans in use, and have at the same time some ideas of their own that insure the very best green house in this part of the state.

—o—

It might be a paying proposition for some one to run an automobile to and from the township park, and carry passengers. There are many in the city who would like to see the new pavilion, in fact there are hundreds in Painesville who have never seen the land purchased for park purposes. The pavilion and two piers or breakwaters in the Lake, are about completed. There is no question but what the park will soon become a popular place for outings and picnics.

—o—

Mr. C. F. Echternach of Grant st. now has about eleven hundred thrifty peach trees under cultivation on his Newell street farm. Part of these trees were set this year, and he managed by prompt action to save the older trees from the bad effects of the severe winter months. Mr. Echternach proposes to set out about twelve hundred more trees and to give all of them most careful cultivation. Even with some bad luck he has made the raising of peaches a profitable business.

—o—

The real estate firm of Scott & Bacon, which has conducted a successful business in this city for several years, was dissolved on Monday, Mr. Bacon withdrawing from the firm and Mr. Scott taking Bert Calloway as a partner. The new firm will be known as Scott & Calloway, and Mr. Bacon will take a rest of several weeks in the hayfield in the northern part of this township. Mr. Calloway has been a resident of Fairport for several years and was formerly the civil engineer of the P. & L. E. Dock company.

The wreck on the Nickel Plate near Mentor avenue, Saturday night was one of the worst in point of money damage that has happened to the road for a long time. It was very fortunate that no lives were lost. Cars thrown from the tracks were loaded with butter, meat, oranges, etc., and their contents strewn in a general mixup. There was a grand rush on the part of the people first at the scene of the wreck, to help themselves to the wreckage. Those who were prompted, no doubt by the high cost of living, to take a pound of butter, were quite successful, but an attempt to capture the whole three or four car loads of produce did not work out to any one's advantage.

BAD ACCIDENT

Lynn Murray Has Arm Smashed and Bones Broken at Ashtabula.

Lynn Murray, well known here in Painesville, where he has many warm personal friends, met with a severe accident at the fuel plant of the Ashtabula Dock Co. Monday morning of this week. His right arm was caught in the machinery and badly smashed and bones were broken. It is believed that he will recover.

Lynn Murray had quite recently lost his young wife and the accident seems doubly sad on that account, and this second misfortune has called forth expressions of the deepest sympathy.

The young man will be brought to the home of his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Thos. Murray, of W. Jackson street.

Dysentery is always serious and often a dangerous disease, but it can be cured. Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy has cured it even when malignant and epidemic. For sale by all dealers.

WM. THOMAS

Prominent Willoughby Business Man Died Last Friday.

William Thomas, prominent business man of Willoughby, aged 73 years, died at his home in Willoughby last Friday. Mr. Thomas associated with his son, Milo Thomas, has been in the meat business for nearly 25 years. He was the father of the late W. C. Thomas. Besides the two sons mentioned, there is one daughter, Miss Margaret, well known in Willoughby and Painesville.

HEARST NOW FOR WILSON.

Publisher Declares He Will Support Ticket to the End.

Baltimore, July 2.—William Randolph Hearst, who has been one of the principal promoters of Clark's candidacy, tonight said:

"We have made a good fight and lost. I will support the ticket nominated and expect to see it win. I intend to die game in this fight. I am now for Wilson."

THE PLATFORM

HERE WAS ANOTHER GREAT VICTORY FOR MR. BRYAN.

It is Progressive in Every Part and in Keeping with Principles Advocated by Candidates.

Baltimore, Md., July 2.—The Democratic National convention adopted unanimously the platform of the progressive faction tonight. The planks were all drawn and prepared by William Jennings Bryan, as chairman of the committee that had the platform in charge.

Roosevelt Will Run

Oyster Bay, N. Y., July 2.—Colonel Roosevelt's determination to run for the presidency on a third party ticket has not been shaken by the nomination of Governor Wilson by the Democratic convention.

For two hours today while the balloting was in progress at Baltimore and the selection of Wilson seemed certain, Roosevelt and his campaign manager, Senator Dixon, were in conference, preparing a draft of the call for the convention of the progressives. Shortly after the nomination of Wilson had been flashed over the telegraph wires, both Roosevelt and Dixon announced that "of course, the fight was going to be carried on to the end."

The convention of the progressives will be held in Chicago, probably the first week in August, Roosevelt declared.

Tonight, after carefully going over the news reports from Baltimore, Roosevelt gave out a statement at Sagamore Hill. He did not once mention the name of Governor Wilson, but made it clear that nothing which happened at Baltimore could alter his course.

HOW WILSON WON

[By R. A. Tuttle]

The following interesting and cheerful letter was written by R. A. Tuttle, the Lake county delegate to the Baltimore convention. The letter was written before Governor Wilson's nomination, but th situation is described in such an interesting manner that we want every Democrat to read it and rejoice with us in the great Bryan-Wilson victory.

Baltimore, July 1, 1912.

M. L. Harter, Painesville, O.

Dear Harter:—This is the greatest convention in the history of the party. It is a straight fight between the people and the interests.

No quarter will be asked or given. No straddlers or compromisers will be accepted. Clark attempted that and is eliminated. If it was not for the unit rule he could not hold his forces another ballot.

The Wilson men are the real progressives and they will fight for their principles to the last ditch.

They will either win or this convention will adjourn and go back to the people. Wilson has arisen to the occasion and has said, "There will be no deals or promises made for votes in my name."

We are going to win this fight without the aid of Ryan, Belmont, Murphy, or Tammany Hall.

We are going to lick the special interests "to a frazzle," and then when Wilson goes before the country in the November election all hell and Wall Street can not stop him.

We have had two all-night sessions and we may have many more. We propose to "fight it out on this line if it takes all summer." Mr. Baker is the Big Man from Ohio now. He can have the vice-presidency if he will take it. He does not want it. He says his place is in Cleveland. I have always admired him, but after occupying a seat next to him for a week and seeing his work, my admiration has increased many fold.

His speech elicited more praise than that of any man in the convention. If Wilson cannot be named, Baker may be.

Three-quarters of the city of Baltimore are for Wilson. Delegates are receiving thousands of telegrams from their constituents urging Wilson's nomination.

I believe he would carry every state in the Union, and there are thousands who think the same. You are at liberty to use this in the Herald if you wish. Time is so limited I can not write more.

Sincerely yours,
R. A. TUTTLE.

Bryan Confident Wilson Will Win

NEBRASKAN IS JUBILANT OVER SUCCESS AND ISSUES PREDICTION OF VICTORY.

Sees No Need of Third Party and Expects Republican Aid.

Baltimore, July 2.—William J. Bryan in a statement tonight said the nomination of Woodrow Wilson on a progressive platform meant an overwhelming victory for the Democratic ticket next fall. Bryan said:

"I feel sure that the action of the convention thus far will appeal to the country. I had no choice among progressive candidates, but from the first included Governor Wilson in every list I had occasion to make. His action in coming out strongly against Mr. Parker for temporary chairman was the turning point in his campaign.

"The country is progressive. Nearly all of the Democratic party and more than half of the Republican party are progressive.

"The paramount issue before the convention was whether we would take sides with the reactionaries and thus encourage the organization of a third party and giving to the third party the hope of defeating the reactionaries divided between the two old parties, or nominate a ticket that would appeal to the progressive element of the nation.

"I am satisfied that with Mr. Wilson running for president on the platform which has been prepared there will be comparatively few progressive Republicans who will not feel justified in supporting the Democratic ticket. If I were to make an estimate, I would say that we ought to have not less than 2,000,000 majority of the popular vote and enough of the electoral vote to give us an overwhelming majority in the electoral college.

"The action of the convention in adopting the anti Morgan Ryan Belmont resolution has demonstrated that the Democratic party is not only progressive but is bold enough to throw down the gauntlet to the predatory interests. It is fortunate that Mr. Wilson's nomination was made without the aid of Mr. Murphy. It is no reflection upon the many good men in the New York delegation to say this.

"From every standpoint the outlook is hopeful. The only unpleasant thing about a political fight is that success to one aspirant brings disappointment to others. Those who fail ought to find some consolation in the fact that failure is not always a reflection upon the individual, because circumstances exert a larger influence than is sometimes supposed in determining a convention choice.

"Men are only available when they fit into conditions. I decided some two years ago that I did not fit into the conditions as we then saw them and I was not willing to assume the responsibility of any particular progressive movement, partly because I preferred to trust the wisdom of the multitude and partly because I felt that a great deal would depend upon the action of the Republican convention. When the Republican convention adjourned it was more apparent than ever before that circumstances required some emphatic action on the part of our convention to insure a consolidation of the progressive vote under our banner.

"The incidents of the convention have, in a strange way, emphasized the progressiveness of our party far more than I had expected that progressiveness could be exercised, and the convention has decided, with rare unanimity that Gov. Wilson fits into the conditions that the Republican convention and our convention have joined in creating.

"Knowing what the platform is, I feel that it will help him in his fight, and I have no doubt that our convention will proceed to choose a vice presidential candidate who will strengthen the ticket. It is needless to say that I am gratified to see our party raising the banner of progressive Democracy aloft and calling to the progressive forces of the nation to join in restoring the government to the hands of the people, that it may in truth be a government of the people, by the people and for the people.

"It has been a long convention, but the results are worth the time. The dawn is here, and progressive Democracy will be the people's pillar of clouds by day."

Bryan held an informal levee in his rooms this afternoon and many delegates dropped in to congratulate him upon his fight. Telegrams poured in praising him for the campaign he had made in the interest of progressivism.

VANISHING LIGHTNING ROD.

The death of John Cole, authority on electrical phenomena and pioneer in the lightning-rod business, calls attention to the undoubted fact that humanity is not so fearful of lightning as it was a generation ago. The lightning rod is vanishing. These deflectors of electrical current are practically unknown in the cities, says the St. Louis Republic. Once in a long while you see a farm-house with a few rusty streaks of iron running down from the rooftree to ground under the eaves. Inquiry usually develops the fact that these have been in place for 20 years or more. The lightning rod agent has vanished with his wares. He is no longer a subject for the joke-smith dealing with rural themes. That clause in the insurance policies that protects against "fire, lightning, windstorms and tornadoes" seems to have taken the place of the platinum-tipped rod that used to stud the roofs of the fearful and the prudent. There are thousands of farmers and business men who never met a lightning-rod agent. Certainly the electrical currents are just as dangerous to life and property as they were when the lightning rod was a staple article of commerce. More lives are lost, more live stock is killed and more buildings are burned by these discharges now than in the past, as the country is more thickly populated and the chances are greater.

The colony of lepers on the island of Molokai in the Hawaiian group is again called to the attention of the outside world by the sad report that Brother Ira Dutton has been stricken with leprosy. Ira Barnes Dutton was born at Stowe, Vt., in 1843, and is, therefore, in his sixty-ninth year. He went west before the Civil War, and when that broke out he enlisted in the zouave cadets of Zanesville, Wis. Before the war ended he became a captain, and was known as Captain Dutton until he became a member of the Dominican order. Brother Dutton is the last of the pioneer nurses who volunteered to care for the lepers of Molokai, where they were segregated by Father Damien. He has done his duty well, and now that he has been stricken with the dread disease, it can easily be believed that the report is true that he is facing death with the same bravery that was shown by his predecessor, the more widely known Father Damien. To be brave in battle, as Captain Dutton proved himself to be, is one thing, to face death from exposure to an insidious and lingering disease, and that, too, for the good of one's fellow men, is quite another thing, says the Manchester Union. Brother Dutton has shown himself capable of both.

This is a gem of English description dug out of an English newspaper by Richard V. Oulahan, the chief foreign correspondent of the New York Sun: "Just as the sun rose to flood England with glorious, life giving light, giving cheer to thousands of workers who rose in the cold, grey dawn, James Hackett—42—a laborer, for the murder of his wife, Jane Hackett, 43—a barmaid at the Rose and Crown, on the twenty-seventh of last month, under particularly distressing circumstances—to-wit, in which the unfortunate woman was strangled by her drunken husband—paid the extreme penalty for his crime, namely—death."

A Frenchman has invented a syllable keyboard for typewriters. It is claimed for his arrangement that with it an operator whose speed on an ordinary typewriter is fifty words a minute can accomplish one hundred and seventy-five words a minute. Of course the arrangement that suffices for the French language would not be adapted to German or to English. The problem must be worked out separately for each. But if the economy of the syllable keyboard is anything like what is claimed for it, the syllable keyboard undoubtedly will come into universal use and speed will gain another victory.

The deadly hatpin is in evidence again. In a crowd, or even in ordinary close quarters, this stiletto-like toilet adjunct threatens maiming eye sight and even life. It is getting quite as much in need of regulation as the reckless automobile. There is no good reason why the carelessness of any class should be allowed to put the community in peril.

A Brooklyn boy obtained license for himself and his companions to play baseball on vacant city lots by complaining to the mayor that the police broke up their games. The spirit of the Boston boys of '76 is still extant in the land.

A Chicago judge ruled that a wife is entitled to a salary. Without entering into the merits or demerits of the proposition the fact remains that ordinarily she gets it.

Bonnot, the leader of the Paris taxicab bandits, died boasting that his name was being heralded around the world. However, most men prefer not to be known to fame by a stick of dynamite.

King George has proved his courage by going down in a submarine boat. But it's a royal crown to a tramp's derby that he doesn't dare eat a bag of peanuts at a court reception.

Woman Nominated for Congress.

New York City.—Mrs. Marie B. MacDonald, nominated by the Socialists of the Fourteenth district of this state for congress, has just been notified of the honor and accepted. Mrs. MacDonald has been prominent as a worker for suffrage and Socialism for many years.

Suffragets Attack Postoffices.

London, England.—Suffragets smashed the windows of the postoffices in Manchester, Letchworth, Hitchin and some of the London branch offices.

Girl Is "Fourth" Victim.

Toledo, O.—Esther, the four-year-old daughter of Mrs. Lottie Dancebarger, is the first 1912 victim of firecrackers in Toledo. While playing with firecrackers in the yard her dress caught fire and she was terribly burned. She died later.

Dirigible Explodes, 34 Hurt.

Dusseldorf, Germany.—The dirigible balloon, Schwaben, exploded and was completely destroyed by the fire that followed. Thirty-four soldiers were injured.

Finds $2,834 Under Porch.

Easton, Pa.—Robert Peiffer, a storekeeper at Raubsville, near here, started several days ago to make extensive alterations to his house and store property. In tearing down an old porch a carpenter found an old wallet which had been hidden under the flooring. On examination the wallet was found to contain $2,834 in bills. The house is about 75 years old and was occupied for many years by Jacob Lesh, deceased. It is said that Lesh carried a wallet similar to the one found under the porch.

Body of Ohioan Is Found.

Youngstown, O.—The local authorities are investigating the circumstances surrounding the finding of the body of Edward Henning, of Arlington Park, near the Standard Table Oil Cloth works. The man had a broken neck and a slight bruise on his forehead. Two men reported to the watchman at the oil cloth works the finding of the body beside the street car tracks and then they disappeared. Henning had talked with a policeman a short time before, saying he was on his way home.

Pays $3,000 for Rare Coin.

Philadelphia, Pa.—The highest price ever paid for an American coin and possibly the highest ever given by a collector for a rare coin of any mintage, was $3,000, which Henry C. Chapman of this city paid for an American half eagle, which is the gem of the collection gathered by George H. Earle, Jr., of this city.

Only one other coin of the same pattern, and that an inferior specimen, is in the possession of the United States government. The specimen bears the date of 1798.

Better Weather Aids Crops.

New York City.—Bradstreet's says: Better weather, favorable crop reports, increased orders for future delivery, better retail trade and heavy consumption of finished steel comprehend the leading features of the week. Primary dry goods markets are in good shape; jobbers have made fair profits on past business; stocks are not burdensome in any position and the underlying firmness of prices creates the impression that higher quotations on some goods are in prospect.

MANY DIE IN TORNADO

BODIES ARE LEFT IN WAKE OF CANADIAN STORM.

Large Strip of Business District of Regina Is Devastated and Three Houses Are Demolished.

Winnipeg, Man.—Leaving bodies in its wake estimated to number anywhere between 100 and 400, a tornado tore through Regina, the capital of Saskatchewan, devastating a large strip of the business district, demolishing three churches and a dozen or more business houses. The telephone exchange was razed with a dozen or so girls among the debris. The power plant shared the same fate, and to make the work of rescue more difficult the city was in darkness.

Before entering the city from the southeast the storm destroyed the new capital building; then it cleaned up some 200 or more private residences. Then six grain elevators were blown across the tracks, completely blocking traffic. Then the storm passed away to the northeast. Chaos reigns and 500 troops are being rushed to the scene from Sewel camp.

The financial loss is estimated at $1,000,000 to $10,000,000.

AVIATRICE AND MAN DIE AS PLANE FALLS

MISS HARRIET QUIMBY AND PASSENGER KILLED IN TUMBLE INTO SHALLOW WATER.

BODIES ARE BADLY CRUSHED

First Woman to Cross English Channel in Aeroplane Jokes With Friends Before Making Flight Which Ended in Death.

Boston, Mass.—Miss Harriet Quimby of New York, the first woman to win an aviator's license in America and the first woman to cross the English channel in an aeroplane, was instantly killed with her passenger, W. A. P. Willard, manager of the Boston aviation meet, at Atlantic, when her Bleriot monoplane fell into Dorchester Bay from a height of a thousand feet.

The accident happened when Miss Quimby and Willard were returning from a trip over Boston harbor to Boston light, a distance of 20 miles in all. The flight was made in 20 minutes. The Bleriot, one of the latest models of aeroplanes, circled the aviation field and soared out over the Savin Hill Yacht club, just outside the aviation grounds.

Wind Upsets Craft.

Heading back into the eight-mile gusty wind, Miss Quimby started to volplane. The angle was too sharp and one of the gusts caught the tail of the monoplane, throwing the machine up perpendicular.

For an instant it poised there. Then, sharply outlined against the setting sun, Willard was thrown clear of the chassis, followed almost immediately by Miss Quimby. Hurtling over and over, the two figures shot downward, striking the water 20 feet from shore.

They splashed out of sight a second before the monoplane plunged down 15 feet away.

Bodies Are Rescued.

It was low tide and the water was only five feet deep. Men from the yacht club in motor boats were on the spot quickly, and leaping overboard dragged the bodies out of the mud into which they had sunk deeply. Death probably was instantaneous.

Both bodies were badly crushed. Several of Miss Quimby's bones were broken and there were many large bruises. Willard, who weighed 190 pounds, hit the water face first and over one eye there was a gash from which the blood was flowing. He, too, sustained several fractures and bruises.

The clothing of both fliers was torn and the bodies were so covered with mud that it was several minutes before the doctors and nurses could determine the full extent of the injuries.

Cavalry Halts Crowd.

When the victims were brought ashore in motorboats the bodies were laid on the ground on the edge of the aviation field. The crowd which had been witnessing the flights rushed over, but a troop of state cavalry held the people back while Dr. George Sheahan, the field surgeon, with his staff and a nurse made hasty examinations. In a few moments ambulances arrived and the victims were taken to the Quincy hospital.

Flying high overhead at the time of the fall was Miss Blanche Stuart Scott, another aviator, taking part in the meet, which had entered upon its second day.

Jokes Before Flight.

Before going up on their last flight, Miss Quimby and Mr. Willard were talking and laughing with their friends, Willard making jokes about his weight and Miss Quimby talking confidently about her plans to make an altitude record that would stand in the future as a woman's high mark.

In crossing the English Channel on April 16, Miss Quimby flew at an altitude of 4,000 feet, which was believed to be the record for women. Miss Quimby said she felt sure she could beat this mark, although she did not believe she could have exceeded the record of 13,943 feet set by Garros.

Discussing the matter of coming down in the water, if the engine should fail during the flight over the harbor, Miss Quimby said to a friend just before she left the ground: "A water landing is all right in a Bleriot unless you come down head first. In that case, the heavy motor at the extreme forward end of the machine would drag the monoplane deep into the water and sink it. But if we come down 'pancake' the broad wings would float us for two hours or more."

Then with a bright smile, she made this significant remark: "But I am a cat and I don't like cold water." Those were among the last words Miss Quimby said before leaving the starting line on what proved to be her last flight.

Miss Quimby, outside of her aviation activities, was a well known magazine writer connected with Leslie's Weekly.

Wood's Opponents Defeated.

Washington, D. C.—Opponents of Maj. Gen. Leonard Wood met defeat in their plan to legislate him out of office when Chairman Hay of the military affairs committee reintroduced the army appropriation bill without the clause restricting those officers who may serve as chief of staff.

The special joint resolution continuing for a month all appropriations for government departments was introduced by Representative Fitzgerald and passed without opposition. The senate passed the resolution later.

Detective Burns Is Fined.

Los Angeles, Cal.—William J. Burns, the detective who brought about the arrest of the McNamaras, took the stand on July 1 in the trial of Clarence S. Darrow, for jury Bribing.

Five minutes after his direct examination was begun by District Attorney Fredericks, Burns asked the protection of the court and a short time later was fined $25 for contempt.

Buckeye Notes

Sandusky.—The engine hauling Baltimore & Ohio passenger train No. 4 from this city to Newark collided with a traction engine that had become stalled on the track near Monroeville. Fireman Frank Clark of Newark jumped, but got under the wheels of the locomotive. Both legs were mangled. He is in a hospital here.

Newark.—The body of Joseph Anderson, aged 55, an ex-policeman, was found in the haymow of an abandoned livery barn. The body was badly decomposed.

Youngstown.—Harry N. Campbell, aged 42, who was struck on the head by a flying piece of iron at the Ohio plant of the Carnegie Steel Co., died at the city hospital.

Dayton.—Rev. Frank Garland, minister of the English Lutheran church of this city, will leave on a European trip to study and gather data on various economic subjects.

Sandusky.—Stephen Dougher, 25, a printer, from Scranton, Pa., according to the union card found in his pocket, fell from a Lake Shore freight train and was cut to pieces.

Akron.—A woman was saved from suicide when Roy Miller, bartender, snatched away a glass of beer into which she had poured two ounces of poison.

Amherst.—Mayor Wakefield and the Vermillion council were in Amherst inspecting the local sewage system, which Vermillion expects to duplicate.

Orrville.—The plant of the Orrville Electric Lighting Co. was completely destroyed by fire. The estimated loss is $25,000.

Cincinnati.—B. H. Kroger, who owns a string of popular-price grocery stores and is president of a savings bank, has entered the race for the Republican nomination for governor.

Youngstown.—To adjust water rates, the director of service appointed a committee to investigate the amount of water consumed.

Cleveland.—When Paul Larsen, 20 told Judge Kesler he wouldn't even give his wife "a pleasant smile" she was granted an immediate divorce. She is 18 and lives on the West Side. The two married as the culmination of a camping romance near Painesville.

Cleveland.—The first case prosecuted under the Zinner ordinance which prohibits selling firearms without permit ended in muny court when Walter H. Wilbur was fined $50 and costs by Judge Baer.

Toledo.—Charles Krago, 38, was killed here by a street car. In alighting from one car he stepped in front of one moving in the opposite direction. His skull was fractured.

Newark.—David M. Keller, aged 50, an attorney, died at a local hospital of pneumonia after a brief illness. He was for many years a member of the local school board.

Canton.—William R. Shaver was sentenced to five years in the Ohio penitentiary for forging the name of a partner in the Golden Rule Coupon Co. to a $450 note. Judge Harter, in pronouncing sentence, told Shaver he deserved every day of the term, not so much for the forgery as for deserting his wife and two children and eloping to Canada with his wife's first cousin, Ethel Wynn. The court pronounced sentence after refusing a motion for a new trial.

Steubenville.—Richard Gilson, local Republican leader, ex-sheriff and at present city water works collector, was notified that he would be appointed postmaster for Steubenville, to succeed Maj. Alex. Sweeney, deceased.

Columbus.—T. R. Anderson, United States consul at Hamburg, Germany, under President Lincoln and United States internal revenue collector at Mansfield, O., under President Johnson, died at his home here.

Wellington.—Charles E. Tripp, for a great many years manager of the Auditorium hotel, Chicago, died here after an illness of nearly two years. He was 64 years of age and is survived by his wife.

Sandusky.—With the throat cut from ear to ear and both wrists slashed, the body of Louis Rhein, 60, Kelleys Island wine merchant, who disappeared from this city last Saturday morning, was found in an old barn near West Huron. Coroner Karl R. Knoble, after viewing the remains and questioning members of the dead man's family, gave a verdict of suicide. Rhein had long been in ill health. He had amassed a fortune dealing in Lake Erie island wines.

St. Marys.—John J. Brubb, a Western & Ohio motorman, received an electric shock while changing the trolley pole of his car, and fell from the top of the car and sustained a broken neck. He died a few hours later.

Cleveland.—"The Loss of the Titanic" is the title of a book written by Lawrence Beesley of London, Eng., a survivor of the Titanic disaster, visiting in Cleveland.

Alliance.—Miss Fay Shidler, 20 years old, daughter of William Shidler, a business man, was killed when her auto turned turtle.

Cincinnati.—A divorce by default was secured by Mrs. Lucy Tillman from Benjamin R. Tillman, son of United States Senator Benjamin R. Tillman of South Carolina, on charges of gross neglect. Mrs. Tillman was granted the custody of the two children, Douschka, 7, and Lucy, 5.

The Tillmans were married at Edgefield, S. C., Dec. 26, 1903. Mrs. Tillman was Lucy Dugas. Tillman is now living in Portland, Ore.

Massillon.—By leaping into a pit 20 feet deep, seven men escaped death by scalding, when a steam chest on an engine at the plant of the Massillon Rolling Mill Co. exploded, doing $3,000 worth of damage.

Canal Dover.—In order to meet the competition of a private electric lighting company, council has instructed the director of service to reduce the municipal plant's rates for commercial lighting. When the city plant went into the commercial lighting field, the private concern began to cut its rates, in some cases to one-half the prices formerly charged.

Snappy Age.

The young man breezed into the old man's library.

"I met your daughter," he announced, "at a Fifth avenue reception. I want to marry her next Friday afternoon at 3:30. She's willing."

"Which daughter?" he asked.

"It's Miss Ethel."

"All right," said the old man. "Make it 4:30 and I'll attend the wedding. I have an engagement at the other hour."

It was so ordered. This is a snappy age.—Pittsburg Post.

Left No Room for Doubt.

Wichita lawyers are yet talking about the way Wallace B. Baker, who was found guilty recently in the district court of selling mortgaged property, showed his ignorance of married life. The prosecuting attorney was trying to show that Baker wasn't married. He asked Barker the following questions:

"Did you ever send your wife any dresses?"

"Yes, I sent her four dresses."

"What kind of dresses did you send her?"

"I sent her one good dress and three common dresses."

"How much did you pay for the good dress, Mr. Baker?"

"Oh, I guess about $4.50."

The lawyer put Mr. Baker down then and there as an unmarried man and a poor guesser.—Exchange.

DUBIOUS

About What Her Husband Would Say.

A Mich. woman tried Postum because coffee disagreed with her and her husband. Tea is just as harmful as coffee because it contains caffeine—the same drug found in coffee. She writes:

"My husband was sick for three years with catarrh of the bladder, and palpitation of the heart, caused by coffee. Was unable to work at all and in bed part of the time.

"I had stomach trouble, was weak and fretful so I could not attend to my housework—both of us using coffee all the time and not realizing it was harmful.

"One morning the grocer's wife said she believed coffee was the cause of our trouble and advised Postum. I took it home rather dubious what my husband would say—he was fond of coffee.

"But I took coffee right off the table and we haven't used a cup of it since. You should have seen the change in us, and now my husband never complains of heart palpitation any more. My stomach trouble went away in two weeks after I began Postum. My children love it, and it does them good which can't be said of coffee.

"A lady visited us who was usually half sick. I told her I'd make her a cup of Postum. She said it was tasteless stuff, but she watched me make it, boiling it thoroughly for 15 minutes, and when done, she said it was splendid. Long boiling brings out the flavor and food quality." # MONTE CARLO Unique Principality

BAY OF MONACO

THE principality of Monaco is the most densely populated country in the world. It consists practically of one large town, though this in itself is divided into old Monaco, lying round sweeping shores of the bay of that name, and Monte Carlo proper, the pleasure resort on the high eastern promontory of the bay. The whole place is dominated by the great white establishment of the Societe des Bains de Mer, as M. Blanc chooses to call his gaming house.

The principality is, theoretically, an entirely independent state, with its own ruler, the distinguished explorer and scientist, the prince of Monaco. It has a tiny army of about 126 men, a navy consisting of a royal yacht and a couple of auxiliary vessels, and its government buildings and government offices, clustering around the palace on the promontory opposite to the Casino. It also has a national opera house, national museums and a national picture gallery.

The inhabitants are in the happy position of having neither taxes nor rates to pay. The whole principality is supported by the subsidy received from the great white building which stands at the edge of the promontory, fronting the principal public gardens—a huge whited sepulcher of ruined gamblers' souls and lost hopes.

But let us pay a visit to the Casino itself. On the steps there is a constant coming and going of almost all the famous personages of Europe. Grand rulers and musical comedy actresses rub shoulders under the portico. Painters and princes, authors and autocrats, statesmen, merchants, adventurers and great ladies mix in one heterogeneous crowd with the French and Italian peasants who come here to risk their little all, the savings of a lifetime, in a wild, vain endeavor to find a short cut to wealth.

Only Foreigners Gamble.

Before we are admitted to the gaming rooms we have a little ceremony to go through. On the left of the portico as you enter is a small office, and here we must apply for an entrance card. Nominally, we go through the ceremony of being elected a member of the Cercle des Etrangers, or Foreigners' club, a vast amorphous organization which alone has the right of using the gambling rooms. The object of this is to give effect to the Monegasque law, which forbids any subject of the principality from entering the establishment, a law which shows that the rulers of the little country, while quite prepared to live on the follies of foreigners, take good care that their own people shall not be entrapped by the temptation in their midst. All we have to do, as a matter of fact, is give our full name and address, and state our age, because no person under years of discretion is admitted. We are handed a card which admits us to the rooms.

The first time we walk across the great entrance hall to the glass doors of the gambling rooms we are scanned by a whole posse of international detectives, as well as by attendants of the Casino itself, trained especially, and selected for their ability to remember faces. This is the first and only time we shall have to show our card. A uniformed official, who looks at it, scans us closely, and within a minute or two every one of those detectives and attendants knows our names and faces. If a message or a note be sent into the rooms for us it will be brought straight to us without a moment's hesitation.

As we approach the swing doors we are scanned by two attendants, whose special duty it is to see that persons using the Casino are decorously dressed; and if we be Britons we shall probably be pulled up short for having our trousers turned up. To most people this appears a ludicrous regulation; but it has a very good explanation, as its object is to prevent the possibility of a swindler "accidentally" brushing money off the tables on the chance of two or three pounds falling into the hem of his trousers, a trick which was frequently resorted to in the early days of the Casino.

When finally we are through the doors we find ourselves in a series of gorgeously decorated and brilliantly lit saloons. Coming in from the brilliant sunlight, the effect of the artificial light is bizarre in the extreme. The place is crowded with richly dressed, well-to-do people, gathered in close throngs around enormous green baize tables. Raised above them on high chairs at each side of the tables are the chefs-de-partie, or controllers of the play at the table.

There is a strange subdued atmosphere about the whole place. Despite the enormous numbers present there is practically no conversation, and the little there is is carried on almost in undertones. The few who are moving about do so quietly and softly, as if not to disturb some strange rite. There is a constant, monotonous, unbroken hum, in which the clinking of coins, the movements of players, the rattle and roll of the roulette and the scraping of the croups or money rakes all blend into one prolonged low murmur. Above this rise, in constant reiteration, the sharp voices of the croupiers calling on the players to stake their money or announcing the result of a coup.

We make our way to one of the crowds around the table. We find that in the center is the great roulette. Opposite it on each side sit the two rouleurs or attendants, who actually spin the roulette, and four croupiers. Behind them on each side are the two chefs-de-partie on their high chairs. At the end of the long tables there are two more croupiers. The green baize of the tables is marked out with the numbers and spaces for staking money, and all around it the regular frequenters are seated, probably in the same places as they occupy day after day. Behind them and between the seated players on each side have are crowded four and five deep.

All over the tables are little stacks of silver and gold and packets of notes in a seeming confusion, but the quick eyes of the croupiers mark each stake as it is placed, and know almost invariably the player who has placed it, so that disputes of any kind are of the rarest occurrence. Most of the seated players on each side have in front of them note books or memorandum tablets, on which they are busily working out figures and calculations—system players, who make a business of their amusement.

The lamps immediately over the tables are, curiously enough, in this place of modernity, old-fashioned oil lamps and attendants move quietly about attending to them and replacing them as they burn out. An attempt was made in the very early days of electric light to carry out an ingenious raid on the Casino by cutting the wires, and in all probability the attempt would have been successful had its perpetrators been a little better acquainted with the habits of the Casino. The whole place was plunged in darkness.

Now, it was during this confusion that the accomplices of the wire cutter, standing at each table, were to have scooped up whatever money they could lay their hands on. Unfortunately for them, but fortunately for the public, the Casino authorities were a little further sighted than they imagined. Look up at the niches in the gallery which runs round the rooms. Here and there you will see a little spark of light. These reveal the whereabouts of powerful bull's-eye lanterns, primitive searchlights, already focussed on the different tables, and so arranged that they can be instantly turned up by one official. In the case referred to the moment the wires had been cut these searchlights were turned on, and almost before the confusion had arisen the tables were each brilliantly illuminated in the midst of the surrounding darkness.

Having taken in a general impression of the place and got some idea of the method of play, we ventured to hazard a stake. Five francs is the minimum allowed at the roulette table. The highest stake on an even chance is 600 francs, and the maximum stakes on the other chances are so regulated that this is the largest amount that can be won by any one stake; but, of course, one player may have any number of stakes on the different chances. So that practically no limit is placed on the amount that can be won by a single coup, though the bank reserves to itself the right not to pay out more than $35,000 of its own money on any one coup at one table.

Read It First in Private.

Before suppressing any book your boy or girl may have got hold of it is well for you to read that book in private, and then apply its possible harmfulness to the possible common sense of the child, and note with grave judgment whether the lesson of life in it might not supersede the harm, and in the end be of invaluable benefit to the child's development.

There are lots of facts we dread our children coming upon. If they are not prepared with the proper presentation of these facts, and they get them from decently, thoughtfully written books, it is well to let the child cultivate the friendship of such a book and read to the end uninterrupted.

Big Channel Cat Caught With Rod.

Some handsome catches have been made from Stone's river by local sportsmen. The species caught are in the main trouth and red eye and channel cat. Yesterday Will Estis captured an elegant string of the above mentioned varieties, and among them was a channel cat that weighed some hours after being taken from the water 37 pounds.

Cat of this species are frequently caught on a trout line that weigh up with this one, but this fellow is said to be the largest caught with rod and reel from this stream.—Nashville Tennessean.

The Adapter.

David Belasco at a dinner in New York condemned certain playwrights who steal shamelessly from their foreign confreres' successes.

"I sprung a fable on one of these scoundrels the other day," said Mr. Belasco. "I told him that a playwright of his type awoke in the dead of night, and saw a masked man with dark lantern bending over his dressing table.

"'What are you doing there?' the playwright thundered. 'Stealing?'

"'Oh, no,' replied the robber. 'Oh, no, sir. Merely adapting.'"

FIRMS TOLD OF THEIR LIMITATIONS

STATE WARD FALLS TO HIS DEATH

Seeks Liberty by Sliding Down Improvised Rope, Which Breaks With His Weight—Plans Monthly Paper.

Columbus.—"I have no difficulty whatever in reaching the conclusion that an insurance company cannot lawfully contract in this state to indemnify an employer from the result of injuries occasioned by his wilful act or from his failure to observe the laws of the state of Ohio for the protection of the life and safety of employes."

E. H. Moore, state insurance superintendent, citing the foregoing opinion of Attorney General Hogan has addressed a communication to every insurance company doing business in Ohio, directing that they may not write policies in contravention to the instructions implied in the words quoted, and ordering them to incorporate a clause covering this phase in all contracts written or to be written.

Reply Is Requested.

This action marks a victory for the state liability board of awards, which says insurance companies have been writing policies protecting clients from acts of omission and commission. Insurance companies justified themselves on the ground that, under the liability act, there still are conditions under which an injured employe can sue for damages and it was against this contingency that they sought to protect their clients.

Mr. Moore's letter directs that companies shall inform his department whether they have issued such offending policies and if they have, what steps have been taken to comply with his ruling.

Falls to His Death.

Columbus.—In attempting to lower himself by a frail rope, made from window cords and bed clothing, from the third story of the Columbus State hospital, from which he sought to escape, Charles M. Cobel fell and was instantly killed. The rope broke.

Cobel, who was a troublesome patient, had been confined in a room with a window opening to the front of the building.

The body struck the coping at the second floor and rebounded, falling seven feet from the building. The man's head was crushed and his right arm broken. A patient on the second floor heard the body fall and notified attendants.

The dead man had been at the hospital only five weeks. He lived at North Fourth street, this city. His wife, who is now living at 470 Columbus street, procured his probation after he had threatened to kill her. Cobel escaped from the hospital last week and was located at the Home for the Feeble Minded.

Plan a Monthly Paper.

Instead of publishing a quarterly magazine, the Alumni Association of Ohio State University will have a monthly publication. The first number will appear about July 15 and will be devoted to the commencement and the reunion of the class of '67, which occurred during commencement.

Prof. H. F. Harrington is the new editor, to succeed Prof. Joseph R. Taylor.

Bankers' Tax Committee Meets.

The taxation committee of the Ohio Bankers' association held a conference here with representatives of several of the larger banks of the state relative to rulings of the Ohio tax commission. As a result of the conference it was said that a special subcommittee may later be named to meet with the state commission and endeavor to reach conclusions on the questions up. Some objections have been raised by larger banks of the state to the requirement of the commission that returns be made of the profits on loans pending and which profits have not been earned at the time for reporting to the taxing authorities. This amounts to a large item in the business of large banks. It is pointed out that on the day for making returns, or the day before, the banks may make a large loan the revenue of which is not returned to the banks for some time after, yet the tax commission has required a return of such revenue for taxation.

Bucyrus.—Harold Band, 11, stepped from behind a load of hay and was killed by an automobile three miles from Nevada.

Sues Penney for $25,000.

Cleveland.—Suit against the Pennsylvania Railroad Co. for $25,000 damages was begun in federal court by Sevisitiano Barbata, a section hand formerly employed at Ashtabula. The plaintiff charges that his spine was permanently injured when he was struck by a switch engine in the yards.

Ravenna.—The postoffice and several residences, including that of Postmaster Heiser, were robbed at Atwater, near here.

Drowns Self in Cistern.

Randasky.—Mrs. William Holsinger, aged 61, was found drowned in the cistern under the kitchen of her home by her son this morning. The woman was clad in her night dress and it is believed that she had drowned herself. Continual brooding over her poor health is given as the cause for her action.

Findlay.—Verne Huffman, of Arcadia sustained a fracture of the skull when he was thrown from his buggy. The accident may result fatally.

Given Pardon to Die.

Upon the recommendation of Warden Jones and the statement of the penitentiary physician that he has not much longer to live, Governor Harmon pardoned Joseph Mitzel, serving a life sentence for second-degree murder. Mitzel was received from Stark county in 190[illegible].

Big Fight on Diphtheria.

In fighting dread diphtheria, 7,616 packages of antitoxin were given to indigent families during the last year by the state board of health, according to the annual report made to Governor Harmon. Recommendation is made that study of the disposal of wastes be made by the United States government. Lack of co-operation of physicians with local health board is asserted.

Railroad Fares Must Be Exact.

On and after July 15, ticket agents of railroads all over the United States will have to give exact change to passengers as the result of an order issued by the interstate commerce commission about a year ago, compliance with which has been several times postponed. It has been the custom of the railroads to make rates by multiplying the number of miles by the rate per mile and a sufficient number of cents added to make the total end in a cipher or five. Under the rule of the commission the fare must be figured exactly and a ticket sold on that basis. In other words, if the fare at the per-mile rate multiplied by the number of miles equals 24 cents or 37 cents, for example, it cannot be made either 35 cents or 40 cents, as is is done now.

C. & O. Seeks Reimbursement.

Chesapeake & Ohio Railway of Indiana has filed application with the Ohio state commission for authority to issue $132,700 additional stock and $923,000 first mortgage 5 per cent 20-year bonds. These securities will go into the Chesapeake & Ohio treasury to reimburse the parent company for money expended on improvements to the Chesapeake & Ohio of Indiana. The securities will be pledged under the $125,000,000 C. & O. mortgage. With these additional issues Chesapeake & Ohio of Indiana will have issued $5,132,700 stock and $6,208,000 bonds.

Anti Suffragists at Baltimore.

Mrs. Herman Hubbard and Mrs. Virginia Thurman Tate, president and vice president of the Ohio Association Opposed to Woman Suffrage have left for Baltimore, where they will watch the proceedings of the Democratic convention and use all the influence they can command to keep a suffrage plank out of the national Democratic platform.

These women were successful in a similar mission at Toledo. Several other states will be represented to measure forces against the organizations of suffragists now on the scene at Baltimore.

O. S. U. Registration Grows.

Registration figures for attendance at Ohio State University summer school are now 533. A few more students are expected to enroll this week.

Doesn't Confess Crime.

In an effort to get Dominic Selvaggio, murderer from Erie county, who is confined in the penitentiary annex, awaiting execution, to confess Sheriff Reuter visited the prison and, with Warden Jones and Father Kelley, the Catholic chaplain, talked to the condemned man.

Warden Jones said Salvaggio would not admit complicity in the crime for which he will pay the death sentence. His partner has confessed. The two killed three Sicilians on Kelleys island last fall.

May Run to Industrial Home.

If plans formulated by L. P. Stevens, receiver for the Columbus, Urbana & Western Electric Railway Co. are sanctioned by the Common Pleas court, the road will be extended to Dublin and thence to the Girls' Industrial home near Delaware. The road's present terminus, in its incompleted condition, is at Fishinger's bridge.

Mr. Stevens' plan to raise money for the extension is to issue $286,000 receiver's certificates, to be made first lien on all the property.

The legislature in May, 1911 provided for an appropriation of $25,000 to aid in connecting the Girls' Industrial home by an electric railroad and this money will be sought if the court sanctions the plan for extension.

The total distance of the proposed extension is 11.1 miles.

Murderer Must Die.

Columbus.—Dominic Salvaggio recently convicted of participating in the murder of three Italians on Kelleys island, will be electrocuted August 23. The state supreme court has denied his application for a retrial and set the date for his death.

Firecrackers Kill Child.

Toledo.—Playing with firecrackers near her home in Ironville, Esther, 5, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. L. Danberger, was so terribly burned she died after several hours of agony. The girl's clothing became ignited and her garments were nearly burned from her body before her cries and those of her playmates brought relief.

Dayton.—Mrs. Sarah Short, aged 67, and Marshall E. Brigham, aged 4, a colored lad, are dead here, victims of automobile accidents.

Flies Will Aid Bathers.

Massillon.—Massillon boys plan to earn enough selling fly traps this summer to build a pier at the reservoir of the Massillon Water Supply Co., their favorite swimming hole. The boys have been trying to raise the money by popular subscription, but failed.

Bellefontaine.—Bones of a mastodon, including a tusk nearly five feet long, were unearthed by workmen employed in dredging Mad river. The bones will be sent to the Smithsonian institute.

RETAINS HIS CONFIDENCE IN YOUNGSTER

Jay Cashion, Washington Pitcher.

Manager Clark Griffith of the Washington American league team has not lost confidence or hope of making a pitcher out of Jay Carl Cashion. The husky boy goes through a stiff course of sprouts each day. Griff is teaching him how to use the "spitter," and if Cashion can develop a good spitball, and at the same time be able to control it, he can be counted upon to win many games before the 1912 curtain drops.

Cashion is willing and works hard, and that is all Griff wants, for the Old Fox is a patient waiter, and Cashion will not be hurried along in the priming process. Washington fans are particularly sweet on this youngster.

LEIFIELD EARNS HIS SPURS

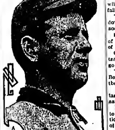
In First Game With Cubs Former Pirate Twirler Holds Brooklyn to Four Measly Hits.

Lefty Leifield, until recently a Pirate, did himself handsome in his debut as a member of the Cub team. Lefty gave Brooklyn a little impersonation entitled "Stingy," and the Dodgers agreed unanimously that as an impersonator Lefty ought to get big money on the vaudeville circuit when he gets through with baseball.

Lefty held the easterners to four measly bingles and whipped them, 7 to 2.

Leifield never was in trouble if you can forget the first inning, when a base on balls was followed by a double, which, in turn, was trailed by a single, scoring two runs. After that the Dodgers were easy picking, and whoever things looked the least bit dangerous Lefty closed up on them. He only resorted to strikeouts once, and that was when there were two men on and none out, showing that he was confident of himself all the way.



"Lefty" Leifield.

PASSING OF HUGH E. KEOUGH

"By Hek" Occupies Unique Place in Sport Letters—Was Imitated by Many Writers.

We shall read no more "By Hek." Hugh E. Keough, the Chicago sport writer, who wrote under that nom de plume, is dead.

Mr. Keough's place in sport letters was unique. He founded a new school of sporting comment. Many imitated him. None approached him. He was widely quoted. He was more widely "pirated."

He was gifted gloriously. He knew sport in all its phases as few men have known it. He knew the idiosyncracies of sporting men and for his angelic fancy they were an inexhaustible theme. He keenly watched the entire passing show of sport. He knew its comedies, its tragedies. And as the poet-philosopher of American sport, he sang his songs and sounded his warnings, exposed the shams and exalted the genuine, and always with inimitable drollery.

He was, as Watterson once said, the "ever-welcome Hek." The sport page of American journalism whatever its color, is in mourning at his passing.—St. Louis Republic.

Ward's Ancient Ideas.

John M. Ward is using 1876 methods on his Boston Braves. He expects his pitchers to do as much base running and batting as any one. He instructed one the other day to try to hit a bit sooner at the ball, just after he had seen that one ground out to the second baseman. By hitting sooner, Ward told him, he would hit singles through the pitcher, all of which is very true. Hub Perdue says Ward ought not to expect them to play like the boys did in '76, when there's not one on the team who saw the games of '76.

Scattering Notes of the Diamond

Atlanta has released Pitchers Paige and Johns to Montgomery.

Toledo has Hohnhorst batting way down in the list, ahead of catcher and and pitcher.

"Jeff" Pfeffer, the former Chicago-Boston pitcher, is managing a team in the Greater Boston league.

The Dodgers are only saved from last place because they can't lose quite as often and consistently as Boston.

Harry Howell, until recently on President Barrow's umpire staff, has caught on as an umpire in the Texas league.

The veteran manager and player, Bill Carney, has put in an application with President Chivington for a job as umpire.

Pitcher Don Marion of the Milwaukee club has gone to Youngstown, Ohio, to visit "Bonesetter" Reese. His arm is in bad shape.

The New York Yankees are reported to be ready to turn Pitcher George McConnell back. He will be offered to Rochester first, of course.

Brooklyn has traded Infielder Stark and Pitcher Schardt to the Newark International league team for Infielder Fisher and Outfielder Kay.

Pitcher Zackert, sold by St. Louis to Bloomington of the Three-I league, refused to accept the terms offered and was turned back to Bresnahan.

Harry Mace, umpire in the Virginia league, has a son catching for a team in the circuit. If son should attempt to sass dad, would the umpire use a shingle?

New Orleans has sold Catcher Lee Lemon, secured from Birmingham, to Fort Worth and again taken on Nagel, who had been returned to Toledo. Lemon could hit but could not throw.

LONG HIT CAUSE OF STRIKE

Belleville League Threatened With Dissolution Because Freight Train Carried Away Ball.

Belleville (Ont.) is confronted with a baseball situation that the heads of the Clerks' Junior league declare is more difficult of solution than that which arose in the American league when Ty Cobb smote a spectator in New York.

All the members of teams in the Belleville league have served notice they will strike, just like the Tigers did, if Henry Ebel plays in any more games.

Ebel is the pinch hitter of the Married Man's nine. The trouble arose in Sunday's game, when along toward the end Ebel took a good hefty swat at the sphere and it sailed over the heads of the infield and outfield. A passing freight train, with a door of a box car carelessly left open, made a clean pickup of the ball and carried it far away.

The game was called for two reasons. It was the only ball available and it was not available after Ebel's hit.

HARMON'S DEFEAT.

The defeat forever of Judson Harmon's ambition to be the president of the United States should be laid at his own door and not elsewhere. No one who knows him distrusts his ability to fill with credit the place to which he aspired, and no one doubts his integrity as a man

But it takes more than an able and upright man to represent the people of the country in its highest office at this time To be such representative to any valuable purpose he must reflect the public opinion, be willing to have it direct him, and faithfully carry out the trust committed to him for the good of the public

Governor Harmon is far too acute a man not to know the clear drift of the people's judgment upon the policies to be pursued in our government. He knew that to carry out that judgment in its true spirit would require him, if he were president, to abandon very much of the association and conduct of his past political life and take up the burden of helping the people throw off the rule of privilege of some at the expense of all, and generally to face to the front and square his action with those betterments in government to which the majority thinks itself entitled, and which it is plainly bound to try to obtain No man knew this better than he

He could not expect the people to support his candidacy except upon the condition that he would support their rights

If he had accepted that condition, a very simple and straightforward one—he could have had an undivided Ohio behind him at Baltimore Ohio would have been glad and proud to have another added to the long roll of presidents who have been her pride and satisfaction in the past The smallest move by him, the least intimation on his part that he was with and for the people in their fight for better conditions and a more equitable distribution of the common welfare, would have been met and welcomed by them It was no very hard exaction from him that he should tell them whether he was on their side or that of Ryan and Belmont and Morgan.

And he was often called upon to do that which he should have done without asking—to take a position of adherence to the people's interests.

But he gave no sign.

Subsequent developments seem to disclose a lack of sympathy with what he knew the popular wish to be and a close and willing fellowship with the forces that certainly do not make for patriotic righteousness

And in tactics his campaign has been as blunderingly carried on as in political unrighteousness it was conceived He has entrusted his forces to the direction of hucksters instead of generals, to political peanut venders rather than statesmen,—turning their management over to the Ed Moores and the Dave Rockwells of the gubernatorial back kitchen, who reached the limit of their ability to manage when they had jockeyed a few men out of their places in the state committee and secured a convention vote that Harmon should have not only his own delegates but those he knew were not his Sharp Snuffles and Joey Bagstock were pretty cute fellows on a small proposition but would have fallen down in a Baltimore convention

This blunder, with his refusal to say candidly where he stood in regard to things about which the people were not indifferent, if he was, worked his defeat, in our opinion

These things are not rehearsed here for any purpose of recrimination The object is to place the responsibility for Governor Harmon's defeat where it belongs. Bryan did not defeat him. Wilson did not. Judson Harmon did.

What may be learned is something that should have needed no learning—so well known is it. It is that the man who will not take the people into his confidence when he seeks to administer their affairs, but is found consorting with those whom they believe are their enemies, must not expect the people to put confidence in him when he asks them to.

When Governor went before the constitutional convention and made common cause with Foraker in asking the delegates to disobey the mandates of the voters who sent them there, and in which he had twice joined, he doubtless gained the good will of Ryan and Belmont. He should not have expected to get that and the confidence of the men of Ohio at the same time. And very clearly he did not.

The action of Tammany in throwing the vote of the New York delegation to Governor Harmon until it was plain his nomination was out of the question, is conclusive evidence that the estimate we have put upon his sympathies in regard to conservatism is correct He preferred Wall Street to the people Wall Street deserted him as soon as it saw he was no longer available for their purposes. The people would not have deserted him had he allowed them to be on his side

It is not hard to see with whom the responsibility for his defeat rests

It rests with him.—Akron Democrat

TAFT, THE CANDIDATE OF THE POLITICIANS.

William Howard Taft next fall will be the worst licked candidate for the presidency of the United States the country has ever known with the possible exception of Judge Alton B Parker in 1904

Steadfastly rejecting all proposals of compromise, pushing the steam roller mercilessly over the prostrate bodies of the merry crew marshaled by Roosevelt and La Follette and Cummins, studiously ignoring the rights of the common people in the Republican party, the promoters of the Taft interests at Chicago have nominated their man and probably have thereby destroyed the Republican party

Roosevelt from the first was impossible The uprising of progressive sentiment in the past few years has not been in response entirely to the Roosevelt personality nor to the Roosevelt appeal, although the beaten candidate must be given credit for having aroused to some extent the fighting spirit in the hearts of the people The towering majorities scored by Roosevelt over the president at the popular primaries should not be regarded as evidence that the people in the mass regarded the colonel as the man to lead them to the promised land The fact was that the spirit of revolt was already there—revolt against the trusts that have been sucking the life-blood of the masses, revolt against tariff conditions that make a millionaire of one man and a pauper of another, revolt against political tyranny of the powerful reactionary element as represented by the Smoots and the Penroses and the Gallingers and the Lorimers and the Cranes and all the rest of that long list of distinguished and extinguished gentry who for so long have held tenaciously to the reins of government. Roosevelt appeared the best means to an end and the people seized upon it.

Returns in the various states showed that far more than half of the Republican voters remained at home rather than vote for either Taft or the colonel That the finish of the Oyster Bay blusterer would soon come before the finely-organized machinery that was set in motion in Chicago was to have been expected, but regret should be felt, not for his downfall, but for the blow that has been suffered by popular government

The reactionaries at Chicago by their refusal to compromise have deliberately wrecked the Republican party They have forced the renomination of a man whose administration has been an utter failure and one who is utterly out of sympathy with the mass of the people They have placed a man at the head of their ticket who has listened all too willingly to the persuasive voice of the stand pat counsellor, who has vetoed every effort of a Democratic house to bring relief to the people by reducing the tariff, who has been vacillating when he should have been firm, and has been but wax in the hands of the enemies of popular government He was nominated by a convention the majority of which in no sense represented the will of the people Taft is the candidate of the politicians

---

Mr. Harmon couldn't get away with the stolen delegates.

---

They seem to be pulling the rollers under Senator Pomerene.

---

The Wilson delegates in Ohio insisted upon their right to stand for progress in the preliminary skirmish.

---

Mr. Harmon must be sorry he thought of the unit rule now.

---

Some Democrats who are criticizing Bryan for lack of harmony at Baltimore haven't a word of criticism for the methods of Murphy and the Wall Street gang.

---

The postmasters are beginning to climb down off the fence. The story that Taft was backed by the "federal nephews" was one of the shallowest charges of the campaign. For weeks and weeks in advance of the convention the average federal nephew went around on his hands and knees, too scared to admit that he had an opinion or even a snout of his own.

---

Those ministers and others who have been asking God to "bless the mayor for his efforts to keep the Sabbath holy" were conspicuous by their absence at the meeting of council Tuesday night. Evidently it does not concern them if the city is robbed of property rights, just so long as the horrible crime of selling soda water and cigars on Sunday is stopped.—Exchange

---

Speaker Clark's hurried trip to Baltimore in the vain hope of addressing the convention in reply to Mr Bryan's destructive attack upon him was a dramatic confession of weakness, and the later bulletins issued by him and his managers only deepened the impression that the "houn' dawg" from Pike county is a dead one. The whole country believes, and it correctly believes, that the Clark managers dickered with the Ryan-Belmont-Tammany interests to make Judge Parker temporary chairman and a deal like that is, in the politics of 1912, a blunder worse than a crime The country needs no better evidence of the alliance so fatal to Clark's candidacy than the passing of New York's 90 into the Clark column on the 10th ballot Its blighting effect is seen in the decline of the Clark total by nearly 100 votes in the next 16 ballots Bryan does not have to debate that situation with anybody It debates itself

---

What started th' fight? 'Twas th' same as at th' Republican convention 'Twas about th' tempry chairman Yo see, Willum Jennings Bryan says there's a man in New York with a fine old Irish name who provides timpry chairmen f'r all convintions iv ivry party Willum Jennings says he supplied th' very fine' lookin' timpry chairman f'r th 'Republican convintion He's in the' business on a big scale If ye want a timpry or permanent chairman f'r ye'r convintion, Republican, Dimmycrat, Prohibitionist, or Progressive, call on Mishter Ryan. Chairmen supplied on short notice f'r anny pollytickol or social gatherin'. Frock coats go with each wan. A large stock iv speakers of legislachures always on hand. Our platform department makes a specyalty iv th' cillybrated adjustable platform with patent removable planks. Skilled mechanics will be sint to convintions to assemble those to suit th' taste. No trouble to show goods."—Mr. Dooley on the Democratic Convention, in the Chicago Tribune, of June 25.

RANDOM THOUGHTS

By Tom, Dick and Harry.

Why is a dog? That's the question Tom-Dick-and-Harry would like to have answered right now What's bitin' me now is that Friday a doggone window mop of a frowsy cur came into my yard and killed a fine young chicken that was worth more than his whole woolly generation so far as any practical value is concerned One round dollar would not have bought the chick, and the cur is not worth two bits even for shoe strings or sausage—even at the present high price of meat The worst of it is that the kid who was with the purp at the time immediately, and with a wisdom born of the old sod, denied ownership, so there is no one from whom to collect damages.

---

In the defeat of Judge R M Wanamaker at the Republican state convention Tuesday, the Republicans in control of the party in this state showed just what is the matter with them. They are not in touch with what the people want.

Section 96 of the codified ordinance of the village of Fairport be amended and supplemented to read as follows:

Section 96. It shall be unlawful for any person, other than a village contractor, village officer, or employe in the regular course of his business or employment, to dig up, remove or carry away, or cause the same to be done, any stone, earth, sand or ground from any street, alley or public ground in said village or make any opening or excavation in any street, alley or public ground without first obtaining from the Mayor, or in his absence the Clerk, of said village as hereinafter provided, a permit so to do.

Sec. 96A. Any person desiring to make any opening or excavation in any street, alley or public ground of said village shall make written or printed application to the Mayor, or in his absence, the Clerk, which shall specify the location, size and purpose of the opening or excavation to be made. Upon the making of such application, the applicant shall deposit with the Mayor or Clerk the sum of two ($2.00) dollars to insure said opening or excavation being properly refilled and said street, alley or public ground being restored to its former condition of repair and usefulness. Thereupon the Mayor or Clerk shall issue a permit to make such opening or excavation which permit shall contain a stipulation that the person to whom the same is issued shall indemnify and save harmless said village from loss or claim for damages because of any act or omission of the holder of said permit in doing the work authorized to be done. It shall be the duty of the holder of said permit to properly guard and light any opening or excavation made under such permit. When the holder of such permit is ready to refill such opening or excavation he shall notify the commissioner of streets whose duty it shall be to inspect the filling of such opening or excavation. If the commissioner of streets finds that such opening or excavation has been properly filled and said street, alley or public ground restored to its former condition of usefulness and repair he shall so certify upon such permit and sign the same. Upon the return of such permit with said endorsement thereon by the person to whom it was issued he shall be entitled to receive said sum of two ($2.00) dollars deposited to secure the same.

Sec. 96B. The Mayor or Clerk issuing such permit shall be entitled to receive therefore a fee of Twenty-five cents from the person securing the same.

Sec. 96C. Any person violating any provision of section 96 hereof shall be guilty of a misdemeanor and upon conviction shall be fined in any sum not exceeding fifty dollars.

Sec. 2. Said original section 96 of the codified ordinances of said village as codified and passed Nov. [illegible], be and the same is hereby repealed.

Sec. 3. This ordinance shall be in force and take effect from and after its passage and legal publication.

Passed June 27, 1912.
AUGUST WOLFF, Mayor.
Attest:
J. O. KOSKI, Clerk.

Directors Who Direct

IN recent years the public has learned to view the responsibility of directors in a new light. As a result, the expression "Directors who Direct" has become a hackneyed phrase. Directors of the highest ability are of little use to a bank if, through neglect of their duties, the bank is unable to reap the benefits of their talent.

Nearly all the directors of The Cleveland Trust Company attend meetings twice each week, at which all matters of importance are brought to their attention.

MENTOR.

The weather has been perfectly beautiful most of this past week, and those of our people who "just love hot weather—the hotter the better" have been quite satisfied, and have gone around with faces wreathed in smiles. Some have even been heard to say "If only it could last for the next eleven months or so, how glad we'd be!"

Mrs. Florence Woodford Northcote has bought a lot on Hart St., near the telephone exchange and is about to erect a bungalow for herself and her widowed sister, Mrs Higgins. All the friends of these ladies are glad to hear that they have decided to stay right at home, instead of going out to their relatives on the Pacific coast, as has been the talk.

Mrs Nettie Kerr Baxter has moved into a part of Miss Corning's house at the Center, where she is splendidly fixed in every sense of the word, and among her friends.

Mrs Jane Lawrence has finished her visit here and among her old friends in Burton, and has returned to her Pennsylvania home.

The many friends of Prof Harry Garfield have been much distressed to learn that he has been very ill with appendicitis and has just come out of the hospital after an operation Mr. Garfield and family are expecting to return to their summer home here for the remaining portion of the vacation, just as soon as he is able to travel.

Dr. Mussen who was here a short time, who made many friends while here, and who left Mentor simply because it was too healthy a place for three physicians to be kept busy, has since located in Hudson, we are told, and is rejoicing over the advent of a small son

Co Spaulding had a visit from his Munson brother, Mr E P Spaulding, a few days ago.

Mr and Mrs Edgar Dunham are enjoying a visit from their sister, Miss Mary Dunham, whose home is in Cleveland

Mrs. Anna Canfield Patchen of Chardon, was a recent guest of her uncle, Mr Franklin Murray

Word has come to the friends here of the safe arrival at their destination of Mrs Albert Hanson and her little daughter Elizabeth, who are to make their home for the present at Winnipeg, Canada The friends are anxiously waiting to hear the impressions of Mr and Mrs Hanson, concerning the Dominion and whether the great opportunities advertised there, are really as great as supposed

Mrs Frank Corning, accompanied by her youngest daughter, Mrs John Code, visited with Willoughby friends a portion of last week

Mrs T G Hart and Mrs T D. Morley spent the day on Friday over in Kirtland with Mrs Russell and other friends

Mr and Mrs Martin Hopkins are with friends in Michigan at date, but will visit in Mentor later on in the summer

Mr Ransome Doane has again been quite sick, and really there are more who "feel just miserable" than at any time during the summer, that we have ever heard of. In winter of course, one expects to "enjoy poor health," but in summer—one feels doubly injured to have any aches and pains hanging 'round

Mr Lyman Bean, the young gentleman from Burton who has set up in the ice cream business has added a soda fountain to his outfit.

Mr. Ryder is kept quite busy these days lowering Mentor heels, both of the ladies and gentlemen's shoes.

While speaking of the industries around the Center, one must make mention of the fact that hardly a day passes that some automobile does not drive in to get Claude Dean the Center Blacksmith, to or other about his machine

Instead of every woman in the village having to send her leaky pans down to Mr. Marsh to get mended, she has now found out that Ed Swain at the Center hardware store can do just as good a job, and so save some steps this hot weather.

Another of our boys is turning all his attention towards the study of electricity, and is now working for the Hale Electrical Co. in the city, hoping to take the full electrical course at Case School later on. We refer to Pardee Sawyer, who graduated at the Painesville High school last month, and who already has shown considerable ability along his chosen line

Mr. L B Clark, the young minister who is to have charge of the Disciple church here, and who has just graduated from Hiram college, is away on a wedding trip just now, and the pulpit will be supplied until his return by Mr. Stevenson of Hiram.

Miss Louise Upham is over in Kirtland at date, with friends for a while

Mr Wallace Dickey of Chicago, has been a recent guest of his sister, Mrs Helen Dickey Hlish, and of his niece here

Mrs Church of Lorain, this state, is again a visitor at the home of her son, Mr Charles Church, for a few days

Mrs Jeannie Pratt Dostwick has just been entertaining her husband's niece, Miss Annie Saunder, of Toledo and Mrs. Hoff of Cleveland, for a number of days.

Mr. and Mrs. Hart Mynderse attended the Carroll reunion over in Chardon last week, Mrs. Mynderse being a pupil of Mr. Carroll when she was a girl and known as Miss Louise Woodruff, of Chardon.

Mrs. Alice Lawrence Dickey has been entertaining Mr. and Mrs. Darwin Allen of Kinsman, this state, recently.

Mrs. Jackett, among others is on the sick list

Miss Agnes Hawkins of Cleveland, was the guest of her friend, Miss Eva Smith, over the Sabbath.

Mr. and Mrs. Charles Rexford and children are down here at their mother's home for a few weeks, to get away from Cleveland heat.

H. C. King is shipping some very fine cherry currants from his fruit farm Southwood, everything going up to Chandler & Rudd's

Friends of the Doty family, who for many years made their home here, were sorry to learn of the death of Mr. Fred Fay, the husband of Miss Jessie Doty, even though he was not well known by many of our people The body of Mr. Fay was brought to Painesville for burial, he having died in New York City, and several friends from here attended the burial service

Mrs Henry Merkle and small son of Cleveland, were down for a few days last week and the week before

Mrs Burton Smith, accompanied by her son, B. W. Smith, have been spending a few days with Toledo friends

Mr Schaffer gave a kind of "Fourth of July" sermon on Sunday, and the choir delighted the audience in the evening with another of their song services, which it is expected will be continued during the summer, the first Sunday evening in each month

All those villagers who turn away the Salvation Army lassie when she comes on an occasional Saturday and refuse (sometimes rather crossly) to buy a War Cry, should read Harold Begbie's "Twice Born Men" in order to fully understand what the "Army" is doing for humanity

Mr and Mrs P B. Schaffer received their friends Dr and Mrs Fugate of Du Bois, Pa., one day last week while they were on their way to Michigan.

Miss Marie Carroll of Willoughby, has been a recent guest of Mrs Jackett, she being a friend of the daughter of the house, Miss Cecil McFarland

Mr and Mrs Will Sawyer are about to move into their new possessions, having recently bought the pretty cottage on Center street, owned by Harvey Yager.

A number of the relatives from here attended the funeral of Miss Frances Kerr at Painesville, many others remembering her as a kind and accommodating business woman, and a very lovely person to meet in a social way, as well as a Christian lady whose example was always good.

Miss May Pierce has just closed her millinery parlors for the summer, and having met with success, expects to open them again for the fall and winter trade.

Mr. and Mrs. Maurice Rosenthal are spending a few days with friends in Erie, Pa.

Mrs. Harlow Dille and little daughter of Painesville, were out here over Sunday with her mother, Mrs. Jackson.

Miss Dana Church had a most delightful little birthday party on Saturday, the occasion being her tenth birthday.

The beautiful homestead called "Echo Hill Farm," just south of the avenue half a mile or so, is for sale, as is also the farm of Mr. Wilt Kerr on Mentor avenue at stop 59. All the little places are picked up very quickly, but in order to get possession of one of these desirable country places, one will have to go down deeply into his pocket, but they are both well worth more money than is being asked, and somebody is going to get a bargain

Mr George Hicks of Adrian, Mich was in our village over Sunday with Harry King and others of his wife's relatives

Mr James R Garfield returned on Sunday morning for a few hours' rest at his home "Holly Croft," but was obliged to leave again today on business

The Misses Antoinette and Eleanor King were guests of Mrs Eliza Clapp Glasier in Cleveland, over Sunday in order to celebrate two birthdays that come conveniently near

If you are a housewife you cannot reasonably hope to be healthy or beautiful by washing dishes, sweeping and doing housework all day, and crawling into bed dead tired at night You must get out into the open air and sunlight. If you do this every day and keep your stomach and bowels in good order by taking Chamberlain's Tablets when needed, you should become both healthy and beautiful. For sale by all druggists.

TEACHERS' EXAMINATION

The Lake County board of examiners will offer examinations for teachers' certificates on the first Saturday of each month in the year 1912. If first Saturday falls on holiday, examinations will be held one week later. Boxwell pupils will be examined the third Saturday in April and the third Saturday in May, 1912. All examinations will be held in the old High School building, Painesville, beginning at 8:15 standard time.
By order of the board.

Woman Suffrage Column

By Miss Lucy Buell

"Conditions in Ohio," declares Judge Littleford, president of the Cincinnati Men's League for Woman Suffrage, "are similar to those that existed in California just prior to the State's granting the franchise to women. Most Californians were surprised to see the move successful. Ohioans will be similarly surprised. We will have a fight of course, but women will vote in Ohio after January 1, 1913, just as surely as they are now voting in California."

---

Zona Gale, the well-known Wisconsin author, who spent the winter in California, writes in the Woman's Bulletin as follows. "I wish that every man who is ever to vote on constitutional amendments which shall extend the franchise to women might go to California before he votes. For it seems to me that he must come away with one of the things that make for citizenship, a wide, new sense of justice And that he must come away, too, with one of the things that make for humanity, a better understanding of the nature of all the human race."

---

Here is the definition of an anti-suffragist: A lady who goes into politics to keep other ladies out. In Oregon, where opponents of votes for women have come all the way from New York to work against the suffrage amendment, they define an anti as, A lady who travels 3,000 miles from home to prove that "Woman's Sphere is the Home."

---

Cleveland has just been the scene of a most interesting gathering of men and women who represented the National Conference of Charities and Corrections

Of the 1309 members who registered at the Cleveland meetings, 654 were women, 649 men and six were organizations. Of the individual members, therefore, the women were more than half. Of the total membership, including those in all parts of the country who could not come to Cleveland, the proportion of women is even greater, much greater, probably, for often in philanthropic work men and women do not receive equal pay, and the expense of attending a conference would be much more relatively, to the women than the men

Social work is women's work, so far as numbers go. They are in executive positions, are responsible for raising money, are head of many large organizations, and they are members of public and private boards of control The most sought-for speaker in the conference is a woman—Jane Addams, who is among its ex-presidents and is a leading suffragist.

These women who are doing yeoman service for humanity are mostly suffragists (the male members are, too, for that matter). An informal canvas of different groups showed a strong feeling that women who are evidently wise enough and strong enough and intelligent enough to do charity work, are qualified to vote on measures for preventing poverty and sickness and inefficiency

These women realize that without the vote they have no interest whatever before legislative bodies.

For them, votes for women will be votes for the big, constructive, vital things that the National Conference of Charities and Correction came to Cleveland to thresh out.
